not to be submitted separately, and they relate to this question alone. Now let gentlemen be honest and let us see what is the real reason why a separate admission of this question is asked. Who wants this question separately submitted to the people? Who is it? Is there any gentleman here who will pretend that the great feeling among the people is founded entirely or mostly on treason? Is there any gentleman here who does not know that the feeling among the people, so far as it is expressed, is founded rather and mostly upon the prejudice that we all have, and that we cannot help having, and that is the feeling as against color? Is not that the real foundation for it? I submit it to the gentleman's knowledge of the people as he finds them at home. In regard to this proposition, I find those who are opposed to the colored man voting, in one party as well as in another. I find them on both sides; although I find on one side an entire class, I refer to the foreign Irish voters, who almost to a man oppose it. We cannot help it. That is their opinion, but the reason for it, I think, can be got at. They have that feeling. They have a fear, somehow, of the colored man, and they think they retain some advantage over him when they deprive him of the right of voting. This is a fact, we cannot help it. What do they want? They want this simple question taken by itself where they can get a chance to express their opinion about it, where they can get a chance to exercise and carry out their feelings without any danger of interfering with anything else. This is what they want. They want, in common parlance, as most of them would say, to kick the nigger without hurting or having a chance to hurt anything else. That is what they want. All I have to say in regard to that, is this, if I am to give a chance to any person or class of persons, to express their separate opinions on any subject, I prefer to give this extra privilege to those men whose opinion, thus expressed, will be founded on judgment and on reason. If we refuse to the people of the State of New York the right to state their opinions separately upon the question of judiciary and upon the question of canals, upon which they will act with reason and sense—if we refuse to give them that privilege (and they are more entitled to have it than they are this) I cannot then consent and give these men, who follow their prejudice, this extra privilege to exercise it separately. No, sir. If we are to make any choice, or have anything to do with it, we should so decide it and determine that we shall give the extra privilege of separate submission to those who will exercise it honestly and upon sound judgment rather than give it to those who will exercise it in accordance with and actuated by their prejudice. For this reason I am not in favor of taking this question, and giving it an extra preference and submitting it by itself. There is another reason. The form that this resolution takes, I claim, is a cheat upon the people, and it is fully illustrated by what happened upon this floor. The honorable gentleman from Brooklyn [Mr. Murphy] states that as a delegate and as a man, he does not believe that the property qualification ought to be applied, and yet as a delegate, he wants to send down to himself with others as a citizen that question and he will vote for it. That is the indication. Now that is rather strange. He does not send down the question that he votes upon at all. He votes because he believes that the colored men as a class ought not to vote, and because he cannot exclude the whole class, he will exclude as many as he can. Thus to accomplish this partial purpose he votes for a principle he admits on this floor to be wrong. Let us look at it when we get it down to the people. Let us see who will vote for it and who will vote against it. In the first place you will have those who vote against it on account of prejudice. Second, those who vote against it because they honestly believe the colored race ought not to vote, and in the third place you will have those men voting against it that honestly believe in the property qualification. Such a man says "I believe the property qualification ought to be applied as well to white and black." And as I cannot vote to apply it to all believing in the principle, I must apply it as I can, and hence he will apply it to the black man. Let it be remembered that such a man claims that this Convention should send down separately the broad question of property qualification as applied to all, and let the people pass upon it. It is an extra privilege, and you deny it to him. But you send down the property qualification as to blacks, and he says "if I cannot get this privilege as regards the proposition (which I believe in applying to both the white and black), I will apply it as far as I can." And he, therefore, votes to exclude the black man simply on the ground that he believes in property qualification. If there is any extra privilege to be shown, should it be shown to such persons for the purpose of allowing them the better opportunity of depriving a weaker race of the right of the ballot, and who have, as I claim, a natural right, prima facie, and in fact to the ballot. Shall we send down this question in such a form that it combines against this race these three classes of men, all acting from directly opposite reasons? I am not in favor of so presenting a question. I believe when an issue is to be framed for any purpose, it should be framed fairly, so that at least the weaker class shall not have combined against it a great many of the stronger class, just by the mode of forming the issue, and for that reason I am not willing that this question should be sent down. It has been suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Colahan], if there is any question to go down, let it be a fair, open, direct question; let it be the broad question "shall the colored man vote?" Let that go down. If any question is to be submitted it would be much more just, but will any gentleman here send it down? Will any gentleman here pretend that the people of the State of New York are going back, are going to deny to this class a right which has been granted it from the foundation of the State. Do they propose to send that down? We might just as well send down the question whether we should return to monarchy. I take it upon the question of the exclusion of the colored race, as a race; the will of the people has been so long expressed that although we have a prejudice against them no person would propose it with any expectation of success, and so I take it in regard to the property qualification. I take it that even if we should submit either of the two questions there would be a large majority in favor of abolishing the restrictions, but as I said before, let us be honest to ourselves. Let us, if we send down any question, send it down fair and square, so that it will be a fair test, and will not combine those elements that are opposite to one another for the purpose of depriving this race of its rights, and as it is clear that we will not thus present the question in a fair form, let us not send the question in the unfair and unjust form now proposed. But the great question which I wish answered, and which I have not heard answered, is, as I stated in the first place, that this Convention if it act honestly to itself, has no right to send down to the people anything that it does not itself justify. It was never done yet. The Convention of 1846 did not do it. Every single Legislature that has passed upon a question passed upon it because they believed it to be right, and let us do the same. Let us not show ourselves guilty of sending to the people what we ourselves do not approve, as representatives of the people.

Mr. HAND—I move that the committee now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Hand, and it was lost.

Mr. SILVESTER—I had not originally intended to take up the time of this committee at all with respect to this subject. But as the discussion has taken so wide a range, I feel it my duty to submit a few remarks to the committee, and will endeavor not to trespass on their attention any longer than is necessary. I shall not, sir, undertake to discuss the question whether the elective franchise be a right or a privilege. I adopt in the widest sense the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, that every man is entitled to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and that government rests upon the consent of the governed. But I also hold that to a certain extent, society possesses the power to regulate the manner in which that life shall be enjoyed, the extent to which that liberty shall be exercised, the method in which that pursuit shall be conducted by its own members. Every individual upon his entrance into society, relinquishes a certain share of inherent, indisputable right in order that he may preserve the residue. This is essential for the permanent protection of rights in society; and hence an eminent jurist has characterized political liberty as no other than natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws as is necessary for the general advantage of the community; and hence in my opinion, it results that as the elective franchise is to be exercised in society and by the individual as a member of society, it can be regulated by society. And this view, is substantiated by an opinion which was delivered in the Supreme Court of the United States in a case which was cited by the gentleman from Alleghany [Mr. Champlain] a few days since with reference to a different question in which Judge Washington enumerates among the privileges of the citizens of the United States, the right to exercise the elective franchise as regulated by the laws or Constitution of the State in which it is to, be exercised. Thus clearly sustaining the position that whether the elective franchise be a right or a privilege as it is to be exercised in society, it can be regulated by the laws and Constitution of the State in which it is to be exercised. Now sir, entertaining this view, the only practical question as it seems to me to be considered by the committee, is this. How far is it expedient for this Convention, composed of delegates chosen by the electors of the State of New York to remodel the organic law, to restrict or regulate or extend the privilege or the right of suffrage, and what is the proper basis upon which this restriction or regulation or extension shall be founded? And in my view, the proper basis is that which was stated so lucidly by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] on Saturday last, and which I shall not, therefore, occupy the time of this committee with discussing. I am, therefore, decidedly opposed to the amendment which has been introduced by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. I am opposed to it, as seeking to apply a test to one class of our citizens which it does not seek to apply to any other class. I am opposed to it, as seeking to impose a property qualification upon one class of the citizens of this State, while not seeking to impose any such qualification upon any other class; and whatever qualification may be required for the exercise of the elective franchise should be impartial and equal in its operation upon every class of citizens. Our fathers laid broad and deep the foundations of the government upon the great eternal idea of the nobility of man as man, and it is our duty in this day to act in accordance with their ideas and to reduce to practice the doctrines which they then enunciated. The day for any class legislation has passed. The time for exclusive privilege has departed. The question as has been stated by my colleague is not whether in this State the black man shall be permitted to vote. That, as has been already stated by several other gentlemen, has been accorded to him ever since the organization of the State. But it is simply whether the property qualification is to be retained, and whether we are willing to place ourselves on record in this age as advocating the opinion that the man who to-day is not fit to vote, whose exercise of the elective franchise in the language of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] is morally and socially wrong and tends to destroy the fair fabric of our democratic institutions, to-morrow becomes possessed of all the civic virtues; because through the caprice of fortune, or by the gift of some politician desirous of securing his vote, he has acquired a freehold of the value of two hundred and fifty dollars. That is the single and simple question that is presented. It is not a question as to his right to vote, but a question whether an odious property qualification, the relic of a past age, shall be retained in the Constitution framed by the delegates of the electors of the State of New York in 1867. In Europe, a short time since, when it was proposed to unite various States of Italy under one government, previous to Victor Emanuel's ascending the throne of Italy, the question whether very many of those provinces would submit to his control was sent to the citizens of those provinces, to be decided by them at the ballot-box. When a difficulty recently occurred between France and Prussia as to certain territory on the confines of France, it was proposed, at one time, to submit the question to the citizens of that territory, to be decided by them in the exercise of the elective franchise. The Prussian House of Lords has just accepted the Constitution of the North German Confederation, notwithstanding its provision for universal suffrage. In Great Britain, under the influence of reform and constant popular agitation, the elective franchise has been constantly extended until public opinion is now rapidly advancing to that point when not only household suffrage, but manhood suffrage and the ballot will be demanded and accorded. In the light of all this progress which is taking place in Europe, in governments monarchical in form, and in many instances despotic in the extreme in practice—are we here in the Empire State of New York to insist on retaining in the Constitution as an essential of the exercise of the greatest right of citizenship, a qualification which is a relic and a child of Federalism? I am not now discussing the propriety of a qualification of any kind being under any circumstances and under any contingencies required of an elector. But I am opposed entirely to the qualification which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] would seek to impose. Of all qualifications, a pecuniary qualification is in many respects the most unreliable and unsatisfactory, and the qualification which he proposes to place in the Constitution is the most unsatisfactory, as has been shown by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] of any pecuniary qualification, which could be inserted in that instrument. It is judging an individual by his means and not by his mind, by what he has, not by what he is, by his possessions and not by himself. I am aware that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], disclaimed the idea that he was seeking to impose a property qualification, and asserted that he was himself opposed to such qualification. But his proposition results in nothing less than inserting a property qualification in the document which he proposes to submit to the people for their ratification. It places it in the body of the Constitution, and it goes forth to the people as our opinion of what is the proper qualification to be required of a certain class of electors, and then it permits the people, if they choose to do so, to expunge this proposition, and to amend the Constitution which we have formed and submitted to them. But, sir, I congratulate the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] upon the advance which he has made since 1846, for he was a member of that Convention, and I cannot find, in any of the proceedings during the whole of the discussions of that body, that his voice was ever raised, or his vote ever recorded in opposition to placing in that Constitution a property qualification, which has always been opposed by the friends of liberal progress throughout the world. But he alleges that his object is that the proposition may be submitted separately, and that the people of the State may thus have an opportunity to decide fairly and fully what their opinion is with respect to this question. I do not propose at this time to enter upon any discussion of the propriety of a separate submission of this or any other clause of the Constitution. It has seemed to me from the very first that the whole discussion was premature, that we have yet nothing to submit. When this Constitution has been framed in all its parts, when the various committees have presented their reports, when these reports have been discussed in the Committee of the Whole, and when this framework of the Constitution has been fitted together, then, I presume, this Convention will act in accordance with the course adopted by the Conventions of 1821 and 1846, and that a Committee of Revision will be constituted which will review all the subjects which have been discussed, all the different amendments which have been proposed, will arrange and classify them, and then the Convention will deliberate upon the question as to the proper mode for the submission of that Constitution. I contend, therefore, that the question of separate submission cannot now be properly considered, and that this whole discussion has been premature. The question now is what Constitution shall we frame, what clauses shall it contain. Hereafter will be the time for us to discuss how that Constitution is to be submitted, whether together or in separate parts. But, sir, what are the reasons which have been urged for a separate submission? and what has been the reason urged by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] for placing in the Constitution a property qualification? The only reason that he alleged was that this was the course pursued by the Convention of 1846; and because it was pursued by that Convention in a Constitution which they framed in 1846, and because they submitted the proposition separately, he alleges that we, in the year 1867, should be guided by their action. I am of the opinion that we were not sent here merely to copy the example of the Convention of 1846. However distinguished may have been that Convention, however illustrious the gentlemen who composed it, however patriotic, and however admirably fitted their work may have proved itself for the government and guidance of the State then and as it was then organized, we are not to follow the course which they adopted unless it is adapted and fitted for the present time. The very fact that we are here in this hall shows that the people desire changes to be made in that Constitution, and are of the opinion that an instrument suited to the wants of the age should now be framed, and that we should not follow in every respect the Constitution of 1846. When Anna Cora Mowatt was in England, and was commencing her career as an actress in that country, which resulted in such a grand success, before she had achieved distinction in that kingdom, she appeared one evening in the Princess' Theatre in London. Previous to her appearance in the evening, it was necessary that there should be a rehearsal in the morning by the different members of the dramatic corps. During the rehearsal she attempted to exercise her right as a star actress and to direct the manner in which the rehearsal should be conducted. She designated to the different persons who were occupying the stage, the proper positions which they should assume, at which wing they should depart and at which enter, and as she was giving her directions, she was constantly met with the annoying response, "I played this character with Mrs. Butler; she gave me different directions." "I played this role with Mrs. Kean, and her directions were entirely opposite to yours." "I had the honor of appearing in this play with Miss Faucit, and she directed me to enter and depart from the stage in a manner different from that in which you are now directing me to do so." At last, irritated and galled by these resistances to her will, she at length announced "her declaration of independence" as she herself terms it, and said to those actors and actresses who were refusing to obey her directions. "When I make up my mind to be simply the imitator of Mrs. Butler or Mrs. Kean, or Miss Faucit, I will come to you for my instructions, but until then I will not." So I think we may say to gentlemen, who on this floor argue that we are to act in a certain manner and to frame a Constitution after a certain pattern, simply because the Convention of 1846 did so. "When we make up our minds to be simply the imitators of the Convention of 1846, then we will go to that Convention for our instructions." The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has also said that we should follow precedent in that matter—that we should follow precedent because it is a safe course of action so to do. I have great respect for precedent; but if the gentleman should go further back in the history of precedent than the year 1846, to the records of the Convention of 1821, I think he would find that the question of the adoption of the Constitution then framed was then submitted altogether and not separately. If I am not entirely mistaken, that was the course pursued in 1821. I yield to no one in reverence for antiquity. I reverence its learning, its wisdom, its works of art, its literature, its poetry, its noble examples. But I recognize the fact that there is also a living, breathing, vital present and that it is in respect to the demands and necessities of that present that we are called to act. We have made great advances since 1846. It was then considered as a great mark of progress that there was a daily steamboat from Albany to New York by which intelligence of the deliberations at the capital could be carried to the commercial metropolis. Now the proceedings of this Convention are each day transmitted by telegraph to every part of the State as soon as its session has been brought to a close. We have advanced materially; we have advanced physically; we have advanced philanthropically. Are we to be met with the assertion that the only thing in which we have not advanced is in respect to the science of government? It is hardly in accordance with American ideas and sentiments to be guided so exclusively by the past. Those individuals who are so constantly referring to the past as the only reason for a particular course of action, remind me of an anecdote which, with the permission of the Convention, I will relate. An old lady had a china teapot for which she had a great affection. It had belonged to her mother, her grandmother and her great-grandmother, and she had never been willing to use any other. One day the handle was broken off, but she still continued its use.

and declared that out of no other teapot would she ever drink tea. Then what she called the "snuzzle" was broken, and though her attention was called to this defect, she insisted upon continuing its use. Finally the bottom fell out, and then the question was asked of her out of what teapot she would now drink tea, and she replied: "It was my mother's teapot, my grandmother's teapot, my great grandmother's teapot, and though the handle is broken, the snuzzle is gone, and the bottom has fallen out, out of no other teapot will I ever drink tea." Now, sir, to pass to another subject. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] who addressed us on Saturday last, undertook to diminish the importance of this subject, and to place the question of finance and internal commerce in this State above the question of human rights. He said that the question of the financial policy of this State, the debt of this State, the canals of this State and the internal commerce of this State, were questions vastly superior to the question of the elective franchise and of the rights of the citizen. I, sir, do not so understand political economy. I consider human rights higher than questions of finance, higher than questions of policy, higher than questions of internal commerce; and that in framing a Constitution under which the State for many years is to be regulated, and under which it is to be governed, one of the greatest questions which can occupy the attention of a Convention, is the question, which is fundamental, who are to exercise the great sovereign rights of citizens, and what are the regulations and rules upon which those rights and privileges are to be exercised? There are some other remarks, sir, which were made by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] which I would like to consider, but I will now not detain the committee to do so. But while disapproving entirely of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], there are several clauses in the amendment proposed by the report of the committee, which I cannot support. And first, sir, I cannot support that clause which proposes to disfranchise what it terms the paupers of the State. I agree with what is said by the committee with respect to the necessity of preserving the purity of the ballot box. I admit that the regulation of the elective franchise and the endeavoring to preserve it in its purity, is one of the great safeguards of republican institutions; and I admit the force of the arguments which have been urged by gentleman here, that it was entirely wrong that where electors in the western part of the State had conscientiously and intelligently deposited their votes in the ballot box; those intelligent and conscientious votes should be overwhelmed entirely by the votes of individuals who had not bestowed any attention upon the subject under discussion. I would, at one time, have been willing to sustain the proposition of the committee, if it might have been restricted to persons who at the time of the election, or immediately preceding the election, were inmates of any public almshouse, but I am convinced that even that restriction could not be made to operate justly and equitably. It may fall to the lot of the best citizen in the land, through reverses, to be placed in that unfortunate condition. The gentleman who addressed this body a day or two since instanced an example of a citizen in his county who once occupied an honorable position in the Legislature of this State, who was well versed in the economy of both political and social life. Yet he had been reduced by misfortune to the necessity of accepting an asylum in the almshouse. Would you disfranchise such an individual? But, sir, if you attempt to disfranchise those who are at the time actually in the almshouse, and those who are actually public paupers in the strictest sense of the term; the restriction can easily be avoided, any prominent politician can furnish the means, or his party can furnish the means, to transport for the time being those so called paupers out of the almshouse, and thus give them the elective franchise in order that they may vote at the ensuing election. I am, therefore, decidedly opposed to that clause of the report of the committee which would seek to disfranchise what it terms the paupers, and I am also opposed to the clause which would seek to change the Constitution as it now stands by requiring citizenship for thirty days instead of ten days as a condition for exercising the elective franchise. As an original question I might support the requirement of thirty days' citizenship previous to depositing a ballot, but as it will operate injuriously to many of those who have already declared their intention to become citizens, I, sir, cannot give that clause my support. If it is altered so as to be prospective in its character and applicable only to those who shall hereafter declare their intentions, and thus not operate injuriously upon the large class of our fellow citizens of foreign birth who have already taken the preliminary steps to become electors, then I will not oppose it; as it now stands, and as it will operate injuriously upon foreigners who have declared their intentions to become citizens, I shall be obliged to oppose it. The proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], it seems to me meets many of the objections which have been urged and is entirely preferable to the amendments introduced by the committee. That substitute has the advantage of being in the present Constitution; but not simply because it is in that Constitution would I support it, but because first there is no necessity for any change in the phraseology of that section of the present Constitution, otherwise than with respect to the property qualification. And again, sir, the words of that section have received, as far as possible, judicial construction, and where we can retain any part of the instrument which has been judicially construed, and thus not open a new question for discussion, I think it advisable to do so. I would desire that there should be annexed to the substitute a more stringent qualification with respect to illegal voting. I would even go so far as perhaps to follow the suggestion made in one of the daily papers this morning, that where illegal and fraudulent votes had been polled, and that fact had been made manifest, such election should be rendered null and void. Before closing my remarks, I desire for a moment to refer to an allusion made by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] a few days since in respect to what he termed "the better days of the republic." He described those as the better days in which an inhabitant of this land, of foreign descent in the prison of a foreign government had been protected by the flag of the United States, and his rights had been defended by a man-of-war belonging to the United States. I admit, that that one act of that administration, was proper and right; it was truly an American act, and one of which every American is proud. Wherever the flag of the United States floats, whether on the land or on the sea, it should protect every citizen. But I cannot agree with that gentleman that those times as a whole were the better days of the republic. If my memory serves me right those were the days when our citizens, over the length and breadth of this land, were not all equally protected; when four millions of human beings were kept in bondage; when in the halls of the Congress of the United States the doctrines of secession and disunion were openly preached; when the administration then in power, and that which succeeded it, did not make any attempt to repress those doctrines, either by force or by argument. Those were the times when a Senator of the United States was attacked in his place in the capitol, because he had dared to speak disrespectfully of the "peculiar institution," and when journals at the north could apologize for the act. I differ, sir, with the gentleman as to those being the better days of the republic. I consider these are the better days, these, in which over the length and breadth of our land the flag of the United States floats over a nation of freemen; these, when the doctrine of secession and rebellion has been defeated on the field of battle; these, when not only on foreign soil and foreign seas, the flag of the United States protects its citizens, but when it protects the citizen of the United States in South Carolina equally as well as in Massachusetts, in the city of Charleston as in the city of Boston. These I consider to be the better days of the republic, when, after a contest more terrible than any which the world has ever witnessed, the stars and bars of the rebel confederacy finally went down before the stars and stripes of the great republic. These are the better days in which, after having passed through the terrible ordeal of the late contest, peace once more is ours, not by any disgraceful compromise with treason, not by any concession to traitors, but by the complete overthrow of the armies of the rebellion and their unconditional surrender to the authority of the United States. These, in my judgment, are the better and more glorious days of the republic.

Mr. VEEDER—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Veeder, and it was declared to be lost.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Murphy, and the affirmative vote taken.

Mr. FOLGER—I call for a division of the question.

Mr. VERPLANCK—It seems to me, sir, it is hardly fair for the majority, we having already been here from 11 o'clock until 2, and then from 4 until 8, to press a vote on this question at the present time. Several members are sick, and many have left the Convention, and I submit whether it is a proper time to take the question.

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order. I wish to know on what question the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck] is speaking.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I am speaking to the magnanimity of this body if there be any such thing, and against pressing this question to vote now. I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman, that is not a motion which can be made in Committee.

Mr. VERPLANCK—Would it be improper to make the motion that the Committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair thinks it is entirely proper to make that motion.

Mr. VERPLANCK—Then sir, I move that the Committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BICKFORD—I rise to a point of order—the Chairman had put the question on the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and the affirmative was already taken.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] that the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] called for a division of the question, and since that time business has intervened, and therefore the motion of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck] is entirely tenable.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—It has been so long since this amendment was read, and so much has been said, to which perhaps I have not been a very attentive listener, that I have not a very clear idea of the two propositions; I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN—That is not the question now before the committee, the question now is on the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I ask the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck] to withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I will do so.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I move, sir, that the Chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage make the speech which he desires to make in closing the debate, and that upon closing his speech the gentleman of Westchester have the right to demand that the debate shall be closed.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion that such a motion cannot be entertained in the committee.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I renew the motion that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Verplanck, and it was declared lost.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire only to state to the gentlemen who are in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], that they will have a full and fair opportunity for a vote, when we come to take the question upon agreeing with the report of the committee in the Convention; so that it will make no difference as to what is decided on in the committee.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I had supposed that in the absence of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] who moved this amendment, and when so many others are absent, the majority would not press a vote on this question.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I rise to a point of order, I would like to know what motion is pending now?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the motion on the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], is pending.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I did not intend to discuss the question, but in the absence of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] I desire to say a few words. The amendment proposed by that gentleman has not been fairly stated before this Committee. In what position did the gentleman from Kings find the colored population of this State when he made the amendment. He found that there was a class of colored citizens entitled to vote, and he supposed that the members of this Convention who claim to be the peculiar friends of the negro race would not consent to let the colored men who now have the privilege of voting be disfranchised. What is his amendment? His amendment is simply that it should be separately submitted to the electors whether the rest of the colored citizens should be authorized to vote. He does not ask this Convention to disfranchise those who are now entitled to vote. But the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester], and other gentlemen who have discussed this question, have claimed that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] and the democratic party proposed to keep up the property test for colored men. No such thing is proposed. Now I do not intend to discuss the origin of society, nor how society or civil government originated. It is enough for me to know that in this State we have a civil government. It is that civil government which always determines the right of suffrage, and no other power can determine it. The civil government of this State confers the right of suffrage upon all male citizens of the age of twenty-one; it withholds it from citizens who are under twenty-one; from women and from certain colored citizens. The colored citizen is represented, and all his rights are respected and cared for, the same as the rights of minors and the rights of women; but for prudential reasons the civil government denies the right of suffrage to minors and women, and a certain class of colored men. Another class of colored men have this right under certain qualifications, and the question is, shall the rest of the colored men have the right to vote. I think it can hardly be supposed that the friends of the colored race in this Convention desire that they should vote unless the majority of the qualified voters shall so decide, and it occurs to me that the proper way to ascertain whether the majority of the electors of the State desire that these men should vote is, to present that question as an independent amendment not embarrassed by any other consideration. That is the fair way to settle the question, I do not intend to discuss this question, sir, but I propose simply to read what was said by distinguished men in the State of Massachusetts in 1853 upon this subject of separate submission. And before doing so, I desire to state that in the Massachusetts Convention of 1820 each amendment proposed by that Convention was separately submitted to the people, and a majority of the provisions were adopted and became parts of the Constitution of that State. Some of the provisions were rejected; but the vote on the several amendments shows that the people were not confused as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] said they would be in this State if any proposition was separately submitted. They voted intelligently, because some propositions were approved and some defeated by a few hundred votes, and others by thousands of votes. In the Massachusetts Convention of 1853, Mr. Choate, then Attorney-General of the State, and one of the most eminent men in New England, upon the subject of separate submission, after stating that he had offered an amendment proposing that certain sections should be submitted separately to the people, said:

"As I understood the learned Chairman [Mr. Boutwell], this morning, to suggest that he should himself favor the separate submission of everything to the individual voter, which it can be shown, may be practically and properly done. I anticipate his support. I have paid some little attention to the details of this motion, and I count upon his co-operation."

And further on he says:

"It simply, fairly, and in good faith, without modifying in the least degree the substantial action of this Convention, enables every voter in Massachusetts to express his own opinion, directly upon so substantial, so distinct and important a proposition as to change the judicial tenure, uncoerced by its connection with any other subject—to the intent that every voter shall exercise his own reason and free will upon a subject distinct from every other branch of the entire subject committed to him—a proposition so reasonable, that unless it is attended with the technical difficulty indicated this morning, by the honorable Chairman of the committee, would meet with universal approbation. It should be borne in mind and it strikes me that it is a principle which should govern us that we had to perform a distinct branch of duty. We were to express, and procure to be adopted—if we could—by this Convention, our own opinions concerning amendments to the Constitution. That duty we have been engaged in arduously for ninety days, and we have done. We have conferred upon it, we have voted upon it, we have accomplished it, and we have completely and in good faith, finished that branch of our duties, the expression of our own opinions touching amendments to the Constitution. The other piece of work submitted to us, and to which we have now arrived, is exactly to enable the people to do their part of the great concurrent work, in amending the Constitution in the best practicable manner on their part. And I apprehend that nobody can feel any desire whatever, to give it such a direction before the people, as shall lay them under coercion, to adopt our views whether they like them or not. We should all feel, and should all co-operate to bring the matter before them in such a shape that they will express their own views exactly, without coercion from any of its connections."

I desire to read a word or two further from these debates. Governor Morton, one of the most distinguished men of that State, upon this subject of separate submission said :

"By presenting these questions altogether you coerce the people on the one hand, or offer a bribe to them on the other hand. You say to them, in effect: 'If you will take this bitter thing, you shall have also the sweet thing;' or it may operate upon them in the way of constraint, inasmuch as you say: 'If you do not accept this which you dislike, you shall not have that which you do like.' This, I contend, is an infringement of the rights of the people."

Now, I have read these extracts, because they were not manufactured for this occasion, and because they are the views of two distinguished gentlemen of different political parties in that Convention, and I trust that their opinion will have proper weight with this Convention. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], on the first day of the assembling of this Convention, proclaimed that the democratic party had determined to vote against the Constitution we should form, and by refusing to submit the proposition of colored suffrage separately, he may array the Democratic party against the Constitution adopted by this Convention. Why not give the colored race, at least a fair chance? They come to this Convention and say "gentlemen give us the right of suffrage." Will this Convention say, "we will see about it; we will put it with other subjects in which the people are interested, and which will be presented by the Committee, and let the people in that form pass upon the question of your suffrage?" Sir, that is unfair to the colored people. What the colored people desire is to vote, and they will not be satisfied unless they can have the merits of their cause presented to the people unobscured by other considerations.

Mr. GREELEY — I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. Verplanck] a question. Would he be willing to submit the question to the judgment of the colored people of this State, and let them determine whether they would have this question submitted alone or as a part of the Constitution.

Mr. VERPLANCK — Mr. Chairman, this is not an age in which Constitutions are particularly revered. It is claimed that they obstruct the progress of the age. In answer to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] I say that I know of no way in which the judgment of the colored men could be ascertained as to how they would prefer to have their right to vote submitted to the people. I know of no way of submitting any proposition which this Convention may recommend except the way provided by the Legislature, and that is to submit the Constitution we shall form to those who now hold the civil government, the qualified electors of this State. This Convention can ascertain the will of the people in no other manner. I trust that this question will not be urged to a vote to-night, because I am satisfied that if the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] was in his place, he would consent to modify his amendment in the manner suggested in the debate by the friends of his proposition. I know from conversation with that gentleman that he has no wish that the property qualification should be retained, unless the peculiar friends of these men desire it. If they do not, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and his political friends on this floor, are entirely willing to strike it out of the Constitution. I may say, political friends because the "happy family" that occupied this hall for the first two or three weeks of this Convention has been broken up. My friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] brought that about when he claimed some days ago that the republican party were the disciples of Thomas Jefferson, and that the democratic party had strayed from his precepts. The "happy family" was then broken up, and political parties appeared in this Convention. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this committee will not take the question in the absence of the gentleman from Kings. [Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. VEEDER — I really do not understand, sir, from what source has sprung the great haste which is exhibited here to-night — this desire to force this question to a vote. I recollect in my experience when a member of the Legislature, of several occasions, when transactions of a similar character occurred and where the question involved was simply a political one. But, sir, I am surprised—

Mr. FOLGER — I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] is not speaking to the pending question.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. VEEDER — I will endeavor to proceed in order. I beg the indulgence of the committee to be allowed to say, that I know there are other gentlemen who desire to present their views upon this question. When the courtesy has been extended unanimously by the Convention to various gentlemen who have been heard, I cannot see any good reason why other gentlemen should not be allowed that privilege. Therefore, with that idea, I move that this committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Veeder, and it was declared lost. A division being called for, it was again declared lost, by a vote of 46 to 55.

Mr. PAIGE — I would ask, as a matter of parliamentary law, whether an amendment can be moved in Convention which is not offered in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN — The opinion of the Chair is that an amendment not offered in Committee of the Whole cannot be moved in Convention.

Mr. PAIGE — I am satisfied that this amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] is susceptible of amendment, and if an amendment was desired to be proposed to it, I think it would be exceedingly unkind and unwise to force a vote upon it to-night.

Mr. FOLGER — In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Schoenectady [Mr. Paige] I will say, that so far as I know, the wish of the majority is only to take a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] for the purpose of disposing of that right, and at a future time to allow other amendments to be proposed.

Mr. GREELEY — I desire to say that from day to day we are abused by the democratic papers for doing nothing, and for taking up all our time in talking—

Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman himself [Mr. Greeley] has made two-thirds of the speeches that have been made.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair wishes to say to members that it has heretofore permitted gentlemen to suggest questions of order without itself so doing; but, as a question of order has just been raised and decided in regard to one member of the committee who interrupted a gentleman without addressing the Chair, if other gentlemen undertake to violate the rules of order, the Chair will be compelled to enforce the rules of order without motion on the part of members.

Mr. CONGER—It was my purpose to have addressed the committee on the general questions embraced in the original proposition and to the amendments that are pending; and I would take the floor to-night, were it not with me a question of exhaustion. If it is the purpose only, of the gentlemen who press this vote, now to get a vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and then as suggested by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], to rise and report progress, I would with the assent of the majority of the committee waive for the present the duty I owe to the committee in expressing such views as I wish to express to-night until sometime to-morrow. I do not wish, sir, in the views which I shall present to this committee, to seem to take the slightest advantage in any preliminary opposition on the question that may be taken; therefore, if it is the desire of the committee that their vote should now be taken upon the pending amendment, I will, with the consent of the committee, take the floor prior to its adjournment, that I may state my views on the main question. I do not ask any special indulgence. I do not know that I have a right to ask it, but as I said before, I would take the floor to-night if it were not to me a question of physical exhaustion.

Mr. CHESBRO—I did not understand the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], to make any specific motion, but I did understand him to say that he intended to make some remarks to the committee on this question. He suggested that his physical condition incapacitated him to make any remarks to-night, and on account of that, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. RATHBUN—I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] if he wished to be understood, if he could have the floor to-morrow morning on the question, he would have no objection to a vote being taken to-night.

Mr. CONGER—None at all, if the committee will not charge me with having failed to do my duty on the main question in advance of the present vote.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Chesebro, and it was declared lost.

A division being called for, the motion was declared lost by a vote of 41 to 61.

Mr. LARREMORE—I desire that the amendment may be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Murphy.

Mr. VEEDER—I did desire to say a few words in reference to this subject. I did also desire to say them, before the vote was taken in the Committee of the Whole. I have endeavored, thus far in the Convention, to extend every courtesy to gentlemen, and I do not ask for it personally, but I know there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard in Committee of the Whole, and because of that, I now move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to a point of order that the question has just been taken on the same motion made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro], and there has no business intervened since,

The CHAIRMAN—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. VEEDER—I respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the point that since the motion was made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro], the Secretary has been called upon to read the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and that business having intervened, in my judgment my motion is now admissible.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order was well taken by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun], and that it was the right of the gentleman to have the amendment read so that he could vote understandingly on the subject.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Murphy and it was declared lost. A division being called for it was again declared lost by a vote of 29 to 78.

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger, and it was declared to be carried.

Whereupon the Committee rose, and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the House and ask leave to sit again.

The question was taken upon granting leave, and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. AXTELL, the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. C. D. W. BRIDGEMAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY, and there being no objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. FRANK presented a memorial from the Genesee Baptist Association asking the incorporation into the organic law of the State a provision against allowing the State or municipal governments to appropriate funds for sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Standing Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. FOWLER presented the petition of J. K. Brownson and 38 others of Woodstock, Madison county, on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. CURTIS presented the petition of E. Francis and 14 others on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. GROSS presented a petition signed by eight hundred citizens of Rondout and twenty-two petitions from the citizens of the city of New York against a prohibitory legislation.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. McDONALD—I rise to a question of privilege. I find that in certain remarks that I made on Tuesday, I am reported as saying that we had refused to make an allowance to the reporters of thirty dollars' worth of stationery, "which the Convention had a right to do." Now, Mr. President, I will not say that these words did not escape my lips. I can only say that if they did, they were without thought and were not intended. On the contrary, my opinion as a matter of fact has been that we have no power to give to the reporters that amount of stationery, and for that very reason, and no other, I stand recorded against that proposition. I further understand that that proposition is again to come before this Convention, and I shall again be compelled to vote against it for that very reason, that we have no power. If it had not been that I was thus recorded in the vote of this Convention, and may again be so recorded, I should not have arisen to trouble the Convention by making this statement. I ask, therefore, that before the debates are finally printed the report of my remarks may be amended so that it shall state that we have not the power instead of saying that we have the power.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is informed by the Stenographer that the correction has already been made.

Mr. ALVORD presented the petition of Charles W. Tomlinson and twenty-nine other citizens of Syracuse, against donations of public money by the State to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GREELEY—I am informed that by a decision of the court of appeals, an act of the Legislature, by which in the making of drains, they could, where necessary, be extended through the adjoining lands of other parties, has been decided to be unconstitutional. I hold in my hand the memorial of Henry C. Spaulding in favor of adopting a constitutional provision, empowering the Legislature to pass laws providing for that important—increasingly important—subject; and I ask its reference to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

The memorial was referred as requested.

Mr. GREELEY also presented the petition of Rev. J. H. Austin and others for a separate submission of a clause of the Constitution authorizing the Legislature to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated liquors.

Mr. GREELEY also presented the petition of Mrs. Louisa Howland and eleven other citizens of Mount Vernon, Westchester County asking suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT also presented the memorial of the Union Republican Association of the Fifteenth Assembly District of the city of New York against the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Senate Committee appointed to investigate into the management of the canals of this State, and transmitting a copy of the testimony taken by said committee.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals and the testimony ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH gave the following notice, that he would move to amend rule 46 by adding thereto the following:

"It shall be the duty of the officers of the Convention to prevent smoking upon the floor of the Assembly chamber and open spaces adjacent thereto, during the sessions of the Convention."

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. LAPHAM gave notice of motion to reconsider the vote by which the following rule was rejected:

"The previous question shall be, 'Shall the main question be now put?' It shall be decided without debate, and if determined in the affirmative, no further debate or amendment shall be in order, and the main question shall be on the adoption of the resolution or other matter under consideration. When amendments shall be pending, the question shall be first taken on the amendments in their order, whether such amendments shall have been offered in Convention or recommended by the Committee of the Whole."

Which was laid on the table, under the rule.

Mr. MERRITT—By an inadvertence in engrossing one of the sections of the article submitted by the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, the following sentence was omitted. I ask that it be added to the section:

"The legislative term shall begin on the first day of January, and the Legislature shall every year assemble on the first Tuesday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law."

The PRESIDENT—There being no objection, the omission in the report will be supplied as stated by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt].

Mr. MERRITT—It may be proper for me to say in view of the fact that the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Merwin], who as a minority of the Committee saw fit to submit an elaborate report in support of his views so far as those views differ from the report of the majority of the Committee, that that submission took the Committee by surprise. I only refer to it for the purpose of saying that the various propositions which were referred to the committee having in view the organization of the Legislature were carefully considered, and it was thought that if the report should be made in writing, it would be too elaborate and injustice might be done to some of the propositions. We also thought we could present our views in the Committee of the Whole, and there would be no embarrassment or expression of adverse opinions affecting the different propositions that were submitted to the committee, so that the movers of these propositions could present them without any such embarrassment as might grow out of a written argument in support of the views of the committee. It was no want of respect to the gentleman who offered the various propositions, or to the propositions themselves, that they were not considered in a written report.

Mr. GREELEY—I offer the following resolution to close debate on the pending subject, saying, however, that I do not wish the Convention to adopt the particular time I have named, but I only wish that the question of the time shall be settled so that members will be here to vote:

Resolved, That debate in Committee of the Whole on the report of the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage, be closed in Committee of the Whole with this day's sitting, and in Convention at one P. M., on Monday.

Mr. DEVELIN—I yesterday, rose to propose to discuss the resolution which was offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and the Chair ruled that the resolution need not lay over one day, inasmuch as it had reference to pending business before the Convention. The business at that time was resolutions, and had no regard to the Committee of the Whole or to the discussion of the suffrage question. In my judgment, the Chair was in error in its ruling for the reason that the suffrage question was not then pending any more than any other subject before the Convention, but the Convention was proceeding with business under the order of resolutions. I rise again and propose to debate the resolution which is now offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley].

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules in the same way, and gives as his authority the second subdivision of the 29th rule:

"Resolutions giving rise to debate, except such as shall relate to the disposition of business immediately before the Convention, to the business of the day on which they may be offered, or to adjournments or recesses."

These are excepted from the rule requiring resolutions to lie over one day for consideration. The business of this day is the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. DEVELIN—There is no evidence that the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage is to be considered to-day.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman [Mr. Develin] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DEVELIN—No, I will not take any appeal.

Mr. MURPHY—I do not understand entirely what is the scope of the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. I have no objection to the resolution if I understand that all amendments to be proposed or offered may be offered without discussion.

Mr. GREELEY—Certainly, that is the proposition.

Mr. TAPPEN—I move to amend, by inserting the word "Tuesday," instead of "Monday."

Mr. GREELEY—I will accept the amendment, or anything that is agreeable to the Convention, only we must close the debate.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I think we would hardly be able to finish this discussion in one day's session of the Committee of the Whole. I understand that gentlemen have amendments to offer in reference to the question of suffrage, upon which they would like to occupy the floor in Committee of the Whole, which they could not do in Convention. No amendment can be offered, under the rules in Convention which had not been offered in the Committee of the Whole, and it must be obvious that if we are to have debate on any particular amendment offered, the resolution should not be adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—I understand that any amendment may be offered after the close of debate, and that amendments offered in Committee of the Whole may be offered again; that the closing of debate will not foreclose the offering of any amendments or the voting, or any number that gentlemen may choose to offer.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state, as there seems to be some misapprehension, that an amendment which shall be offered in Committee of the Whole under the rules of the Assembly can be offered in Convention; but, no amendment can be offered which has not been decided in Committee of the Whole. The contrary rule prevails in the House of Representatives. The Chair would be glad if the House should decide this matter, but in the absence of any instructions, it will adopt the Assembly practice.

Mr. GREELEY—There is now on the table a resolution which I offered and which was referred to the committee to correct the rules on that subject. The Chair knows, as I know, that in the House of Representatives every amendment offered in Committee of the Whole, whether it has been adopted or rejected, may be offered again, and a vote demanded thereon in the House. That is a correct rule and a just rule, but I am afraid that it is not our rule, and hence it was that I offered the resolution weeks ago, which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the rule in the House of Representatives to have a wider scope than as stated by the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN—The rule of this Convention, as I understand it, does permit the offering of any amendment in Convention, that shall be germane to the subject, and which has been rejected in Committee of the Whole. It differs in this respect from the practice of the Assembly, and includes in substance the amendment which was proposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. The reason that the Committee on Rules have not reported on the proposition of that gentleman, is because they believe it to be unnecessary, and that what he desires is accomplished by the rule as it now stands.

Mr. CONGER—Will the Chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. Sherman] be kind enough to indicate the rule?

Mr. SHERMAN—It is Chapter 9, Rule 23, as follows:

"When a question shall be under consideration, no motion shall be received except as herein specified and motions shall have precedence in the order stated."

And then subdivision 10 is "to amend." There is no distinction in any of the rules between amendments offered in Committee of the Whole and those not so offered; consequently the latter has no privilege over the former.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will settle the question by proposing the question to the Convention; shall the practice of the House of Representatives in relation to amendments prevail? Those who are in favor of that practice will—

Mr. MURPHY—I would like the President to repeat what the rule of the House of Representatives is.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the practice in the House of Representatives to be to admit of the offering of amendments without regard to the fact whether the amendments have been offered in Committee of the Whole or not. Shall this practice be adopted for the government of this Convention.

The question was then put on the question proposed by the Chair and it was declared carried.

Mr. NELSON—I move to amend the resolution, so that it will provide that in the debate on Tuesday next, no delegate shall speak on any question more than five minutes. This will give gentlemen introducing amendments an opportunity to briefly state the object they have in view in offering the amendment.

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment.

Mr. MERRITT—Do I understand that by the resolution, the consideration of this question in Convention is postponed until Tuesday next?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not so understand it. The Secretary will read the resolution as amended.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as amended.

Mr. CONGER—I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

Mr. ALVORD—I move to further amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and inserting in lieu thereof the following, "that the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the qualifications to Hold Office in Committee of the Whole shall terminate on Tuesday next at 12 o'clock M., and that the question on the report of the Committee of the Whole shall be taken without debate."

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose that this question, which is now under consideration, will elicit more debate than any other proposition which will be submitted to this Convention. It is more general in its character and more important in its results, and I, therefore, suggest to the mover of the resolution [Mr. Greeley] and to the Convention that some little time, beyond the day named, be given to us for the proper consideration of this subject. Many gentlemen have participated in this discussion over and over again. Some of them have made three, four and even five speeches each, while others of us, either from inability to obtain the floor or from indisposition to trespass too much upon the time of the Convention, have not spoken at all. I, therefore, suggest that some longer time be granted by the Convention for the discussion of the subject now under consideration. We have already had intimations that the previous question is to be introduced to govern our deliberations, the effort of which would be, not only to cut off all debate, but, if properly construed, as in the House of Representatives, would cut off the opportunity for offering amendments. If it is in order, therefore, or if the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] be voted down, I shall ask that debate, on and after to-day, be limited to speeches of from fifteen to twenty minutes each, and that, on Wednesday next, we take the question on a final vote.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I am in favor of giving full latitude in this debate. And if it would accommodate the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. E. Brooks], I would be willing to sit until tomorrow morning. Yesterday evening I think there was a disposition on the part of the Convention to remain in session and listen to the remarks of any gentleman who should wish to occupy the time of the Convention. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], had he been present, and in his place, I have no doubt would have been listened to with pleasure for as long a time as he desired. There is no disposition to stifle debate. I do not think the people feel any such disposition; and I am certainly satisfied that members of this Convention do not. But we must have some time fixed when this vote is to be taken that every gentleman may be here to record his vote. It is for that purpose that the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], made his motion and for that purpose alone. I am in favor of afternoon sessions and evening sessions until every gentleman who desires to be heard on this question shall have full opportunity. By the time fixed in the motion the reports of other committees will have been submitted. The report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage in the Convention of 1846 was some three weeks under consideration before it was adopted. If that is to be a guide for our action, as we have something like twenty-five reports to act upon, we certainly should have something disposed of as we go along. I think no gentleman can justly complain if a vote be taken on Tuesday next.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I concur entirely with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Hutchins] in regard to fixing the time for taking the vote for Tuesday next; but I cannot concur with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] in the idea that all debate on this subject should cease with this day's session. I do not believe that the exigencies of the Convention or the public business requires it. I believe that this is one of the most important questions that can come before this body. This clause of the Constitution is one that should be perfected after profound deliberation, and for that reason I move to strike out from the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] so much as limits the debate upon this question in Committee of the Whole, to this day.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that the motion to strike out is not in order, as long as amendments are proposed. The proposition must first be perfected.

Mr. RATHBUN—I apprehend that there is some misapprehension about the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. As I understand that amendment, it proposes that debate may continue on this subject until twelve o'clock next Tuesday. I should like to hear it read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution and the pending amendment of Mr. Alvord.

Mr. GREELEY—I will accept that amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. CASSIDY—I hope the resolution will not pass. I hope no resolution will pass limiting debate on this question, except some rule which will allow to each member of this Convention a right to be heard for a limited time, and not to repeat his speech. Gentlemen have spoken here upon this subject, presenting their views upon one single and very narrow question, and have presented it in a very narrow, and I may say party point of view, who, having expressed themselves, are now willing to close the debate. I think it unjust and unfair to that large body who have not yet spoken on that subject, and who have manifested no desire to express their opinions and justify them before this committee. If, therefore, we allow to every member fifteen minutes for discussion on this question, and forbid him, as the rule does do, to speak again, we accomplish all that we desire. We will reach this question within a moderate time; we have to-day, we have to-morrow, we have Saturday if we remain here, and if each member is limited in the time taken by him to express his ideas, there will be an opportunity for all to be heard. But some members who have been fully heard ask to cut off debate upon matters of the utmost importance connected with this report. Here is this question of the right of women to vote! It has been refused a hearing in the committee, substantially, and has never had a hearing in this Convention. It has a right to demand a hearing in this Convention, and when it is to be heard, to have its cause advocated through representative men. The eloquent member from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], is prepared for such an advocacy, and I should be sorry to cut him off from the expression of his sentiments, or to cut off other delegates who desire to speak in regard to any other matter. The question of bribery in elections, of the rights of naturalized citizens, of a uniform registry law, are far more important than the question we have already discussed. They do not require elaborate words to be accorded to them, but they do require frank discussion and a fair hearing.

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. VERPLANCK—We were told last night, and have been told repeatedly, that we should have an opportunity to discuss this proposition in Convention. The proposition of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] now proposes to cut off all debate, and refuses to the members of the Convention the poor privilege of even offering amendments in Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would state that as it understands the resolution the gentleman [Mr. Verplanck] is mistaken.

Mr. VERPLANCK—Let me see if I am mistaken. The Committee has to report, and the vote of the Convention on that report is immediately to be taken. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. VERPLANCK—Now, of what avail is it to a member to offer an amendment, if he cannot debate it—cannot state the object and purposes of the amendment, and if other members cannot discuss the question. This rule deprives us of the power of offering amendments in the Convention, and I trust the Convention will not do so.

Mr. DEVELIN—As I understand the resolution read by the Secretary, the vote is to be taken at twelve o'clock next Tuesday, on the report of the Committee. The Committee will not report any amendments which have been offered and rejected in the Committee of the Whole, and the consequence is that those who desire to do so cannot be put on the record on those amendments, because the vote is to be had on the report of the committee, and not on an amendment that may be offered in the Convention. No amendments are possible under that resolution. I understand that the President and the Convention have decided that amendments may be offered in Convention but if this resolution be passed, then the previous decision of the Convention is overruled, and the consequence is that no amendment can be offered in the Convention. Will the Secretary be kind enough to read the latter part of that resolution again?

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as requested.

Mr. DEVELIN—"And the question on the report shall be taken without debate." Now, practically, this Convention goes into the Committee of the Whole. The committee decides on a report. The Chairman of the committee reports to the President of the Convention, that the Committee of the Whole has decided upon the report, and he presents it to the Convention, and then the vote will be taken, under this resolution, on that report, and no amendment is possible.

Mr. ALVORD—I am inclined to believe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] is mistaken. The practice has been uniform heretofore, and I take it that the presiding officer of this Convention will so rule now, that when we shall come down to twelve o'clock on Tuesday next, the report of the committee being before the Convention is amendable in every direction. The report may not be agreed to, or the committee may not be discharged, and every proposition can come up before the Convention, as, under the rules of the House of Representatives, every amendment desired to be made by individual members of the Convention will be entertained on the coming in of the report, under the present form and expression of the resolution. It is not the intention, and it never has been the practice, either in the Houses of the Legislature of this State, or as I understand it, in the House of Representatives, that when a time certain is fixed to take a vote, if any of the incidents surrounding that action have not been entertained in Committee of the Whole, not to entertain those propositions in the body. I trust, therefore, that, with this understanding (and if I am not mistaken, such will be the ruling of the Chair in this case, and must of necessity form a precedent), that the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] will not be sustained.

Mr. NELSON—Would we not obviate all questions that might arise by striking out the word "vote" and inserting in the place thereof, "action?"

Mr. GREELEY—I understand the Convention to have just decided that every amendment before the committee, and every other amendment, may be offered, and a vote taken or demanded thereon on the coming in of the report. That, I understand to be a fixed rule of this Convention, on a decision of its President, and ratified by the Convention. I do not see that any new action is necessary. When we say we will proceed to vote thereon, I understand we will vote on every amendment that may have been offered in the Committee of the Whole or may be offered. The only point is, to close debate at that time and proceed to vote; and voting on the report of the committee is voting on every incident of that report. I do not think any change is necessary.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose that the resolution of my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] means just what it says, and it says that we shall come to a vote upon the report of the committee on Tuesday next at twelve o'clock, and without debate. This is another way of putting the previous question. It refuses the privilege of any amendment by any member of this Convention, and brings us directly to a vote upon the report of the committee, whatever that report may be. Now, Mr. President, to illustrate this, if any gentleman in this Convention desires to introduce an amendment pertinent to the subject under consideration, by the resolution, if it is adopted, he is denied this privilege in the Convention, and the Convention instead of being governed by the general parliamentary law, and the practice in the House of Representatives will necessarily be governed by this resolution because it is the subsequent action of the body. Sir, let me say a word more. The author of this resolution [Mr. Alvord], and my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], who has seconded it with so much earnestness, have occupied a larger time of this body than any other members of this Convention, in the discussion of this very subject; and although, as was said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], I had an opportunity if I had been here last evening, to make any remarks which I might wish to make to this Convention, I wish that gentleman to remember that it is not always convenient to be sitting here seven or eight hours a day; nor is it always agreeable to members of the Convention to listen to discussion extended to that time. I think we have been making pretty rapid progress in the consideration of our business. A large portion of my time is occupied, as gentlemen well know with whom I am associated, in the consideration of important business in the committees of this body. The committees meet at ten o'clock in the morning and at four o'clock in the afternoon and they meet again in the evening. A large portion of time is necessarily occupied in the consideration of business much more important than the debates in which we are engaged. There will be at an early day a period in this Convention when all reports will be submitted and then I shall be willing to sit here as long as any member of the Convention, to act in the consideration of any subject that is presented. But we are engaged in considering the great question which is to come before this Convention whether the right of suffrage shall be extended to the women of this State; whether it shall be extended to the colored people of this State; how far the organic law shall affect the question of bribery; whether the paupers shall be allowed to vote or not; or whether the class of citizens who have filed their application for naturalization previous to thirty days before election in 1865 or 1866, shall enjoy the privilege of the elective franchise or not. All these are important questions which require careful consideration, and in which the people of this State are largely interested; and I submit we are not occupying too much time when we are engaged, as we have been, during only eight days, in the consideration of this question, which is the main one before this body.

Mr. NELSON—I propose the following amendment, strike out the word "vote," and insert in place thereof "action," and at the end add, "and debate by any member be limited to fifteen minutes." As I understand the resolution as it now stands, the effect of my amendment, if adopted, will be, when a report is made to the Convention by Committee of the Whole, the Convention must immediately act upon that report. Then, by the amendment I proposed, the "action" will be any action that is within the rules of this Convention. It may be by amendment, it may be by substitute or by anything else; then debate will be limited, on any amendment or on any substitute, or in reference to any other action, to fifteen minutes to each member. Then will step in the standing rule of the Convention, that a member can speak but once, and the result will be that no member can speak but fifteen minutes, and that will cause but very little delay.

Mr. DEVELIN—I offer as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson], that after the word "vote" in the report, be inserted "any amendment that may be offered thereto in the Convention."

Mr. NELSON—The word "vote" is not in the resolution. It is the word "action." That covers what the gentleman [Mr. Develin] wishes.

Mr. DEVELIN—I understand the gentleman to say that as he has amended the resolution it covers what I wish.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as amended.

Mr. DEVELIN—That covers my idea.

Mr. RATHBUN—I now move that the amendment which I have sent to the Secretary as a substitute for the one offered by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson] be adopted.

Mr. HATCH—I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. As I understand the practice of the House of Representatives on any question that has occupied the Committee of the Whole for a number of days the usual practice is when the Committee reports to the House, to limit the debate to five minutes; and I suggest that amendment to the gentleman from Westchester.

The SECRETARY—Proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Rathbun, as follows:

"Insert after the words 'Committee of the Whole,' last occurring, the words 'and amendments proposed thereto.'"

Mr. SILVESTER—I recognize the fact that this is one of the most important questions that will come before this body, and not wishing that any gentleman should be deprived of the right to express his views, I offer the following amendment and I offer it as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT—As two amendments are already pending, the Chair will inform the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] that another amendment is not admissible.

Mr. WEED—I have, personally, no serious objection to the first proposition of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], as it was amended prior to his accepting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]; but it seems to me if the Convention will think of it a moment that to adopt the resolution of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] will be an error for these reasons. In the natural course of events, in the Committee of the Whole the discussion will probably be almost entirely, if not entirely, taken up upon amendments to the first section of the article proposed by the Committee upon Suffrage. I doubt if we get a direct vote upon that subject while in Committee of the Whole. What then will be the result? No discussion of any kind upon the other six sections of the report can be had in Committee of the Whole, because those sections are not under discussion in the Committee, and amendments to them are not pertinent, and discussion upon them not pertinent. Then the report is made to the house on Tuesday next in pursuance of this resolution. That report is that they have made progress and ask leave to sit again. Upon that a motion is made to disagree and a vote is taken upon the original proposition. Perhaps the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] and other gentlemen to the first section can be taken understandingly, at that time; but any other amendment to any other of the six sections of this article cannot be made under the rule as proposed, and no discussion can be had upon them though the other five sections are important. It seems to me, therefore, that if this debate is to be stopped in this way, the first proposition of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] was the proper one, that debate in the Committee of the Whole be ended to-day, or on sometime to be fixed; that then we should have time to propose amendments to the other sections of the report, when the whole report would be under consideration in Convention; and any amendment to any portion of them would be in order, and that some limited time should be given for the discussion of these sections in the Convention. I have no objection to five or ten minutes. I certainly think on Tuesday next it should be limited to five minutes, and it would seem to me if the Convention are determined to end this discussion now, that the proper resolution should be that the discussion in the Committee of the Whole should end to-day or to-morrow, and that the vote be taken on Tuesday next, at one o'clock or at twelve o'clock upon the report, and propositions under it, and that on Tuesday the remarks upon any amendment should be limited to five minutes. This would bring the whole matter up, and give us an opportunity to examine some of the other sections, propose amendments to them, and briefly state the reason of those amendments.

Mr. HUTCHINS—When that occasion arises, when the contingency has happened, the Convention can take care of it. The majority vote fixes the time for taking the vote; the majority can allow us to listen to the eloquence of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], if he has not been able to offer his amendment to some one of the proposed sections, and I shall most willingly vote for it. It now requires a majority vote to fix the time, and if any gentleman wishes at the time so fixed to be heard, and the Convention deems it important, he shall be heard; or if the question requires discussion, a majority vote, I have no doubt, will be given to allow it. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] says this proposition is, in effect, the previous question. When we had before the Convention, the question whether the rule providing for the previous question, as reported by the committee, should be struck out or not, I voted for retaining it. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] voted against it. I am inclined to think that he was right, and that I was wrong. But it was stated at that time, that the way we could reach, in substance, the previous question was by fixing a definite time when the vote could be taken upon the propositions before the Convention. We propose to do that now. If the time limited is not long enough, then, next Tuesday, when the vote is to be taken, we can by vote extend it; but I desire to see the time fixed now, and if the contingency arises, for any reason whatever, that at the time fixed to take the vote it shall not be deemed proper to do so, I would most heartily vote for further postponement.

Mr. DEVELIN—As I understand parliamentary law, if we pass this resolution it stands upon our records that the vote is to be taken at two o'clock on Tuesday, and no majority can change that resolution. In order to change it, a motion must be made to reconsider, and that motion must lie over for a day, and thus of course the attempt to extend debate is defeated.

Mr. TAPPEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That debate in Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, be closed on Tuesday next, and that the Convention will take action thereon and upon any amendments on Wednesday, after the reading of the journal. Debate to be limited to ten minutes on Tuesday and Wednesday upon the subject then pending.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of opinion that the resolution is not now in order there being already two amendments pending.

Mr. TAPPEN—There are conflicting views of members in respect to the time and the day upon which to close the debate on this subject: but it seems to be the sentiment of the majority of the Convention that some specific time ought to be named, and judging from the sentiments expressed upon this subject I gather that early in the ensuing week is the time the majority would like the best, and I propose by this resolution to adopt the features of the various propositions offered and to close this debate on Tuesday next, and on Wednesday, without fixing any hour upon either day at which the Convention shall adjourn, that we take the final vote on all the propositions in that report. I think this resolution will commend itself to the judgment of all the members of the Convention.

Mr. GREELEY—I will accept that amendment, though I think it is totally unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be upon the amendment offered by Mr. Nelson.

Mr. NELSON—I propose to change the time mentioned in that amendment from fifteen minutes to ten minutes.

No objection being made the amendment was so modified.

Mr. HATCH—I offer, sir, an amendment to the amendment to change the time to five minutes; which is the usual time in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH—This Convention, as I understand it, have already decided that any amendment may be offered in Convention, whether it has been previously offered in the Committee of the Whole or not. But as I understand this amendment it proposes to cut off debate in the Convention. Virtually it destroys and nullifies the right which the Convention have voted to retain, because it is well known that the change of a single word, may entirely change the whole scope and effect of a provision, and when it is read by the Secretary in the hurry of business, it is impossible for gentlemen to tell the effect of an amendment thus offered. Therefore, if there be no privilege left to make any explanation at the time, we virtually vote to cut off all debate and permit ourselves only to vote on the original proposition.

Mr. GREELEY—I understand the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson] is willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] to limit the debate to five minutes, and I am willing to accept the amendment as thus amended.

Mr. McDONALD offered the following amendment.

Add at end of resolution, "Provided further that on and after Friday next no member shall occupy more than fifteen minutes on any one question, unless by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, such member be allowed further time."

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a question of order, that this proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald], is not germane to this subject, and does not come under the rule we have discussed in regard to the order of business.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TAPPEN—I had the honor a few moments ago to offer a resolution which seemed to me to meet with some favor from the Convention; but at the time the Chair decided that it was not in order, because several amendments were pending. I understand that since then these amendments have been disposed of, and I would ask if my resolution is now in order.

The PRESIDENT—The amendment is now in order.

Mr. McDONALD—Although it may be not strictly in order, I would like to ask a question—if it is in order to make a motion with regard to the debate on Tuesday next, why is it not in order to make a motion with regard to debate on Friday next.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not consider it his province to inform the gentleman [Mr. McDonald] on points which are not distinctly before the Convention.

Mr. TILDEN—I have no desire to protract the discussion upon the question of suffrage beyond a reasonable limit, and much beyond the limit to which gentleman have already gone; and the best testimony I can give on that subject is, that I have taken none of the time of the committee in that discussion. It has been somewhat prolonged on a single question and one question only—the question of the suffrage of colored persons. I understand there are gentlemen here, and one of them a man of distinguished eloquence, who proposes to discuss the question of the extension of suffrage to females. I do not myself intend to take any part in that discussion, certainly not beyond a mere expression of opinion that may govern my vote. But, sir, in framing the fundamental law of the greatest State in the Union, of a state larger numerically than were the whole United States when the Convention of 1787 sat, in regard to what is fundamental in government, that is if anything be fundamental, the question of suffrage, and who shall constitute the electoral body; I am desirous that there shall be every reasonable opportunity to make practical amendments in committee that the case requires. I desire myself, sir, to propose several amendments in the Convention when the ayes and noes can be taken, and when, doubtless, there will be a fuller attendance of members. I think it entirely impracticable to state the reasons for an amendment within five or ten minutes, or always within fifteen. It may be very well to draw these discussions in the Committee of the Whole to a close, or it may be very well to limit, if gentlemen desire it, the length of speeches made upon the general subject, but I certainly think it would be improvident and unwise to say that no man shall occupy over five minutes or ten minutes in explaining amendments which are to be voted upon by this Convention. Sir, the analogy of the House of Representatives does not hold good here. Those are mere amendments of detail and form. In several respects, I think this report needs amending—and in material respects. I think, on the whole, without having been intended to be such, it is a disfranchising report, and I think that if the whole time is occupied in Committee of the Whole in the discussion of the question now pending, and we are forced upon the final action, we ought to have, certainly, longer than five or ten minutes in which to propose amendments that are to take effect and that are to be approved, and which are to constitute the real business we are to do in this body. I think, perhaps, from having allowed too large a latitude, there is danger of our rushing into the other extreme, and tying this body up in such a way that we cannot wisely and discreetly do the actual business part of the duty we are undertaking. I therefore shall vote against these limitations in the Convention, although, perhaps, a larger limitation I would agree to!

Mr. HUTCHINS—One word in reply to the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. Tilden]. The only argument, as I understand, that he uses in favor of extending the time is this. That he desires in Convention to offer amendments. Now I ask the gentleman why he will not offer these amendments in Committee of the Whole, when he can talk as long as he chooses, and then he will not be precluded when we go into Convention from offering amendments.

Mr. TILDEN—I will answer my friend and colleague. I stated the nature of the limitation on both to show that there might be no power to do precisely what the gentleman proposes.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I understood the gentleman to say that he had his amendments already prepared.

Mr. TILDEN—Not at all. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. KERNAN—We have sat in Committee of the Whole for nearly two weeks, and it has not for one moment been in order to offer amendments, though it may be so at the end of the session.

Mr. TILDEN—Yes sir, it has been out of order all the time. I intend to offer my amendments in the committee, but I may not have an opportunity under these rules.

Mr. HUTCHINS—Then I would be in favor of a session, even if we have a continuous one of forty-eight hours, long enough to give the gentleman an opportunity. If we do not do something of this kind we shall never be able to accomplish this business. Look at the unreasonableness of the gentlemen who ask for a further extension of time. If I understand the argument of those who oppose this proposition, gentlemen say that they consider this right of suffrage as a sort of secondary thing to be submitted separately to the people, and of very little consequence. My friend from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] on Saturday made a most able speech here, showing how much more important many other questions were, that will come before this Convention than the one we are now discussing; but now, they think it is the great question of all others that ought to be discussed. I agree with the gentleman that it is, and I am in favor of giving them full time and full latitude, and of giving every gentleman on this floor full opportunity to speak. But I think if we give them until next Tuesday or Wednesday, and have afternoon sessions if necessary, and evening sessions of sufficient length until all the gentlemen can be heard, it will be sufficient, and although it is the greatest question and the most momentous one before the Convention, still there are other questions of importance which ought to be fully discussed and heard, and it is for that reason I am in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER—I suppose in the first instance, whatever the action of the Convention may be on any proposition now submitted, that when the vote is taken and the action determined, that the Convention binds itself by a special rule, which it cannot revoke in any contingency unless the majority who enacted the rule shall see fit to grant a reconsideration; so that for all practical purposes, the vote which is to be taken now, is just as final as if Tuesday next had arrived. If then, the majority who are present wish to have this debate closed, I have no objection provided there is ample opportunity afforded to every gentleman who wishes either, to propose amendments or to support amendments, to give suitable expression to his views. The gentlemen who have proposed these amendments should be sufficiently explicit in giving us to understand what sort of sessions they propose. Because it is very clear, if a vote is taken on this proposition affirmatively, and if to-morrow we should adjourn over until Monday evening at seven o'clock, it would shut out all further consideration of the question in Committee of the Whole. I do not suppose that any gentleman here, who is ready to limit the debate to a day certain, would wish to take so ungenerous an advantage. But it is due to justice and fairness, by every member of this Convention to himself, that in fixing such a rule it should be so clearly and distinctly stated that there can be no possible advantage taken in any event. In order that there may be no mistake about it I offer the following amendment.

Resolved, That the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the Qualifications to Hold Office in the Committee of the Whole, be continued in regular session, and at recesses to be held every day, without adjournment of the Convention beyond one day, except from Saturday to Monday next, the debate to be closed in Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next at 12 M., and that action then be had upon the report of the committee and upon all amendments proposed, and to be proposed thereto.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I rise with the view simply of making an inquiry. It has been stated here by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], and also by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that this order of business as established by the resolutions can be changed by a majority vote. Rule 18 reads as follows: "Any particular report or other matter on the general orders may be made a special order from any particular day or from day to day, with the assent of two-thirds of the members voting; and no special order shall be postponed or rescinded except by a similar vote." I have always understood, although I am not very familiar with parliamentary law, that when an hour or day was fixed for taking a vote on a pending proposition it superseded all other business and was a special order. If so, under this rule it would require a two-thirds vote either to establish or rescind it.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I do not believe we are at this time to decide when these debates shall be held; I believe we shall gain time and get along better with the business of the Convention by letting this lie over to another day; I therefore move that this resolution lie upon the table.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. A. J. Parker, and declared to be carried.

Mr. DEVELIN moved to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution appointing a committee to consider the expediency of adjourning to Saratoga or New York was indefinitely postponed.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of one from each judicial district be appointed by the Chair to inquire and report upon the expediency of adjourning this Convention to Saratoga or the city of New York.

Mr. OPDYKE—It seems to me that the resolution is a very proper one. It is known that the framers of the law under which we assemble, with a proper consideration for the health and comfort of the members of this Convention, gave them the option after their first organization, to select the place of holding their sessions. It is known I presume, to every member of the Convention that the proprietors of the Union Hotel at Saratoga tendered us the free use of a building suitable for our purposes and properly fitted up for our accommodation. It seems to me that it is due to the liberality of that offer that this committee be at least appointed to make inquiry and report to this Convention, and if there are found to be no objections to making the change I am free to say that I for one will be in favor of making it. There is no doubt that Saratoga is cooler and more healthful than this city, or any other at which we could meet: they are supplied there with excellent water for general use, and their mineral springs are fountains of health of which we may all partake. I believe that the physical and mental stamina of the members of this Convention would be so far increased by the change that we should be able to hold two sessions with less exhaustion than we can here hold one. But the question of making the change is not now before the Convention; it is a preliminary question of inquiry, and a vote in favor of the committee will not be a vote on the subject to which it refers. I trust from the considerations which I have presented and from courtesy to the liberality of the offer that has been made, that the committee will at least be appointed and permitted to make the inquiry.

Mr. RATHBUN—I hope this vote will not be reconsidered. It seems to me that we could hardly be guilty of a greater impropriety than to take up and consider it and finally to be led away on this excursion up to Saratoga. We were not elected, if I remember right, to visit summer resorts or places of amusement or pleasure; we were elected for the purpose of performing a duty, and the ordinary and the regular place for the performance of that duty is where the conveniences resulting from the library, the departments, the public printing, and the center of travel calls the Convention and the legislative bodies of the State. I should like very much, individually, to spend a week or two, or a month or two at Saratoga if I had nothing else to do and plenty of money to pay expenses, but I do not believe that it is either proper or right for me to convert a public office and a public duty into a matter of pleasure and enjoyment, as though I had been elected for that instead of labor. Now, sir, if gentlemen were aware of the opinion of the people of the country in regard to this proposition, and if they knew of the result to be produced, the effect upon any Constitution which they might adopt, they would hardly make the proposition to go there, and I am satisfied that no proposition of that kind can be carried in this Convention. Why, sir, it would condemn and defeat any Constitution that could be made in this Convention. The very fact that we deserted the Capitol and ran away upon a visiting and summer excursion, would be in the public judgment of the people in the country—I can't say what it would be in the cities—but in the country it would be that we had ceased to be a delegated Convention for the purpose of making a Constitution and had been converted into an entirely different body. Now, sir, I did not rise to debate the question or say a word about it. I rose for the purpose of making a motion, and that motion is to lay this whole subject upon the table, and upon that I demand the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Rathbun, and the Secretary proceeded with the call, and upon Mr. Reynolds' name being called—

Mr. REYNOLDS—Is it in order for me to explain my vote?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman can only ask to be excused and can give his reasons for it. Does the gentleman ask to be excused?

Mr. REYNOLDS—I ask to be excused from voting. When this question was up before, I voted in favor of laying the resolution on the table. It was, as I understood it, for the appointment of a committee to visit Saratoga to inquire into the expediency of adjourning the Convention to that place; the resolution was then postponed, and it subsequently came to my knowledge that the gentleman who moved the resolution had some feeling upon the refusal of the Convention to appoint a committee. After some conversation with him, I felt that perhaps he might be right, and I ought to have voted in favor of granting him a committee, though I am opposed to the proposition for going to Saratoga, and I told him if the vote was reconsidered, I would vote in favor of giving him the committee, so that I vote "no" upon the motion now, though I should vote against the proposition to go to Saratoga if it should come up.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman cannot now vote, without the consent of the Convention. If there is no objection the gentleman can vote.

Objection being made the Secretary proceeded with the call.

Mr. HATCH—I do not understand that the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Reynolds] has been excused, if not, he is entitled to vote now unless the Convention shall excuse him.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that the gentleman cannot withdraw his request, without the consent of the Convention.

Mr. HATCH—The Convention has not passed upon the question of excusing him, perhaps the Convention are opposed to excusing him.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion, that the gentleman cannot vote without the consent of the Convention.

Mr. DEVELIN—As I understand it sir, the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Reynolds], requested that he should be excused from voting, but the Convention has not passed upon that request at all; and he is entitled to vote or else the Convention must refuse him the privilege of voting.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will put the question upon excusing the gentleman, to the Convention.

The question was then put on excusing Mr. Reynolds and it was declared to be not granted.

The SECRETARY proceed to finish the call, and the motion to lay on the table was declared to be lost by the following vote:

Ayes.—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Axtell, Barker, Barnard, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Church, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ferry, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Gould, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, Law, Ludington, Merrill, Merwin, Morris, Murphy, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, President, Rathbun, Root, Roy, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Silvester, Smith, Strong, Tilden, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Wales, Wickham—67.

Noes.—Messrs. Alvord, Baker, Ballard, Barto, Beadle, Beckwith, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, W. C. The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the original resolution was postponed.

Mr. MERRITT—I do not desire to make any extended remarks, but as I had the honor of making the motion for indefinite postponement, I desire to state, that it was not with any purpose of showing any discourtesy to the gentleman who moved the resolution. It is very clear to me that this Convention, may as well understand now, and determine whether they wish to change the seat of this Convention from Albany to Saratoga. We do not need a committee to inform us of the facilities at Saratoga for holding sessions, or of the convenience which we shall experience if we change the location of the Convention to Saratoga, for by the newspapers, and by circulars we have been informed of the facilities that exist at that place. Why then appoint this committee?

Mr. DEVELIN—I rise to a point of order, that on a motion to reconsider, the gentleman cannot discuss the merits of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MERRITT—I say I am not willing, in the case of people who may be interested in this change, in a pecuniary way or otherwise, that they should have the advantage of a report from a committee of this body—

Mr. DEVELIN—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is pursuing the same course.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the gentleman to be in order.

Mr. MERRITT—I think that in voting to raise this committee, we are voting practically upon the resolution itself, and there can be no courtesy or discourtesy about it. This has been considered and discussed somewhat in the early part of the session, and we were told that we were going to suffer great inconvenience by staying here, that our health would be endangered, but that prophecy has not been fulfilled yet, and we have suffered no inconvenience whatever from the temperature. It has undoubtedly been observed by those who have taken an interest in the degrees of temperature during the heated term, that there is no material difference between Albany, Saratoga, Ogdensburgh and Montreal, so that in that respect it will make but very little difference. It is possible there may be some surroundings about Saratoga which may make it more pleasant and agreeable for gentlemen of the Convention, but I am clearly of the opinion, if we change from Albany to Saratoga, that the inconvenience of getting there, attending sessions and procuring the proper printing, and the difficulty of getting information we may seek from the departments at Albany, and the State library, will overbalance any benefit which may be derived from the change. I have heard no complaint from any gentlemen on this floor, so far, of any inconvenience; we are all well located here, and I think it is hardly worth while to go to Saratoga. I do not suppose that any considerable number would even think of going to the city of New York, for, as I understand it, even a majority of the delegates from New York city are desirous to go to Saratoga and not to New York city, and I do not suppose the amendment was seriously entertained, as I judge from the remarks of the gentleman who offered it [Mr. Develin], he himself is in favor of going to Saratoga, and it is natural that the residents of New York should desire to go to these watering places—

Mr. BARKER—Can the gentleman inform the Convention when the races will begin at Saratoga?

Mr. MERRITT—I shall leave that to those who desire to go there. I repeat again, there can be only one or two purposes in this resolution. One is to raise a committee for the purpose of reporting on the condition of things at Saratoga. Of course that would be a good advertisement, but I am opposed to making that advertisement an official document of this Convention. If I supposed that a majority of this Convention seriously entertained the idea of going to Saratoga, and really desired to get information, as to whether we could sit there more profitably, and shorten the session of this Convention, I should treat it in a different light, but I believe a majority of the Convention are opposed to going away from Albany and from our duty. One-half of what we call the heated term is already gone, and in a few weeks more we shall come to September, and then we shall suffer no inconvenience. I hope the vote will be taken on the merits of the question, and we shall allow no question of courtesy or discourtesy to come in.

Mr. TAPPEN—There are reasons why this motion should be reconsidered, and the chief reason is that the Convention may come to a direct vote on the question. There are also other reasons, why it should be reconsidered. If I remember right the history of Saratoga, it is classic ground, it is the site of great revolutionary struggles. More than that, it is the seat of learning, and it is the resort for the intellect, the wealth and the society of the State during this present season. It is a place where this Convention would have an admiring and appreciative audience at all times; it is a place where we shall meet the men of this State, who, because of their renown and intellect, are the gentlemen with whom the members of this Convention may desire to consult upon the subject of their deliberations. By voting to raise this committee, we do not decide, that we will go to Saratoga, but we merely give the gentlemen who contend, that this removal is most advantageous, an opportunity of reporting on that subject. One of the most eminent members of this Convention, says that New York would be the proper place to close the labors of this Convention, late in the season and perhaps he is right. I am not going to say that Albany is not the proper place to commence our labors, where we can get all our documents and papers, and Saratoga is the place to study them. I think, sir, we might do twice as much labor in one day in that place as we have done yet in our daily sessions in the city of Albany. Beside, sir, I am informed that Gen. Grant is to be there, and as he is to be the next President of the United States, it is eminently fit and proper for this Convention to go there. I can conceive of no stronger argument for the political majority, that I am aware of at the present time. The atmosphere and the conveniences of that place are particularly favorable to studying and to the performance of the peculiar duties this Convention has met to perform. I trust that the advocates of this removal will be allowed a fair chance by their committee to have this subject favorably reported on. In regard to the proposed house up there, I can say to the Convention from actual observation for the period of a few hours, I am inclined to think it will answer.

Mr. SILVESTER—Without intending to be discourteous at all to the gentleman who introduced this resolution, I think that the consideration or adoption of it will be inexpedient, and the first reason that suggests itself to my mind, is the question which was asked by the gentleman from Chautauque [Mr. Barker], as to when the races were to take place at Saratoga. We have been discussing the question of races for several days, and I think if we have an adjournment to Saratoga it may involve a second consideration of races, and this may indefinitely prolong the sessions of the Convention. And again, I think it is inexpedient, because time will inevitably be wasted in preparing suitably for the sessions of this Convention at any building in Saratoga which may be large enough for our reception. I admit all that has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] with respect to the public spirit of persons in Saratoga, who have offered the use of the Opera House there for the sessions of the Convention. But I believe, with all due deference to their public spiritedness, that the building would not be equally adapted to the sessions of this Convention and for the transaction of its business as the Capitol. We have here all the facilities for conducting our business, and there it would take some time to arrange the building so that business could be properly carried on. Again, sir, I think it is inexpedient that this Convention should become a migratory body. I think the question should be settled whether we are to be a traveling organization, or whether we are to be considered a body occupied in discussing constitutional questions, and framing a Constitution for the State. What will become of our reputation among the people of the State who have chosen us to transact this important business, if we authorize a committee to consider the propriety of adjourning to Saratoga. They will consider that we are more devoted to our own comfort, and to considering questions of pleasure excursions throughout the State, than for the transaction of the important business with which they have intrusted us. I hope this Convention will not render itself liable to the imputation of becoming a migratory body. But, sir, if this resolution is to be adopted, and this Convention is to be carried about for the observation and for the satisfaction of the people of the State, to be exhibited to them, I am not willing that it should be confined to Saratoga and New York. I wish the inhabitants of the western part of the State—of Niagara Falls—should have the opportunity of seeing this Convention. I wish the inhabitants of the sea coast to have the opportunity, and the inhabitants of my own county, and I propose that we also go to Lebanon Springs. If this body is to become a traveling organization I think it should be exhibited to the people of every part of the State of New York. And I wish that my own constituents of the county of Columbia should also have an opportunity of observing the deliberations of so distinguished a body as the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York.

Mr. KETCHAM—I was a little surprised, sir, the other day, at the motion to postpone this resolution. It seemed to me that common courtesy to the gentlemen from Saratoga, who have so liberally offered the Convention the use of a building there, demanded we should appoint a committee. No man who views the proposed room there, can fail to see that it is better adapted to the business of this Convention, than this room. And there are other reasoms and considerations besides the one of courtesy, which it seems to me should have prompted this Convention to appoint the committee. Those of us who were in the habit of seeing and hearing persons who have been in former legislatures, recollect their almost daily complaint of the internal inconvenience of this room. That there were no Committee rooms and they could not make any, that it was incomplete, dark and unhealthy; and later members of the Assembly assert it to be indispensable that some better accommodations should be provided for one hundred and twenty-eight men, as sitting in this room during the cool and bracing air of mid winter subjected members to disease and danger consequent upon their daily meetings here. It seems to me, sir, for that reason we should gladly avail ourselves of an opportunity of appointing a committee to ascertain whether the conveniences of meeting at Saratoga are not greater and better than here. From personal observation I am satisfied they are. From personal observation I know we may have a room there much more eligible than this one for the use of the Convention, we can have surrounding committee rooms, and the proprietor of the Opera House offers to prepare it for our daily sessions at any time, on two days' notice, with desks and all. With regard to the idea, that we shall bring ourselves into disrepute, and endanger the adoption of any Constitution we may make, by the people. I have too much faith in the good sense of my constituents to believe they would reject a Constitution because of the particular place where it was adopted. I think they have too much good common sense to reject any Constitution that I helped to frame while I was enjoying good health. If I thought they would reject a Constitution because I did not sacrifice my health in framing it, I would go home and stay there. I have no fears, sir, that the Constitution will be rejected, because it shall happen to be adopted in Saratoga instead of the city of Albany.

Mr. POND—It seems to me that the gentlemen who oppose this motion to reconsider, in some respects answer each other. The gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], suggests that there is no necessity for the appointment of a committee such as is contemplated by the resolution, the reconsideration of which has been moved. He says that the Convention must know all the circumstances bearing upon the question, because the newspapers have contained the information. Well, sir, I know that whatever a man finds in the newspapers must be true; and in that respect I agree with the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt]. But there are a great many members of this Convention who think that sometimes statements get into the newspapers that are not entirely true. They probably labor under error, and the gentleman from St. Lawrence is entirely correct, that whatever is published in newspapers is correct and safe, so that the Convention may rely upon it and base its action thereupon. But there are several gentlemen not so intelligent as the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] who have not relied upon what they found in the newspapers, and do not think it entirely reliable.

Mr. MERRITT—I intended by my remarks to intimate that whatever has been said in the papers is very favorable to Saratoga. It was put forth in their interests, and the proprietor of one of the hotels forwarded a circular to many members of this Convention, setting forth the reasons why we should go to Saratoga.

Mr. POND—I did not misunderstand the gentleman. I know very well the newspapers have represented this proposition, and have represented it favorably, but I was not aware until it was announced by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] that that was a sufficient basis upon which this Convention should act. On the contrary, I supposed that they would be acting a little more like a menagerie if they should adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], and base official action upon what they saw in the newspapers, and on a private communication from one of the hotel owners in Saratoga, sent to several members of this Convention. Although, sir, I may happen to know that the reasons given in the newspapers are true; although I may happen to know that the statement of the proprietor of the hotel is correct; I sir, for one, think it would be entirely improper for the members of this Convention, or the Convention itself to act upon that suggestion and go to Saratoga. The gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] answered the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt]; he says, notwithstanding the truthful statement of newspapers in this regard, and notwithstanding what this private circular may have stated to the members of this Convention, there is no place in Saratoga fit for the meeting of this Convention. Very well. It may be true as the gentleman from Columbia asserts; or it may be true as the newspapers have asserted; but what is the proper mode of ascertaining these facts by a Convention of gentlemen such as are assembled here? Why, the legitimate mode and proper mode is by the appointment of a committee; and I would not ask the gentlemen of this Convention to act upon any statement of mine in regard to the facilities which Saratoga has for facilitating the business of this Convention. I have not the assurance to do it.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. Pond] whether he has suffered any inconvenience here, except coming to this place—or whether the public business up to the present time has suffered in any way in consequence of holding our sessions in this Capitol.

Mr. POND—No, sir; I can answer the gentleman [Mr. Merritt] by saying that I have not been inconvenienced because I have adjourned to Saratoga every night since the sessions of this Convention have commenced, and therefore, I have had a partial advantage of gentlemen who have remained here. I have been informed that the water in Albany is bad; I can assure the gentleman that the water in Saratoga is very good, and they will find there every variety to satisfy the temperament and constitution of gentlemen here, on both and all sides of the question of races. [Laughter.] I assume, therefore, that upon this subject it is proper, before final action is had, a committee should be appointed; that that is the legitimate, the ordinary and parliamentary way; notwithstanding the weighty suggestion of my friend from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] who says that because the newspapers have said so and so, we may as well go to Saratoga without waiting for a committee to ascertain the facts. I suppose that the merits of the question upon this motion to reconsider, are not fairly before the Convention. It is enough, in order to have this committee appointed, to know there are many gentlemen in this Convention who are favorable to this proposition, without any considerations of "respect for the gentleman from Saratoga," requiring the appointment of this Committee. If it be ascertained, as I am informed it has been ascertained, by the votes taken on the original proposition and by the votes taken on the motion to lay upon the table, that there are a large number of the members of this Convention who are favorable to this proposition, I say then it is proper, without ridicule, without converting the members of this Convention into a "traveling menagerie," to appoint a committee in order to inquire into this question and make a report, and when the report has come in, our final action may be based upon it. Some gentleman has suggested that if we appoint this committee to inquire into the expediency of our going to Saratoga—if we receive a favorable report from that committee, and it is adopted, there will be danger that the people will mistake this body for a "traveling menagerie." So far as the suggestion of the gentleman is concerned, perhaps it is not right to say that the people have not a right to give this body what character they choose; but I am not afraid, for one, that any member of this Convention will be taken for an animal belonging to a menagerie, unless the evidence of the sense of sight forces gentlemen to come to that conclusion; and for one, I do not apprehend that any member will be in danger of any such conclusion being drawn. I do not think, Mr. President, that the manner in which this proposition has been treated is a fair one. The Legislature when they passed this law, evidently had in view this very proposition. They did not deem it desirable to the Convention nor to the people of the State which they represent, to put into the law a section or clause authorizing this specific thing. They did not anticipate the manner in which this proposition would be attempted to be defeated. They did not think of putting a clause into the law giving this Convention power to go to Saratoga. There have been a great many questions before the Convention as I have already said—

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Will the gentleman [Mr. Pond] give way for a moment, while I correct him.

Mr. POND—Certainly.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—The law provides as distinctly as possible against our going away from here. It says that "after the said Convention has met and organized, it shall have power to adjourn to and hold its meetings at any other place than the Assembly Chamber at the Capitol."

Mr. POND—I understand some learned gentlemen have looked over that statute, and that they find it prohibits the very thing it manifestly authorizes. I do not pay much attention to the dotting of "i's" and the crossing of "t's." It is manifest to every one who reads the law that it was placed there to allow the Convention to adjourn to another point elsewhere, and it is not common sense upon any other hypothesis or construction. It being there originally, and contemplating that a contingency might arise when it was proper for this Convention to go to Saratoga, and it being evidently the opinion of a large number of the members of this Convention that our sessions might be held there profitably to the health of the members of the Convention, and profitably to the Constitution which it is proposed to frame here, and thinking also that the sessions there will facilitate the business of this Convention—

Mr. MERRITT—I think the gentleman misrepresents the intent of the Legislature, for the reason that they provided for fitting up this chamber for the use of the Convention. Secondly, they provided that Congress Hall should not be removed until after the sessions of this Convention. They expected its sessions would be held here; but it was thought at the time that perhaps Twiddle Hall or some other room in this city would be more convenient to the members, and I know with that view some of the State officers took into consideration the propriety of renting Twiddle Hall for the sittings of this Convention, and after an examination they thought that this Chamber would answer all the conditions required. Whatever construction may be put on the law we should hold our sessions in this city and not out of it.

Mr. POND—I understand that the gentleman [Mr. Merritt], holds a public office here, and it will be convenient for him to remain here. When the Convention goes up to Saratoga we will let him come back and stay in Albany if he desires it. Mr. President, I will draw my remarks to a close after a while if I am permitted to. I say that it being manifest that the law was intended to allow the sessions of the Convention to be held at Saratoga or elsewhere, and it being deemed expedient by the Convention or by a large number of its members to hold a session there, it is but right and proper, without raising any question of courtesy, that the suggestions of those gentlemen be answered, by the appointment of a committee to examine into what way these very questions that have been suggested by gentlemen whether Saratoga Springs furnishes a good place for the sittings of this Convention, where the business may be facilitated, and where the health of the members may be consulted better than here, and also where the business of this Convention may be better performed than at this place.

Mr. DUGANNE—I yield to no man upon the floor of this Convention in desiring to extend proper courtesy on proper occasions to every delegate here; but I apprehend that courtesy and respect are also due to the people of this State, who sent us here to perform our business as business men, and not to be diverted from our duty by any temptations which are unworthy of business men. If I did not look upon this whole matter of the movement to adjourn to Saratoga, in a more serious light than some of the gentlemen appear to do, I should stigmatize it as a farce, and beneath the dignity of delegates to this Convention; but, unfortunately, without impugning the motives of any of the gentlemen here, I am constrained to look upon it as a Trojan horse, introduced into the Convention for the purpose of destroying it. It looks as if there was an inclination to belittle this Convention by belittling its action. I trust that the whole subject will now be deferred indefinitely, or until such time when we shall dispose of the true business of this Convention. We have wasted already this morning as we have wasted many mornings before, in unproductive discussion. Therefore, I now move that this entire subject be postponed until the 1st of September.

Mr. HALE—The first day of September is Sunday. Will the gentleman [Mr. Duganne] change the date.

Mr. DUGANNE—Yes, sir, I will make it Monday the 2nd of September.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Duganne, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Axtell, Barker, Barnard, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Church, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Duganne, C. O. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ferry, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Gould, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, Law, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Morris, Murphy, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, President, Rathbun, Root, Roy, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Silvester, Smith, Strong, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Wales, Wickham—67.

Noes—Messrs. Alvord, Baker, Ballard, Barto, Beadle, Beckwith, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Champlain, Chertree, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Daly, Develin, Eddy, Endress, Field, Folger, Frank, Fullerton, Grant, Graves, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hitchman, Huntington, Jarvis, Ketcham, Landon, Larremore, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, Monell, More, Nelson, Opdyke, Pond, Prosser, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, A. D. Russell, Schumaker, Sheldon, Sherman, Stratton, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Weed, Williams, Young—65.

Mr. BARNARD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention this day will take a recess from 2 o'clock, P. M., to 4 o'clock, P. M.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Barnard, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. HALE offered the following resolution, and asked that it be laid upon the table:

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed by the Chair to consider and report upon the mode of submission to the people, of the amendments to the constitution that may be proposed by the Convention, to report after the reports of all the standing committees shall have been received and acted on. And that all resolutions and motions upon the subject of submission be referred to such committee.

Which was laid on the table.

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that persons of African descent residing in the State of New York, are entitled to the same rights and immunities claimed by persons of European descent.

Which was laid on the table.

Mr. HITCHMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Tax Commissioners of the city of New York be instructed to report to this Convention, the value, in their judgment, of the real estate, in use in that city, by the various religious denominations, for the purpose of public worship; together with the assessed valuation of the same as returned to them, or the officers preceding them, charged with the duties they now perform, from the year 1847 up to the year when such property or real estate was exempted from taxation by Legislative enactment.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. CURTIS called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be requested to communicate to this Convention their proceedings under chapter 481 of the Laws of 1866, authorizing the sale of lands donated to this State by the United States.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Curtis, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. TAPPEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the people of this State are entitled to vote upon the question, "Shall the elective franchise be extended to men of color without a property qualification?" as a separate proposition; and that this Convention, with a proper regard for the rights and interests of the people, will submit such question to them, independent of the other provisions amendatory of the Constitution.

Mr. RATHBUN—Mr. Chairman—

The PRESIDENT—The question giving rise to debate, it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. TAPPEN—I rise to a question of order—

Mr. RATHBUN—I believe I have the floor. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. VEEDER—I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. The simple raising of a gentleman to propose a disposition of a resolution, carries it over as a matter of course, under the rule.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair so ruled.

Mr. TAPPEN—I propose to raise a question of order upon that very decision. At this late hour when we are about to adjourn there is very little time to debate. There is enough time, however, to state the question of order. During this morning when a resolution similar in effect was offered, bearing upon a question then pending, to wit: the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, I understood the President to hold, that although it was a debatable resolution it did not go over to to-morrow morning, under the second subdivision of Rule 29, it being germane to the subject then before the Convention, or about to be before it.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Tappen] that it put its decision on the ground that the resolution related to the business of the day. The Chair does not so understand this resolution of the gentleman.

Mr. TAPPEN — The business which I understood the Chair to intimate, was the business of the day, was the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, which was to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT — Does the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Tappen] appeal from the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. TAPPEN — I do not sir.

Mr. GRAVES — A few days since I presented to the Convention a resolution on the subject of women's rights. That resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is it in order to call up that resolution for discussion?

The PRESIDENT — The Chair holds it is not.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Auditor of the Canal Department transmitting a report of the number of breaks in the Erie Canal in response to a resolution adopted by the Convention on the 11th inst.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCHUMAKER called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State report to this Convention the member of leases or grants given by the State or Commissioners of the Land Office, which are still outstanding and unexpired, the names of the lessees or grantees, the rental, and a brief description of such property.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Schumaker, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOLGER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That after this day, debate in Committee of the Whole and in Convention, upon the report of the Committee upon the Rights of Suffrage, etc., be so confined as that a member may speak but once to any amendment, and but twenty minutes at a time.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Folger, and it was declared adopted.

On motion of Mr. VEEDER the Convention took a recess till 4 o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock.

The Convention resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD of Onondaga in the Chair.

The Chairman announced the question to be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight.]

Mr. CURTIS offered the following amendment:

"In the first section, strike out the word 'male,' and wherever in that section the word 'he' occurs, add 'or she,' and wherever the word 'his' occurs add 'or her.'"

Mr. CURTIS — In proposing a change so new to our political practice, but so harmonious with the spirit and principles of our government, it is only just that I should attempt to show that it is neither repugnant to reason nor hurtful to the State. Yet I confess some embarrassment, for while the essential reason of my proposition seems to me to be clearly defined, the objection to it is vague and shadowy. From the formal opening of the general discussion of the question in this country, by the Convention at Seneca Falls, in 1848, down to the present moment, the opposition to the suggestion, so far as I am acquainted with it, has been only the repetition of a traditional prejudice, or the protest of mere sentimentality, and to cope with these is like wrestling with a malaria or arguing with the east wind. I do not know why the committee have changed the phrase male inhabitant or citizen, which is uniformly used in a constitutional clause limiting the elective franchise. Under the circumstances, the word "man" is obscure and undoubtedly includes women as much as the word "mankind." But the intention of the clause is evident and the report of the committee makes it indisputable. Had the committee been willing to say directly what they say indirectly, the eighth line and what follows, would read: "Provided that idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship, felons, women, and persons convicted of bribery, etc., shall not be entitled to vote." In their report, the committee omit to tell us why they politically class the women of New York with idiots and criminals. They assert merely, that the general enfranchisement of women would be a novelty, which is true of every step of political progress and is therefore a presumption in its favor, and they speak of it in a phrase which is intended to stigmatize it as unwomanly, which is simply an assumption and a prejudice. I wish to know, sir, and I ask in the name of the political justice and consistency of this State, why it is that half of the adult population, as vitally interested in good government as the other half, who own property, manage estates and pay taxes, who discharge all the duties of good citizens and are perfectly intelligent and capable, are absolutely deprived of political power, and classed with lunatics and felons. The boy will become a man and a voter; the lunatic may emerge from the cloud and resume his rights; the idiot, plastic under the tender hand of modern science, may be moulded into the full citizen; the criminal whose hand still drips with the blood of his country and of liberty, may be pardoned and restored. But no age, no wisdom, no peculiar fitness, no public service, no effort, no desire can remove from women this enormous and extraordinary disability. Upon what reasonable grounds does it rest? Upon none whatever. It is contrary to natural justice, to the acknowledged and traditional principles of the American government, and to the most enlightened political philosophy. The absolute exclusion of women from political power in this State is simply usurpation. "In every age and country" says the historian Gibbon, nearly a hundred years ago "the wiser or at least the stronger of the two sexes, has usurped the powers of the State and confined the other to the cares and pleasures of domestic life." The historical fact is that the usurping class, as

Gibbon calls them, have always regulated the position of women by their own theories and convenience. The barbaric Persian, for instance, punished an insult to the woman with death, not because of her but of himself. She was part of him. And the civilized English Blackstone only repeats the barbaric Persian when he says that the wife and husband form but one person—that is the husband. Sir, it would be extremely amusing, if it were not tragical, to trace the consequences of this theory on human society and the unhappy effect upon the progress of civilization of this morbid estimate of the importance of men. Gibbon gives a curious instance of it, and an instance, which recalls the spirit of the modern English laws of divorce. There was a temple in Rome to the Goddess who presided over the peace of marriages. "But," says the historian, "Her very name Viriplaca—the appeaser of husbands, shows that repentance and submission were always expected from the wife,"—as if the offense usually came from her. In the "Lawe's resolution of Women's Rights" published in the year 1632, a book which I have not seen, but of which there are copies in the country, the anonymous and quaint author says and with a sly satire: "It is true that man and woman are one person, but understand in what manner. When a small brooke or little river incorporateth with Rhodanus, Humber or the Thames, the poor rivulet loseth her name: it is carried and recarried with the new associate: it beareth no away—it possesseth nothing during coverture. A woman as soon as she is married, is called covert: in Latine nupta—that is, veiled; as it were overclouded and shadowed; she hath lost her streame. I may more truly farre away, say to a married woman, her new self is her superior; her companion her master. * * See here the reason of that which I touched before—that women have no voice in Parliament; they make no laws; they consent to none; they abrogate none. All of them are understood either married or to be married, and their desires are to their husbands."

From this theory of ancient society that woman is absorbed in man, that she is a social inferior and a subordinate part of man, springs the system of laws in regard to woman which in every civilized country is now in course of such rapid modification, and it is this theory which so tenaciously lingers as a traditional prejudice in our political customs. But a State which like New York recognizes the equal individual rights of all its members, declaring that none of them shall be disfranchised unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers, and which acknowledges women as property holders and taxable, responsible citizens, has wholly renounced the old Feudal and Pagan theory, and has no right to continue the evil condition which springs from it. The honorable and eloquent gentleman from Onondaga said that he favored every enlargement of the franchise consistent with the safety of the State. Sir, I heartily agree with him, and it was the duty of the committee in proposing to continue the exclusion of women, to show that it is necessary to the welfare and safety of the State that the whole sex shall be disfranchised.

It is in vain for the Committee to say that I ask for an enlargement of the franchise and must therefore show the reason. Sir, I show the reason upon which this franchise itself rests, and which, in its very nature, forbids arbitrary exclusion; and I urge the enfranchisement of women on the ground that whatever political rights men have, women have equally. I have no wish to refine curiously upon the origin of government. If any one insists with the honorable gentleman from Broome that there are no such things as natural political rights and that no man is born a voter, I will not now stop to argue with him, but as I believe the honorable gentleman from Broome is by profession a physician and surgeon, I will suggest to him that if no man is born a voter, no man is born a man—for every man is born a baby. But he is born with the right of becoming a man without hindrance; and I ask the honorable gentleman, as an American citizen and political philosopher, whether, if every man is not born a voter, he is not born with the right of becoming a voter upon equal terms with other men? What else is the meaning of the phrase which I find in the New York Tribune of Monday, and have so often found there. "The radical basis of government is equal rights for all citizens." There are, as I think, we shall all admit, some kind of natural rights. This summer air that breathes benignant around our national anniversary, is vocal with the traditional eloquence with which those rights were asserted by our fathers. From all the burning words of the time I quote those of Alexander Hamilton, of New York, in reply, as my honorable friend the chairman of the committee will remember, to the tory farmer of Westchester: "The sacred rights of mankind are not to be rummaged for among old parchments or dusty records. They are written as with a sunbeam in the whole volume of human nature by the hand of the Divinity itself, and can never be erased or obscured by mortal power." In the next year, Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, summed up the political faith of our fathers in the great declaration. Its words vibrate through the history of those days. As the lyre of Amphion raised the walls of the city, so they are the music which sing course after course of the ascending structure of American civilization into its place. Our fathers stood indeed upon technical and legal grounds when the contest with Great Britain began, but as tyranny encroached they rose naturally into the sphere of fundamental truths as into a purer air. Driven by storms beyond sight of land the sailor steers by the stars. Our fathers derived their government from what they called self-evident truths. Despite the brilliant and vehement eloquence of Mr. Choate, they did not deal in glittering generalities, and the Declaration of Independence was not the passionate manifesto of a revolutionary war, but a calm and simple statement of a new political philosophy and practice. The rights which they declared to be unalienable are indeed what are usually called natural, as distinguished from political rights, but they are not limited by sex. A woman has the same right to her life, liberty and property, that a man has, and she has consequently the same right to an equality of protection that he has; and this, as I understand it, is what is meant by the phrase, the right of suffrage. If I have a natural right to that hand, I have an equal natural right to everything that secures to me its use, provided it does not harm the equal right of another; and if I have a natural right to my life and liberty, I have the same right to everything that protects that life and liberty which any other man enjoys. I should like my honorable friend, the chairman of this committee, to show me any right which God gave him which he also gave to me, for which God gave him a claim to any defense which he has not given to me. And I ask the same question for every woman in this State. Have they less natural right to life, liberty and property, than my honorable friend the chairman of the committee—and is it not, to quote the words of his report, an extremely “defensible theory,” that he cannot justly deprive the least of those women of any protection of those rights which he claims for himself? No, sir, the natural, or what we call civil right and its political defense, go together. This was the impregnable logic of the revolution. Lord Gower sneered in Parliament at the Colonists a century ago as Mr. Robert Lowe sneers at the reformers to-day. “Let the Americans talk about their natural and divine rights.” “I am for enforcing these measures.” Dr. Johnson bellowed across the Atlantic “Taxation, no Tyranny,” James Otis spoke for America for common sense, and for the eternal justice, in saying: “no good reason however can be given in any country, why every man of a sound mind should not have his vote in the election of a representative. If a man has had but little property to protect and defend, yet his life and liberty are things of some importance.” And long before James Otis, Lord Somers said to a Committee of the House of Commons, that the possession of the vote is the only true security which an Englishman has for the possession of his life and property. Every person, then, is born with an equal claim to every kind of protection of his natural rights which any other person enjoys. The practical question therefore is how shall this protection be best attained; and this is the question of government which, according to the Declaration, is established for the security of these rights. The British theory was that they could better be secured by an intelligent few than by the ignorant and passionate multitude. Goldsmith expressed it on singing:

That those who think must govern those who toll.”

Nobody denies that the government of the best is the best government, the practical question is how to find the best, and common sense replied:

“The good, tis true, are heaven’s peculiar care,
But who but heaven shall show us who they are.”

And our fathers answered the question of the best and surest protection of natural right by their famous phrase, “the consent of the governed.” That is to say, since every man is born with equal natural rights, he is entitled to an equal protection of them with all other men; and since government is that protection, right reason and experience alike demand that every person shall have a voice in the government upon perfectly equal and practicable terms—that is upon terms which are not necessarily and absolutely insurmountable by any part of the people. These terms cannot rightfully be arbitrary. But the argument of the honorable gentleman from Schenectady, whose lucid and dignified discourse needs no praise of mine, and the arguments of others who have derived government from society, seemed to assume that the political people may exclude and include at their pleasure: that they may establish purely arbitrary tests, such as height, or weight, or color, or sex. This was substantially the squatter sovereignty of Mr. Douglas, who held that the male white majority of the settlers in a territory might deprive a colored minority of all their rights whatever; and he declared that they had the right to do it. The same right that this Convention has to hang me at this moment to that chandelier, but no other right. Brute force, sir, may do anything; but we are speaking of rights, and of rights under this government, and I deny that the people of the State of New York can rightfully, that is, according to right reason and the principles of this government derived from it, permanently exclude any class of persons or any person whatever from a voice in the government, unless it can be clearly established that their participation in political power would be dangerous to the State; and therefore, the honorable gentleman from Kings was logically correct in opposing the disfranchisement of the colored man, upon the ground that they were an inferior race, of limited intelligence, a kind of Chimpanzee at best. I think, sir, the honorable and scholarly gentleman—even he—will admit that at Fort Pillow, at Milliken’s Bend, at Fort Wagner, the Chimpanzees did uncommonly well; yes, sir, as gloriously and immortally as our own fathers at Bunker Hill and Saratoga. “There ought to be no Pariahs,” says John Stuart Mill, “in a full grown and civilized nation; no persons disqualified except through their own default. * * Every one is degraded, whether aware of it or not, when other people, without consulting him, take upon themselves unlimited power to regulate his destiny.” “No arrangement of the suffrage, therefore, can be permanently satisfactory in which any person or class is peremptorily excluded; in which the electoral privilege is not open to all persons of full age who desire it.” (Rep. G., p. 167.) And Thomas Hare, one of the acutest of living political thinkers, says that in all cases where a woman fulfills the qualification which is imposed upon a man, “there is no sound reason for excluding her from the Parliamentary franchise. The exclusion is probably a remnant of the feudal law, and is not in harmony with the other civil institutions of the country. There would be great propriety in celebrating a reign which has been productive of so much moral benefit by the abolition of an anomaly which is so entirely without any justifiable foundation.” (Hare, p. 280.) The Chairman of the committee asked Miss Anthony the other evening whether, if suffrage were a natural right, it could be denied to children? Her answer seemed to me perfectly satisfactory. She said simply “all that we ask is an equal and not an arbitrary regulation. If you have the right, we have it." The honorable Chairman would hardly deny that to regulate the exercise of a right according to obvious reason and experience is one thing, to deny it absolutely and forever is another. The safe practical rule of our Government, as James Madison expressed it, is that "it be derived from the great body of the people, not from an inconsiderable portion or favored class of it." When Mr. Gladstone, in his famous speech that startled England, said, in effect, that no one could be justly excluded from the franchise, except upon grounds of personal unfitness or public danger, he merely echoed the sentiment of Joseph Warren, which is gradually seen to be the wisest and most practical political philosophy: "I would have such a government as should give every man the greatest liberty to do what he chooses, consistent with restraining him from doing any injury to another." Is not that the kind of government, sir, which we wish to propose for this State? And if every person in New York has a natural right to life, liberty and property, and a co-existent right to a share in the government which defends them, regulated only by perfectly equitable conditions, what are the practical grounds upon which it is proposed to continue the absolute and hopeless disfranchisement of half the adult population? It is alleged that they are already represented by men. Where are they so represented, and when was the choice made? If I am told that they are virtually represented, I reply with James Otis that "no such phrase as virtual representation is known in law or Constitution. It is altogether a subtlety and illusion, wholly unfounded and absurd." I repeat, if they are represented, when was the choice made? Nobody pretends that they have ever been consulted. It is a mere assumption to the effect that the interest and affection of men in women will lead them to just and wise legislation for women on their own behalf. This is merely the old assumption of the political power of a class. It is just what the British Parliament said to the colonies a century ago. "We are all under the same sky," they said, "our interests are identical, all British subjects. Minerva rules the wave; the King rules the land with sedition and anarchy." The colonies chafed and indignantly repudiated the assumption that their laws were made for themselves what was the truth that shakes the tory and the Whig already brought this same class of citizens, safely be intrusted with the exclusive possession of the franchise, an instance on record," of civilization in exercising power without regard to a class as it is a class of property enough, nor enough, to legislate for the most civilized men. The legislative class. In the marriage amendment, Gladstone said that "when the gospel came into the world woman was elevated to an equality with her stronger companion." Yet at the very time he was speaking, the English law of divorce, made by men to regulate their domestic relations with women, was denounced by the law lords themselves, as "disgusting and demoralizing" in its operation; "barbarous," "indecent," "a disgrace to the country," and "shocking to the sense of right." Now, if the equality of which Mr. Gladstone spoke had been political as well as sentimental, does he or any statesman suppose that the law of divorce would have been what it then was, or that the law of England to-day would give all the earnings of a married woman to her husband; or that of France forbid a woman to receive any gift without her husband's permission? We ask women to confide in us, as having the same interests with them. Did any despot ever say anything else? And if it be safe or proper for any intelligent part of the people to relinquish exclusive political power to any class, I ask the committee who propose that women should be compelled to do this, to what class, however rich or intelligent, or honest, they would themselves surrender their power? and what they would do if any class attempted to usurp that power? They know as we all know, as our own experience has taught us, that the only security of natural right is the ballot. They know, and the instinct of the whole loyal land knows, that when we had abolished slavery, the emancipation could be completed and secured only by the ballot, in the hands of the emancipated class. Civil rights were a mere mocking name until political power gave them substance. A year ago Governor Orr, of South Carolina told us that the rights of the freedmen were safest in the hands of their old masters. "Will you walk into my parlor, said the spider to the fly." New Orleans, Memphis and countless and constant crimes showed what that safety was. Then, hesitating no longer, the nation handed the ballot to the freedmen, and said "protect yourselves!" And now Governor Orr says that the part of wisdom for South Carolina is to cut loose from all parties and make a cordial alliance with the colored citizens. Governor Orr knows that a man with civil rights merely is a blank cartridge. Give him the ballot, and you add a bullet, and make him effective. In that section of the country, seething with old hatreds and wounded pride and a social system upheaved from the foundation, no other measure could have done for real pacification in a century what the mere promise of the ballot has done in a year. The one formidable peril in the whole subject of reconstruction has been the chance that Congress would continue in the Southern States the political power in the hands of a class, as the report of the committee proposes that we shall do in New York. I do not forget the progressive legislation of New York in regard to the rights of women. The property bill of 1860 and its supplement, according to the New York Tribune, redeemed five thousand women from pauperism. In the next year Illinois put women in the same position with men as far as property rights and remedies are concerned. I mention these facts with pleasure, as I read that Louis Napoleon will, under certain conditions, permit the French people to say what they think. But if such reforms are desirable they would have been sooner effected could woman have been a positive political power. Upon this point one honorable gentleman asked Miss Anthony whether the laws both for men and women were not constantly improving, and whether, therefore, it was not unfair to attribute the character of the laws about women to the fact that men made them. The reply is very evident. If women alone made the laws, legislation for both men and women would undoubtedly be progressive. Does the honorable gentleman think, therefore, that woman only should make the laws? It is not true, Mr. Chairman, that in the ordinary and honorable sense of the words women are represented. Laws are made for them by another class and upon the theories which that class, without the fear of political opposition, may choose to entertain, and in direct violation of the principles upon which, in their own case, they tenaciously insist. I live, sir, in the county of Richmond. It has a population of some 27,000 persons. They own property and manage it. They are taxed and pay their taxes, and they fulfill the duties of citizens with average fidelity. But if the committee had introduced a clause into the section they propose to this effect: "Provided that idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship, felons, inhabitants of the county of Richmond and persons convicted of bribery, shall not be entitled to vote"—they would not have proposed a more monstrous injustice nor a grosser inconsistency with every fundamental right and American principle than in the clause they recommend, and in that case, sir, what do you suppose would have been my reception had I returned to my friends and neighbors, and had said to them, "the Convention thinks that you are virtually represented by the voters of Westchester and Chautauqua." Mr. Chairman, I have no superstition about the ballot. I do not suppose it would immediately right all the wrongs of women, any more than it has righted all those of men. But what external agency has righted so many? Here are thousands of miserable men all around us; but they have every path opened to them; they have their advocates; they have their votes; they make the laws, and at last and at worst they have their strong right hands. And here are thousands of miserable women pricking back death and dishonor with a little needle, and now the sly hand of science stealing that little needle away. The ballot does not make those men happy, nor respectable, nor rich, nor noble. But they guard it for themselves with sleepless jealousy, because they know it is the golden gate to every opportunity; and precisely the kind of advantage it gives to one sex, it would give to the other. It would arm it with the most powerful weapon known to political society; it would maintain the natural balance of the sexes in human affairs, and secure to each fair play within its sphere. But, sir, the committee tell us that the suffrage of women would be a revolutionary innovation—it would disturb the venerable traditions. Well, sir, about the year 1790, women were first recognised as school teachers in Massachusetts. At that time the New England "schoolmarm" and I use the word with affectionate respect, was a revolutionary innovation. She has been abroad ever since, and has been by no means the least efficient, but always the most modest and unnoticed of the great civilizing influences in this country. Innovation,—why, sir, when Sir Samuel Romilly proposed to abolish the death penalty for stealing a handkerchief, the law officers of the Crown said it would endanger the whole criminal law of England. When the bill abolishing the slave trade passed the House of Lords, Lord St. Vincent rose and stalked out, declaring that he washed his hands of the ruin of the British Empire. When the Greenwich pensioners saw the first steamer upon the Thames, they protested that they did not like the steamer, for it was contrary to nature. When, at the close of the reign of Charles II, London had half a million of people, there was a fierce opposition to street lamps. Such is the hostility of venerable traditions to an increase of light. When Mr. Jefferson learned that New York had explored the route of a canal, he benignly regarded it, in the spirit of our committee, as doubtless "defensible in theory," for he said that it was "a very fine project, and might be executed a century hence." And fifty-six years ago, Chancellor Livingston wrote from this city that the proposition of a railroad, shod with iron, to move heavy weights four miles an hour, was ingenious, perhaps "theoretically defensible," but upon the whole the road would not be so cheap or convenient as a canal. In this country, sir, the venerable traditions are used to being disturbed. America was clearly designed to be a disturber of traditions, and to leave nobler precedents than she found. So, a few months ago, what the committee call a revolutionary innovation was proposed by giving the ballot to the freedmen in the District of Columbia. The awful results of such a revolution were duly set forth in one of the myriad veto messages of the President of the United States. But they have voted. If anybody proposed to disturb the election, it was certainly not the new voters. The election was perfectly peaceful, and not one of the Presidential pangs has been justified. So with this reform. It is new, in the extent proposed. It is as new as the harvest after the sowing, and it is as natural. The resumption of rights, long denied or withheld, never made a social convulsion. That is produced by refusing them. The West Indian slaves received their liberty, praying, upon their knees; and the influence of the enfranchisement of women will glide into society as noiselessly as the dawn increases into day. Or shall I be told that women, if not numerically counted at the polls, do yet exert an immense influence upon politics, and do not really need the ballot. If this argument were seriously urged, I should suffer my eyes to rove through this chamber and they would show me many honorable gentlemen of reputed political influence. May they, therefore, be properly and justly disfranchised? I ask the honorable chairman of the committee, whether he thinks that a citizen should have no vote because he has influence? What gives influence? Ability, intelligence, honesty. Are these to be excluded from the polls? Is it only stupidity, ignorance and rasality which ought to possess political power? Or will it be said that women do not want the ballot and ought to be asked? And upon what principle ought they to be asked? When natural rights or their means of defense have been immemorably denied to a large class, does humanity, or justice, or good sense require that they should be registered and called to vote upon their own restoration? Why, Mr. Chairman, it might as well be said that Jack the Giant Killer ought to have gravely asked the captives in the ogre's dungeon whether they wished to be released. It must be assumed that men and women wish to enjoy their natural rights, as that the eyes wish light or the lungs an atmosphere. Did we wait for emancipation until the slaves petitioned to be free? No, sir, all our lives had been passed in ingenious and ignominious efforts to sophisticate and sully ourselves for keeping them chained; and when war gave us a legal right to snap their bonds, we did not ask them whether they preferred to remain slaves. We knew that they were men, and that men by nature walk upright, and if we find them bent and crawling, we know that the posture is unnatural whether they may think so or not. In the case of women we acknowledge that they have the same natural rights as ourselves—we see that they hold property and pay taxes, and we must of necessity suppose that they wish to enjoy every security of those rights that we possess. So when in this State, every year, thousands of boys come of age, we do not solemnly require them to tell us whether they wish to vote. We assume, as of course, that they do, and we say to them, "go, and upon the same terms with the rest of us, vote as you choose." But gentlemen say that they know a great many women who do not wish to vote, who think it is not lady-like or whatever the proper term may be. Well, sir, I have known many men who habitually abstained from politics because they were so "ungentlemanly" and who thought that no man could touch pitch without defilement. Now, what would the honorable gentlemen who know women who do not wish to vote, have thought of a proposition that I should not vote, because my neighbors did not wish to? There may have been slaves who preferred to remain slaves—was that an argument against freedom? Suppose there are a majority of the women of this State who do not wish to vote,—is that a reason for depriving one woman who is taxed, of her equal representation? or one innocent person of the equal protection of his life and liberty? The amendment proposes no compulsion like the old New England law, which fined every voter who did not vote. If there are citizens of the State who think it unlady-like or ungentlemanlike to take their part in the government, let them stay at home. But do not, I pray you, give them authority to detain wiser and better citizens from their duty. But I shall be told, in the language of the report of the committee, that the proposition is openly at war with the distribution of functions and duties between the sexes. Translated into English, Mr. Chairman, this means that it is unwomanly to vote. Well, sir, I know that at the very mention of the political rights of women, there arises in many minds a dreadful vision of a mighty exodus of the whole female world, in bloomers and spectacles, from the nursery and kitchen, to the polls. It seems to be thought that if women practically took part in politics, the home would instantly be left a howling wilderness of cradles and a chaos of undarned stockings and buttonless shirts. But how is it with men? Do they desert their workshops, their plows and offices, to pass their time at the polls? Is it a credit to a man to be called a professional politician? The pursuits of men in the world, to which they are directed by the natural aptitude of sex and to which they must devote their lives, are as foreign from political functions as those of women. To take an extreme case. There is nothing more incompatible with political duties in cooking and taking care of children than there is in digging ditches or making shoes, or in any other necessary employment, while in every superior interest of society growing out of the family, the stake of women is not less than men, and their knowledge is greater. In England, a woman who owns shares in the East India Company may vote. In this country she may vote, as a stockholder, upon a railroad from one end of the country to another. But if she sells her stock and buys a house with the money, she has no voice in the laying out of the road before her door, which her house is taxed to keep and pay for. And why, in the name of good sense if a responsible human being may vote upon specific industrial projects may she not vote upon the industrial regulation of the State? There is no more reason that men should assume to decide participation in politics to be unwomanly than that women should decide for men that it is unmanly. It is not our prerogative to keep women feminine. I think, sir, they may be trusted to defend the delicacy of their own sex. Our success in managing ours has not been so conspicuous that we should urgently desire more labor of the same kind. Nature is quite as wise as we. Whatever their sex incapacitates women from doing they will not do. Whatever duty is consistent with their sex and their relation to society, they will properly demand to do until they are permitted. When the committee declare that voting is at war with the distribution of functions between the sexes, what do they mean? Are not women as much interested in good government as men? Has the mother less at stake in equal laws honestly administered than the father? There is fraud in the Legislature; there is corruption in the courts; there are hospitals, and tenement houses, and prisons; there are gambling-houses, and billiard-rooms, and brothels; there are grog-shops at every corner, and I know not what enormous proportion of crime in the State proceeds from them; there are forty thousand drunkards in the State, and their hundreds of thousands of children—all these things are subjects of legislation, and under the exclusive legislation of men the crime associated with all these things becomes vast and complicated,—have the wives and mothers and sisters of New York less vital interest in them, less practical knowledge of them and their proper treatment, than the husbands and fathers? No man is so insane as to pretend it. Is there then any natural incapacity in women to understand politics? It is not asserted. Are they lacking in the necessary intelligence? But the moment that you erect a standard of intelligence which is sufficient to exclude women as a sex, that moment most of their amiable fellow citizens in trowers would be disfranchised. Is it that they ought not to go to public political meetings? But we earnestly invite them. Or that they should not go to the polls? Some polls, I allow, in the larger cities, are dirty and dangerous places, and those it is the duty of the police to reform. But no decent man wishes to vote in a grog-shop, nor to have his head broken while he is doing it, while the mere act of dropping a ballot in a box is about the simplest, shortest and cleanest that can be done. Last winter Senator Frelinghuysen, repeating, I am sure thoughtlessly, the common rhetoric of the question spoke of the high and holy mission of women. But if people, with a high and holy mission, may innocently sit bare-necked in hot theaters to be studied through pocket telescopes until midnight by any one who chooses, how can their high and holy mission be harmed by their quietly dropping a ballot in a box. But if women vote, they must sit on juries. Why not? Nothing is plainer than that thousands of women who are tried every year as criminals are not tried by their peers. And if a woman is bad enough to commit a heinous crime, must we absurdly assume that women are too good to know that there is such a crime? If they may not sit on juries, certainly they ought not to be witnesses. A note in Howell's State Trials to which my attention was drawn by one of my distinguished colleagues in the Convention, quotes an ancient work, "Probation by witnesses," by Sir George Mackenzie, in which he says, "The reason why women are excluded from witnessing must be either that they are subject to too much compassion and so ought not to be more received in criminal cases than in civil cases; or else the law was unwilling to trouble them and thought it might learn them too much confidence and make them subject to too much familiarity with men and strangers, if they were necessitated to vague up and down at all courts upon all occasions." Hume says this rule was held as late as the beginning of the eighteenth century. But if too much familiarity with men be so pernicious, are men so pure that they alone should make laws for women, and so honorable that they alone should try women for breaking them? It is within a very few years at the Liverpool Assizes in a case involving peculiar evidence that Mr. Russell said: "The evidence of women is, in some respects, superior to that of men. Their power of judging of minute details is better, and when there are more than two facts and something be wanting, their intuitions supply the deficiency." "And precisely the qualities which fit them to give evidence," says Mrs. Dall to whom we owe this fact "fit them to sift and test it." But the objectors continue, would you have women hold office? If they are capable and desirous, why not? They hold office now most acceptably. In my immediate neighborhood a postmistress has been so faithful an officer for seven years, that when there was a rumor of her removal, it was a matter of public concern. This is a familiar instance in this country. Scott's "Antiquary" shows that a similar service was not unknown in Scotland. In Notes and Queries ten years ago (vol. II, sec. 2, 1856, pp. 83, 204), Alexander Andrews says: "It was by no means unusual for females to serve the office of overseer in small rural parishes," and a communication on the same publication (1st series vol. II, p. 383), speaks of a curious entry in the Harleian Miscellany (MS. 980, fol. 153.) * The Countess of Richmond, mother to Henry VII, was a Justice of the Peace. Mr. Attorney said if it was so, it ought to have been by commission, for which he had made many an hower's search for the record, but could never find it, but he had seen many arbitrments that were made by her. Justice Jones affirmed that he had often heard from his mother of the Lady Bartlett, mother to the Lord Bartlett, that she was a Justice of the Peace, and did set usually upon the bench with the other Justices in Gloucestershire; that she was made so by Queen Mary, upon her complaint to her of the injuries she sustained by some of that county, and desiring for redress thereof; that as she, herself, was Chief-Justice of all England, so this lady might be in her own county, which accordingly the Queen granted. Another example was alleged of one — Rowse, in Suffolk, who usually at the assizes and sessions there held, set upon the bench among the Justices gladio cincta." The Countess of Pembroke, was hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland, and exercised her office. Henry the Eighth granted a Commission of inquiry, under the great seal, to Lady Ann Berkeley, who opened it at Gloucester and passed sentence under it. Henry Eighth's daughter, Elizabeth Tudor, was Queen of England, in name and in fact, during the most illustrious epoch of English history. Was Elizabeth incompetent? Did Elizabeth unsex herself? Or do you say she was an exceptional woman? So she was, but no more an exceptional woman than Alfred, Marcus Aurelius or Napoleon were exceptional men. It was held by some of the old English writers that a woman might serve in almost any of the great offices of the Kingdom. And indeed if Victoria may deliberate in council with her ministers, why may not any intelligent English woman deliberate in Parliament or any such American woman in Congress? The whole history of the voting, and office holding of women shows that whenever men's theories of the relation of property to the political franchise—or of the lineal succession of the government, requires that women shall vote or hold office, the objection of impropriety and incapacity wholly disappears. If it be unwomanly for a woman to vote, or to hold office, it is unwomanly for Victoria to be Queen of England. Surely if our neighbors had thought they would be better represented in this Convention by certain women, there is no good reason why they should have been compelled to send us. Why should I or any person be forbidden to select the agent whom we think most competent and truly representative of our will? There is no talent or training required in the making of laws which is peculiar to the male sex. What is needed is intelligence, and experience. The rest is routine. The capacity for making laws is necessarily assumed when women are permitted to hold and manage property and to submit to taxation. How often the woman, widowed or married or single, is the guiding genius of the family—educating the children, directing the estate, originating, counseling, deciding. Is there anything essentially different in such duties and the powers necessary to perform them from the functions of legislation? In New Jersey the Constitution of 1776 admitted to vote all inhabitants of a certain age, residence and property. In 1797, in an act to regulate elections, the ninth section provides: "Every voter shall openly and in full view, deliver his or her ballot, which shall be a single written ticket, containing the names of the persons for whom he or she votes." An old citizen of New Jersey says that "the right was recognized and very little said or thought about it in any way." But in 1807 the suffrage was restricted to white male adult citizens of a certain age, residence and property, and in 1844 the property qualification was abolished. At the hearing before the committee, the other evening, a gentleman asked whether the change of the qualification excluding women did not show that their voting was found to be inconvenient or undesirable. Not at all. It merely showed that the male property holders outvoted the female. It certainly showed nothing as to the right or expediency of the voting of women. Mr. Douglas as I said, had a theory that the white male adult squatters in a territory might decide whether the colored people in the territory should be enslaved. They might, indeed, so decide, and with adequate power, they might enforce their decision. But it proved very little as to the right, the expediency or the constitutionality of slavery in a territory. The truth is that men deal with the practical question of female suffrage to suit their own purposes. About twenty-five years ago the Canadian government by statute rigorously and in terms forbade women to vote. But in 1850, to subserve a sectarian purpose they were permitted to vote for school trustees. I am ashamed to argue a point so plain. What public affairs need in this State is "conscience," and woman is the conscience of the race. If we in this Convention shall make a wise Constitution, if the Legislatures that follow us in this chamber shall purify the laws and see that they are honestly executed, it will be just in the degree that we shall have accustomed ourselves to the refined, moral and mental atmosphere in which women habitually converse. But would you, seriously, I am asked, would you drag women down into the mire of politics? No, sir, I would have them lift us out of it. The duty of this Convention is to devise means for the purification of the government of this State. Now the science of government is not an ignoble science, and the practice of politics is not necessarily mean and degrading. If the making and administering of law has become so corrupt as to justify calling politics filthy, and a thing with which no clean hands can meddle without danger, may we may not wisely remember as we begin our work of purification, that politics have been wholly managed by men? How can we purify them? Is there no radical method, no force yet untried, a power not only of skillful checks which I do not undervalue, but of controlling character. Mr. Chairman, if we sat in this chamber with closed windows until the air became thick and fetid, should we not be fools if we brought in deodorizers—if we sprinkled chloride of lime and burned asafetida, while we disdained the great purifier? If we would cleanse the foul chamber, let us throw the windows wide open and the sweet summer air would sweep all impurity away and fill our lungs with fresher life. If we would purge politics let us turn upon them the great stream of the purest human influence we know. But I hear some one say, if they vote they must do military duty. Undoubtedly, when a nation goes to war, it may rightfully claim the service of all its citizens, men and women. But the question of fighting is not the blow merely, but its quality and persistence. The important point is, to make the blow effective. Did any brave Englishman who rode into the jaws of death at Balaklava, serve England on the field more truly than Florence Nightingale? That which sustains and serves and repairs the physical force, is just as essential as the force itself. Thus the law, in view of the moral service they are supposed to render, excuses clergymen from the field, and in the field it details ten per cent of the army to serve the rest, and they do not carry muskets nor fight. Women, as citizens, have always done and always will do that work in the public defense for which their sex peculiarly fits them, and men do no more. The care of the young warriors, the nameless and innumerable duties of the hospital and home, are just as essential to the national safety as fighting in the field. A nation of men alone could not carry on a contest any longer than a nation of women. Each would be obliged to divide its forces and delegate half to the duties of the other sex. But while the physical services of war are equally divided, between the sexes, the moral forces are stronger with women. It was the women of the south, we are constantly and doubtless very truly told, who sustained the rebellion, and certainly without the women of the north the government had not been saved. From the first moment to the last, in all the roaring cities, in the remote valleys, in the deep woods, on the country hill sides, on the open prairie, wherever there were wives, mothers, sisters, lovers, there were the busy fingers which, by day and night, for four long years, like the great forces of spring time and harvest, never failed. The mother paused only to bless her sons, eager for the battle; the wife to kiss her children's father, as he went; the sister smiled upon the brother, and prayed for the lover who marched away. Out of how many hundreds of thousands of homes and hearts they went who never returned; but these homes were both the inspiration and the consolation of the field. They nerved the arm that struck for them. When the son, and the husband, fell in the wild storm of battle, the brave woman's heart broke in silence, but the busy fingers did not falter. When the comely brother and lover were tortured into idiocy and despair that woman heart of love kept the man's faith steady, and her unceasing toil repaired his wasted frame. It was not love of the soldier only, great as that was, it was knowledge of the cause. It was that supreme moral force operating through innumerable channels, like the sunshine in nature, without which successful war would have been impossible. There are thousands and thousands of these women who ask for a voice in the government they have so defended. Shall we refuse them? I appeal again to my honorable friend the chairman of the committee. He has made the loud ring with his cry of universal suffrage and universal amnesty. Suffrage and amnesty to whom? To those who sought to smother the government in the blood of its noblest citizens, to those who ruined the happy homes and broke the faithful hearts of which I spoke. Sir, I am not condemning his cry. I am not opposing his policy, I have no more thirst for vengeance than he and quite as anxiously as my honorable friend, do I wish to see the harvests of peace waving over the battle fields. But, sir, here is a New York mother who trained her son in fidelity to God and to his country. When that country called, they answered. Mother and son gave, each after his kind, their whole service to defend her. By the sad fate of war the boy is thrown into the ghastly den at Andersonville. Mad with thirst he crawls in the pitiless sun toward a muddy pool. He reaches the dead-line, and is shot by the guard—murdered for fidelity to his country.—"I demand amnesty for that guard, I demand that he shall vote," cries the honorable chairman of the committee. I do not say that it is an unwise demand. But I ask him, I ask you, sir, I ask every honorable and patriotic man in this State, upon what conceivable grounds of justice, expediency or common sense shall we give the ballot to the New York boy's murderer and refuse it to his mother? I have thus stated what I conceive to be the essential reasonableness of the amendment which I have offered. It is not good for man to be alone, united with woman in the creation of human society; their rights and interests in its government are identical, nor can the highest and truest development of society be reasonably conceived, so long as one sex assumes to prescribe limits to the scope and functions of the other. The test of civilization is the position of women. Where they are wholly slaves, man is wholly barbarous; and the measure of progress from barbarism to civilization is the recognition of their equal right with man to an unconstrained development. Therefore when Mr. Mill unrolls his petition in Parliament to secure the political equality of women, it bears the names of those English men and women whose thoughts foretell the course of civilization. The measure which the report of the committee declares to be radically revolutionary, and perilous to the very functions of sex, is described by the most sagacious of living political philosophers as reasonable, conservative, necessary and inevitable; and he obtains for it 73 votes in the same House in which out of about the same whole number of voters Charles James Fox, the idol of the British Whigs, used to be able to rally only forty votes against the policy of Pitt. The dawn in England will soon be day here. Before the American principle of equal rights, barrier after barrier in the path of human progress falls. If we are still far from its full comprehension and further from perfect conformity to its law, it is in that only like the spirit Christianity to whose full glory even Christendom but slowly approaches. From the heat and tumult of our politics we can still lift our eyes to the eternal light of that principle; can see that the usurpation of sex is the last form of caste that lingers in our society; that in America the most humane thinker is the most practical man, and the organizer of justice the most sagacious statesman.

Mr. GOULD—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to a point of order. I believe that our rules provide that members shall not speak more than once on any question so long as any other member may desire the floor.

The CHAIRMAN—In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is not well taken, as the rule applies to each amendment, and the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould] has not spoken on the pending amendment.

Mr. GOULD—The pleasure with which I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Richmond, [Mr. Curtis] has been shared by a majority of the members of the Convention. The argument of the gentleman has been polished from the foundation stone to the topmost dome; it has glowed, sir, like a crystal palace, with the most gorgeous prismatic hues, but like a crystal palace, it will be found to be as frangible as the crystal. He stated, sir, in the commencement that he did not care to inquire into the murky origin of human rights. I, for my part, desire to anchor my opinions upon the sure and solid foundation of all rights and of all privileges whatever. I assume, sir, that the origin of all rights is God, who created man. If, at the very moment of creation established certain laws which should govern them, which should establish all their rights, and all their relations. There is, sir, a lex scripta and a lex non scripta, and each is of as binding obligation as the other. How do we find, sir, this unwritten law? We find it, sir, because the law of God is perfect, and if we find that there is any certain set of rules governing the relations of men with each other, which, through all time and on all occasions work advantageously, we may know with absolute certainty, that those rules are consistent with the laws of God. I may stand here, sir, among the gentlemen with whom I am associated in this Convention, and if I observe with the most perfect fidelity those rules which God has created, to regulate my intercourse with my fellow men, I shall find a place in every heart here, and the longer we remain together, the more dear I will become to every heart; but, sir, if I transgress those laws which God has thus established, I should soon be an offense in the nostrils of every member. Now, sir, when man comes into the world and stands alone, his right undoubtedly is to do as he pleases in every respect; but, sir, as soon as he enters into society, those rights which were perfect before, become imperfect rights; they become modified at once by his relations with society. God is as much the author of society as he is the author of the individual; the laws which he has given for the regulation of society are absolutely as binding as the laws which he has given to individuals; the rights of society are precisely as sacred as the rights of individuals. Sir, when man comes into society it is obvious that he cannot do as he pleases, because if he pleases to do that which is contrary to what another man pleases to do, at once there arises a conflict of those rights, and one or the other must give way, or some superior power must decide which shall give way. Sir, when this question arises, when this conflict of rights is observed, there must be evidently some common superior to decide which shall give way, and that common superior is the sovereign. What is sovereignty, sir? By what mark is sovereignty ascertained? Sir, whatever power in a given independent community is habitually obeyed by the great mass of the people, but which in its turn, obeys no other power whatever, is the sovereign power; and wherever we shall find it, there it is. Let us test this thing, sir. Suppose it is asserted that the sovereign power in the State of New York is in the Governor and the Legislature, a very trifling analysis will show us that we are mistaken in thus locating the sovereign power of the State of New York. If you go to the Governor of this State, and ask for an office, or if you asked it in the days of the old "Albany Regency," the Governor might promise you, as the Governors in those days did promise repeatedly, that you should have the office you desired; but, sir, when Edwin Croswell came in and told the Governor that he had another person for that office, that it would be unwise for the Governor to make the appointment he had promised, did you not find the old democratic Governors give way, and that the nominee of Edwin Croswell was appointed? In republican times, before the breaking out of the war, when a republican Governor has promised an office to a man, and Mr. Weed has told him it would never answer, have you not found the Governor give way, and that Mr. Weed's nominee has been appointed? Yet neither of these men were sovereigns. When they fell from their original faith, they were, like Sampson, shorn of their strength, and there were none so poor as to do them reverence. Well, sir, you go to the Legislature; you go from man to man, and they promise you their vote, but the leading politician goes about among them and tells them they must not vote in the manner they have promised, that there will be destruction arising to the party from their voting in that direction, and they give way. You find that the powers which you suppose are the sovereign powers of the State, are not sovereign, because they themselves are governed by some higher power, and, therefore, they are excluded from the sovereignty by the deduction which I have given. So, sir, when you go across the Atlantic, and find the sovereigns, kings and princes ruling there; when you go to the great Louis XIV, who had the presumption to declare l'Etat, cest moi—that he was the State, that he was the center and fountain of all sovereignty and power, do you not find that there was a power above him, which while he was thus boasting, was silently undermining the foundations of his throne, and that that destroying power culminated in the death of Louis XVI? Did you not then find that the sovereignty existed in the people of France? So it is with Russia, sir; there is a power superior even to the sovereign of Russia; it expresses that power through public opinion, masked as it may be, and still oftener does it express its power by the poniard or by the poison. Try as you will, sir, there is no sort of sovereignty to be found but in the people, and there sir, the analysis fails. You may apply these, and similar tests and it is always found that there is no power beyond them—no power above or beneath them. We have then got the sovereignty, we have got the power which determines in contests between individuals. But, sir, when we have found the sovereign power, we find it is comprised in the whole mass of the community; of the men, of the women, of the lunatics, of the idiots, of the infants,—every class of society go to make up the mass of sovereignty. But, this sovereignty cannot express itself; it has no power to give expression to its feelings, or its behests—there are certain classes of it which are physically incapable of expressing that sovereignty. The infants are incapable of expressing the sovereign will; we must here cut them off from this expression; we must distinguish between a vote and an influence—between an influence in the sovereignty and a vote in the exercise of the sovereignty. Sir, the infant does exercise power. If you attempt to interfere with the rights of infants you will soon find from above, and from beneath and from all around, a secret and silent, but a powerful influence constraining you. The cry of the infant is a power in the State, and although the infant may not vote, it exercises its power. mark that; the women of the State do not vote, but do they not exercise an influence, and a powerful influence? Suppose that any measure shall be attempted to be passed by the Legislature of this State, or by the Parliament of England, which conflicts with the views and feelings of the women of New York or the women of England; do you not suppose that they would find means of making that powerful influence felt without a vote. Sir, all history is replete with that influence—the sovereignty of the woman exercised without any vote. Do you not find it, sir, in the history of France, that at times the mistresses of her kings have been the real rulers of that nation? Have you not found that the writings of women here have strongly influenced the expression of the sovereignty, so that without the vote they have moulded public opinion? Certainly you have, sir. But then, with regard to the votes, we must segregate from the mass of sovereignty a certain select mass to give the expression of that sovereignty. I concur wholly with the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. I believe we must exclude precisely those classes from the expression of the sovereignty, if we would have the State safely governed. I would only add another class to those which he has enumerated; I would say that if there is any class in the community which would be truly injured in their own persons, or property, or character by the exercise of the franchise, that class ought to be excluded. I would exclude those who had an adverse interest to the interest of the people; I would exclude those who lack intelligence, and by excluding that class I would exclude the lunatic; I would exclude the idiot, and in addition to those I would exclude any class which would be injured by the exercise of that franchise, and that sir, is the reason why I would exclude women from voting, because they would be deeply injured in their characters, injured in their feelings, injured in that which is most precious to them, which they value as a pearl above all price. I would exclude women, sir, because they themselves desire the exclusion. And how do I know that they desire that exclusion, sir? Well, sir, I stand here as a witness. My wife and my daughters, sir, who I know best, are wholly opposed to women voting. They say to me that they would lose by voting that which is most precious to them, they would lose their delicacy, would lose all that is most feminine within them, they would lose all that which enables them to exercise the transcendent influence which I have shown has been exercised by women in all time, and which has been so exceedingly beneficent in its influence. Sir, I presume that I am acquainted with as large a number of examples of intelligent womanhood of New York, as most gentlemen in this chamber, and I can say, sir, as a witness before this Convention, that in the whole circle of my female acquaintance, I can remember but a single individual who desires the vote for females. And sir, she does not desire it; she is willing to assume it as a burden. In conversation with her she said that she abhorred the idea of entering into the political field; but if it was her duty as a woman to exercise the right of suffrage, she would be willing to assume it. She did not desire it, sir; she was only willing to suffer it. I have conversed with many gentlemen who are members of this Convention, and they have assured me that their experience is precisely parallel with my own; and I ask every gentleman here to answer that question, whether, within the extent of his female acquaintance, embracing the purest womanhood of New York, he does not find that they are almost unanimous in rejecting the proffered franchise. If this, sir, is so, if the genuine womanhood of New York, are opposed to assuming the burden of the elective franchise, if those whom we most love and most revere, our mothers, our wives, our sisters, and our daughters, are opposed to it, I say that we have no right to urge this thing upon them. Sir, the very last lady who drank tea at my house before I came here, was the wife of a judge of the supreme court of New York, and as she pressed my hand in taking leave of me, she said "sir, I beseech you, whatever you may do in the Convention about to assemble, that you will not impose the elective franchise upon us." Sir, that has been the expression of nearly every woman with whom I have come in contact. Let us inquire for a moment whether these ladies entertain this view erroneously, or whether they entertain it on grounds which can be based on reason and on justice. There are two systems of law known in the civilized world; the one is called the civil law, the other the common law; both of them have the advantage of having grown out of the exigencies of humanity; both of them are coherent systems; both of them rest upon fundamental ideas. I say, sir, that those two systems, with regard to domestic relations, are perfectly coherent in themselves; but each of them proceeds upon very different fundamental ideas. The idea of the civil law, the law which had its origin in heathen times, and grows out of heathen ideas, has for a central idea in connection with the domestic relations, the idea of partnership. The marriage relation, according to that law, is simply a partnership, just as Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Harris are partners in law in the city of Albany, and just as Mr. Corning and Mr. Winslow are partners in the iron trade in the city of Albany. The relation of husband and wife under the civil law is precisely that of Messrs. Corning and Winslow or Messrs. Reynolds and Harris, under the common law, no higher and no deeper. The partnership in the one case has for its interest the care and rearing of children; in the other case it has the manufacture of iron; but their relations are precisely the same. Under the civil law the husband frequently sues the wife, and the wife the husband; the wife is in one business and the husband in the other, and suits at law are not uncommon; and when they are brought before the courts the husband may testify in regard to the business of the wife, and the wife may testify in regard to the business of the husband. Accordingly, under that law, secrets which the husband has reposed in the bosom of his wife may be drawn out by process of law. Husband and wife may have separate property, they may have separate interests of every kind. Sir, it is impossible that such a system of law should not react upon the character of woman; that it should not react upon the character of children; and that it should not react upon the character of the whole population. The character of the whole population must have a certain definite relation to the fundamental idea under which the law was established. But the fundamental idea of the common law which grew up under Christian auspices, is radically different. That idea has been expressed by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] as the idea of coverture; the wife loses her separate identity, and they two together become one compound being, which is expressed by the name of husband; she is supposed to be concealed from the world; the husband is seen and not herself. In perfect accordance with this fundamental theory, are all the provisions of the common law. The common law prohibits the judge from drawing out by legal process, the secrets which have been reposed in the bosom of the wife by the husband; she cannot testify against her husband; she therefore has no separate interests apart from her husband, her property is his property, and his property is her property. The property is owned by the compound being which has been established under the operation of the common law. If the husband and wife go into a store and the wife steals in the presence of her husband, the law charges the theft upon the husband and not upon the wife; the law looks upon the husband as guilty and not the wife. Everything in the law is harmoniously arranged to make the interests of the parties identical. Sir, which would you suppose would operate most beneficially; the idea of coverture, or the idea of partnership, the idea of an absolute identity of interest, or the idea of an absolute difference of interest, and from what you ku-w of the law which regulates humanity, would you not suppose that a common interest would lead to more harmony than different interests would? Certainly, sir, this is the case, and it has been found, on a comparison of the statistics of nations governed by the common law, and those governed by the civil law, that there is infinitely more happiness, more peace, more virtue growing out of the operations of the common law than is found under those of the civil law. The civil law obtains in France, and you know what Parisian women are; you know what the results of Parisian society are; you know how children grow up there degraded and miserable. It is true that where the civil law exists the Catholic religion obtains and divorces a vinculo et matrimonii are rare; but divorces a mensa et thoro are very common, and infinitely more numerous than in countries governed by the common law. Sir, what does the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] propose? He proposes to engraft the principles of the civil law upon the common law in this State. The other day when Mrs. Stanton addressed us she told us that twenty years ago, men began for the first time to do justice to women. What did man do twenty years ago? What did the Legislature of this State and of other States do twenty years ago? They began to adopt the principles of the civil law and engraft them on the common law; they began to make a difference between the interests of husband and wife; they began to invest her with the right of testifying; with the right of holding separate property; and with the right of making wills against her husband's consent. All these things were commenced at that time, and they have been gradually increasing down to the present day. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] wants us to go a long step in advance, and still further to make a disruption in our social institutions. That lady when the question was asked her, said that from the very commencement of this change the character of the woman had been gradually improving. Sir, I want to relate a fact which is within my own personal knowledge. Twenty years ago the proportion of female criminals to male criminals in the State of New York, was as twelve to one; there were twelve men in our common jails at that time where there was one woman; and in the Tombs of the city of New York, there were six men to one woman. Sir, during all that time in which the character of woman has been "progressing" what has been the result? In 1865 I visited every jail in the State of New York, and what was the proportion of women to men in our jails at that time? Taking the whole State together, the ratio was as four to one. It had been reduced from twelve to one to four to one; and in the Tombs in the City of New York that year, there had been upwards of sixteen hundred more women committed than there had been men. The women were absolutely in excess—

Mr. KINNEY—I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman [Mr. Gould]. I would like to know, when he states there were twelve males to one female in the State prisons, if he has reference to the State prisons or the county jails?

Mr. GOULD—I am speaking of the common jails; a much better illustration of the general action of society than the State prisons would be. Precisely the same thing was found in Raymond street jail in Brooklyn, where there had been upwards of nine hundred more women committed to the jail than there had been men. That, sir, is an illustration of Mrs. Stanton's improvement. That, sir, is the result of this engrafting the principles of the civil law, on to the principles of the common law. Let me ask this Convention to pause before they extend the engrafting of these principles further. I think that the facts, which I have stated conclusively, vindicate the opinions of the ladies of whom I have been speaking. They show that the introduction of new causes of discord between men and women are calculated to destroy the sweetest sources of domestic felicity and domestic joy; that they poison the very well-springs of education, and make the family instead of being the best, one of the worst institutions for the education of the race. What sort of children will raise up when they see the father and mother, one being a republican and the other a democrat, constantly quarrelling with each other with regard to political affairs, when they see the husband going about among his acquaintances, urging some and bribing others to vote his ticket, and the wife going around among her acquaintances, urging some and bribing others to vote her ticket. Can we contemplate such a scene as that without the most painful feelings of distress and horror? Can we expect that our republic will prosper when such a conflict is raging around the domestic hearth? Sir, I deprecate the idea. I object to the course of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] for another reason. A very large portion—larger than gentlemen generally suppose, of those who are now invested with the exercise of the franchise habitually abstain from its exercise at the polls. I look upon this as a great evil. I think the duty of voting ought always to be annexed to the right to vote. Sir, for the last twenty years the average number of those who have actually exercised the right of franchise at the polls has been only seventy-three per cent of the whole number who have the right to that privilege. The greatest proportion that we have ever seen to vote in the State of New York, was in the year 1860, when ninety-one per cent of those who were entitled to vote, absolutely exercised the franchise. In 1847 we had the smallest number, when only fifty-three per cent exercised that right. Sir, in those terrible years, which many gentlemen recollect here, the years of the Jackson and Adams controversy, when party spirit ran so very high, and when good men were fearing that the result of that conflict would absolutely destroy the republic, the proportion of voters which exercised the franchise was only fifty-seven per cent of the whole; notwithstanding the great amount of conflict which existed. What was the reason of that? It was during that time that the term "unterrified democracy" and many other of these cant terms were applied. The democrats then were a "fighting democracy." The quiet, tranquil people at the polls were frightened from going there, in consequence of the ferocity of the conflicts that occurred there; and if my old friend, Thurlow Weed, never did another good thing in his life he did it when here, in the Fourth Ward in Albany, he went at the head of his own men, with his hickory cudgel in his hand, and opened these polls that men might go there and vote; I say that is the crowning jewel in his diadem. I think it is very clear that the great reason why a larger vote was not polled, and why there was so great a conflict, so great a feeling of hostility between the respectable parties there, was that the minority felt that they were not honestly in the minority. They felt they did have a reserve force who would vote with them, but who refused to go to the polls, simply because they were afraid to go there. They did not wish to go through the conflict and peril which was incident to voting at that period. The objection I have to the female vote is precisely this, that the proportion of those who would exercise the elective franchise in proportion to the whole number of votes would be greatly diminished. I know if you grant that right, the great mass of the thoughtful and delicate women of New York will absolutely refuse to exercise it. Instead of having seventy per cent vote as now, you will not have over forty or fifty per cent; it will be a great vote which will bring out fifty per cent of the total mass of voters. The ladies in our kitchens will vote, but the women in our parlors will never be found there. I think conflicts will be generated when men feel that they have not had a real majority against them; when they feel that those who have the right to exercise the elective franchise have not expressed it there with them, and who are not with the majority. I cannot conceive of anything which would have a greater tendency to introduce quarrels and conflict into this government; of anything which would have a greater tendency to destroy it than precisely such a course as this. I think the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] proposed that the question should be determined by the women themselves. But, sir, an expression taken in that way would not be, by any means, a true expression, therefore I am opposed to his proposition for that very reason. Who would vote at a poll of that kind? Every prostitute in the city of New York would vote there! Madam Restell, in her splendid and gorgeous carriage coming from the slaughter of the innocents would vote there; all the "pretty waiter girls" would be there. But could you get the real women of New York to vote? No, sir, you could not drag them there with log chains; you could not drive them there with a whip of scorpions. So the answer to a vote of that character would be spurious and illegitimate; it would be an ignis fatuus; it would only lead it to bewilder, to dazzle, to blind. For these reasons I am opposed to female suffrage. I believe it is fraught with incalculable evils to the whole community; and if this Convention is wise it will retain the long established Constitution of our forefathers in this respect, which on the whole has worked so well, and they will not introduce any of these new fangled notions which are suggested by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], and by his coadjutors.

Mr. LARREMORE—I did not suppose that this question would find so earnest an advocate in this Convention. It was the general impression of many of the members that the unanimous report of the very intelligent committee, to whom the question of female suffrage had been referred, had definitely settled the matter for the next twenty years at least. This conclusion, however, seems to have been premature. There is a buoyancy, an elasticity about this subject, so to speak, that will cause it to float and bound in our very midst until some decisive action is had by this body. It is apparent now that we must vote upon it. If this could be done in the ordinary way, no doubt we should save much valuable time, but if, as has been intimated to me, the ayes and noes are to be called on this question when final action is taken in the Convention, it then becomes important that we have an honest and intelligent record. Shall we answer the many respectful and forcible appeals to which we have listened, by a simple but emphatic "No," without the courage or the courtesy to give a reason why? For one, I am unwilling that my vote should be recorded, unless it be preceded by the motives that prompt it. He is a brave man, indeed, who shall here record his unexplained denial of female suffrage, and then venture within the charmed precincts of the opposite sex during the remaining period of his natural life. This question comes before us invested with peculiar interest and importance. With interest, because it emanates from those with whom our most cherished sympathies are associated, and with importance, because it involves the future welfare of society. It contemplates such a radical change in the social world, as would shake it from center to circumference. It has been said by an eminent jurist of this State, that the most perfect human laws can claim no higher merit than that they have followed nature. Sir, we have heard a great deal about the divine origin of government, and let us take this as a starting point, and look for a moment at the divine economy of that government from which man has vainly attempted to model his own. Is there not a peculiar distinctiveness and adaptation in all the laws that govern the natural world whether it be in the planetary system or in the world around us. Every thing in nature animate or inanimate, has each a separate and peculiar sphere. And has not society inaugurated a system of rules that follows out this analogy? Do we not here find gradations, distinctions and characteristics that have drawn plain and ineffaceable lines of separation and exclusiveness. If this be true of individuals as a class, is it not more than true as applied to the sexes? Let us see. From the creation of the world to the present day, the divinely constituted head and the divinely bestowed helpmeet have pursued their earthly pilgrimage together in unity, yet in variety. From age to age, from one generation to another, they have come down to us one in reciprocal sympathy and affection, yet separate and distinct in the pursuits and activities of life. I need not enlarge upon this subject, or strengthen it by comparisons to suggest the proposition at which I am arriving. I desire merely, Mr. Chairman, to state my objections to the amendment as proposed, in order that I may stand honestly and fairly upon the record when the vote comes to be taken in the Convention. My first objection is that female suffrage is contrary to the instincts of our nature, and prejudicial to all existing relations. I think it needs no argument to prove that the respect and the sympathy we entertain for woman is inherent and not depending on adventitious circumstances. It is something that proceeds from within and does not come to us from without. It is not dependent upon position or worldly surroundings. It is a part and parcel of our very existence. My next objection is that it is unnecessary. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], in the very eloquent address to which we all had the pleasure of listening, made the assertion somewhat unqualifiedly, I think, that men were not wise enough or fit enough to legislate for women. Mr. Chairman, I refer you to our statute books, and you will see on them how liberally the people of this State have legislated for women. I refer to the married woman's act, so called, of 1848, and the act of 1862. I do not think he can find a solitary instance in which the rights of women have been prejudiced or jeopardized. How is it when she appeals to the courts? How difficult is it to obtain a jury that will agree, in a case where her rights are involved, and where they must pass upon them adversely. I think it as susceptible of proof that man is quite as capable of passing laws for her protection as she would be, and that the largest liberality has been evinced in that respect. I am reminded in this connection, of a little incident that came under my personal observation, growing out of a passage of the law of 1848, to which I will refer, to show that woman invested with authority is not always so kind and just as has been claimed for her by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] when she has the opportunity to exercise it. I am happy to say that the case is an exceptional one. A gentleman who, by industry and economy, had amassed a sum of money, invested it in the purchase of lands and the erection of buildings thereon, from which he might derive a permanent revenue for the support of his family. He was about to engage in some mercantile enterprise, and at the suggestion of his wife the property was conveyed to her in order that it might be saved to his family and himself in the event of any misfortune in business. The business terminated; he retired from it; he closed up his affairs and was ready to spend his life in peace and comfortable independence. He then sought a reconveyance of the property. This was refused under the advice of the relatives of his wife. Some few years after, a child, the only issue of marriage between them, died, and immediately following that a brother of the wife was installed as a sort of steward over the house to collect the rents and disburse them. The husband was obliged to go to his wife for the very pocket money he needed to meet his daily expenses. A long series of indignities followed, which culminated in the presentation, by his wife, of a meerschaum and paper of tobacco, accompanied with the suggestion that while the government tax remained so high, he must not indulge in the luxury of smoking cigars. Was there a perfect equality of rights there? One of the great objections to the exercise of this right by woman is one that I think has been almost left untouched in the consideration of this subject by those who have addressed the committee, and that is that it is incompatible with the domestic and social duties and relations. No one will pretend to deny that woman has a work to perform which is peculiar to herself, and of which we can know but little except from actual results. But we do know that for its faithful accomplishment her undivided care and attention are needed and required. The home circle, with its ever varying cares and responsibilities; the social gathering, with its many demands and exactions; the claims of humanity and benevolence; and above all, the higher and holier duties of religion—are work enough and to spare for her, whose life has been consecrated and devoted to the service. But, sir, we are called upon to impose an additional burden upon her already over-tasked energy, to bridge over the claims of woman's domestic and social life with the broad avenue of the political world, in which it is claimed she will find other and more enlarged opportunities of usefulness. She, whose empire has ever been the household, who has been the magnet of its attraction, the source of its purity, is to be subjected to the contaminating influences of the political arena. Let no one imagine that she can exercise this prerogative and yet preserve intact that delicacy of feeling which is her peculiar charm. The right to vote implies, in her case, at least, a sufficient knowledge for its intelligent exercise. This is to be obtained by associations with and communications from the outer world, to which she is now comparatively a stranger. She will then have received another incentive to action, and it is fair to presume from past experience, that no effort on her part will be wanting in the accomplishment of the given object. Can this be done without sacrificing existing responsibilities? Are the excitements and agitations of the forum compatible with the wonted serenity of the fireside? Shall the hours at home, heretofore sacred to the reciprocities of affection, be disturbed by the discussion for instance, of the rival claims of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] or the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford]. Can we bar out party spirit from our houses when it has once effected a lodgment in the hearts of their inmates? Now we turn from the disturbing elements of political strife and find a sure repose beside the family hearth. But once channel this intervening space between home and the world, and allow the restless tide of life's ocean to enter this hallowed retreat. Its calm security will have gone forever, and the refreshing and ennobling influences that once gave it beauty and attractiveness will be ours in memory only. It is said by those who support this theory that to refuse woman the ballot is to degrade her, because it deprives her of an inalienable right. If inalienable, then a natural right. But when did this right originate? Is it coeval with her existence, or was it derived from legislative action? This question has been so ably and so thoroughly discussed by eminent gentlemen on this floor, that I need only refer to it and pass it over. I wish to state, however, that the earnest advocate of female suffrage in England, John Stuart Mill, in a speech, a copy of which has been laid on our table, is reported to have said, as follows:

"I do not mean that the suffrage, or any other political function, is an abstract right, or that to withhold it from any one, on sufficient grounds of expediency, is a personal wrong; it is an utter misunderstanding of the principle I maintain to confound this with it; my whole argument is one of expediency." The honorable gentleman from Richmond has by his amendment taken a broader ground even than the great English liberalist. But in what aspect of the case can the denial of this right to woman tend to degrade her? Does not the degradation rather consist in its exercise in a coming down by her from a superior height to the broad level of masculine equality? The honorable gentleman from Richmond refers to European history, and also to the English government, under which woman may hold office, and where she may be Queen. Yes, it is true, England may boast her solitary Queen, but America reckons them by millions. Is it not a serious matter that woman should be willing to surrender her present pre-eminent position for to her, such an insignificant bauble as the ballot? She may do it, acting under the delusion that the act will not compromise her female delicacy or propriety. But she will find in the end a regret as well deserved as it is unavailing. Let her for once forsake her true sphere, and leave the orbit which the Great Artificer has designed for her, you will see her blaze and dazzle for a moment in the political horizon and then fall like a dead weight upon the body politic. We cannot violate the well-established usages of popular sentiment without incurring the penalty. It has been said that woman is not represented in the government. If this be so, then history is a fiction and our national character one of spontaneous growth. But who that is familiar with the history of our government would for a moment assent to such a proposition? Woman not represented in the government! You will find the impress of her influence in almost every department of it. Need I refer to the period of the revolution and of the late rebellion, to see how she cherished and nurtured our patriotic zeal, and quickened the spirit of freedom both in camp and council. The eloquent utterances, the soul-stirring appeals, the sage advice, the self-denial, the sacrifice, the valor, all had their first germ in some mothers' heart ere they were engrafted in the hearts of her sons. Woman not represented in the government? She has daguerreotyped her image and wishes in the heart of every representative. She moulds the character of man at a time when it is most impressible and the fault is her own, if she does not fashion it to her purpose. Who can estimate the value of that influence that hovers over us with the dawn of intellect, giving tone and character to every thought and act, that becomes, as it were, a part of the very atmosphere we breathe and ere we are aware, it has laid the foundation of our manhood. Yet, all this, we are told is as nothing; that woman's ambition is still unsatisfied; that she aspires to vote, and then, as a necessary consequence, to be voted for; to represent as well as to be represented. This will be the inevitable result if the present restriction upon suffrage be removed. He who chooses to make woman an elector must be prepared to welcome her among the elected. Does not every instinct of our nature revolt at this? Let us be true to ourselves and to those we are here to represent in expressing our unqualified disapprobation of the proposed change. To use the language of the report: "An innovation so revolutionary and sweeping, so openly at war with a distribution of duties and functions between the sexes." In doing this, we shall have the fullest assurances that we have not trammelled or circumscribed woman's influence, but on the contrary have kept it from being diverted from its legitimate source. We also have the satisfaction of knowing that those who have petitioned for this right constitute a very inconsiderable portion of the class to which they belong. They are not a tithe of the female population of the State, and as such can hardly be said to represent the wishes of the majority. Let us cultivate and evince, if that be possible, a higher respect for woman as she is, and the noble work in which she is engaged. Let our appreciation be of that discriminating character that shall readily apply the test of true womanhood to its counterfeit. We shall thus lend our co-operation and best enable her to fulfill her glorious destiny. The claims of society will be fully satisfied and the record of her life well spent, unmarred by spot or blemish from the political world.

Mr. CONGER.—It was my expectation, Mr. Chairman, to have presented to this committee at an earlier day, some leading thoughts on the great subject which occupies its attention. I had hoped that I might be able to show that this subject could be raised above the range of partisanship, that it might be placed beyond the vortex of prejudice or passion, and that it might be viewed calmly and intelligently by the representatives of the sovereigns of the State of New York. But I find, I seem to linger upon the scene, coming so near the close of this debate, and almost regret that I have ventured to detain the committee at so late an hour, and especially after I have listened, as no doubt all have listened, with such fixed attention to the scholarly effort of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. It seems to me as if a voice intruding on the scene would tend to break the charmed circle of those winged words with which he urged his plea for the women of the land. Far be it from my purpose if I had the power to dispel the rapt and glorious charm which invested his effort. As a wreath rising in the early spring day ascends with a quiet majesty until it reaches the upper air, so may the record of his brilliant words rise as it were on the potent spell of his eloquence, until it bears another laurel to his early and deserved fame. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to view this subject as it is historically presented in the various departments of political, moral and social rights. I may, perhaps, trench upon the domain of science or call in requisition what has been said in modern times to teach us what our duty as humanitarians justly is. If the disquisition shall be dry; if I shall summon to my aid some statistics drawn a few days since from the musty census of the State, I pray that the committee will bear with me, and yield not only the courtesy with which I have been uniformly treated, but the patience which will enable me and it to go through what otherwise might seem a labyrinthine task. I view this question, sir, as a simple question of the demission of sovereignty, not its dilution, as is sometimes said, to individuals of the same class nor as has been proposed the transposing or confusion of the social sovereignty of this fair State with its political sovereignty, but I look upon it as it must be viewed by the people, and will be presented on the final vote passed by this Convention, as a simple untrammelled attempt to divest the sovereigns of the State of New York of the high and majestic function which they now possess. However others may look upon the right of voting, I have never been able to view it in any other light than as the exercise of the highest sovereignty known to humanity, and I was somewhat surprised when I looked upon the report of the committee and examined the views presented by the majority as well as the minority, to see with what sedulous skill the effort was made by the majority to add to the sovereignty of a class of another blood, while a no less insidious skill was displayed to take from the sovereignty of those who are flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone. I must say that I did not like altogether the jesuitical effort of substituting one figure for another (30 for 10) by which a large number of citizens who had trusted in the public faith of these United States for five years, were to find their trust, and their hope, like apples of Sodom, in their mouths. I do not wish to criticise with unkindness the effort as presented by the chairman of that committee to accomplish what may seem, to some, to be a mere political result; but, after all, there was this simple fact: the baton of his skill was reversed when the sovereignty was to be given to the black man. But the same baton was presented as the arm of justice against those unfortunate beings who, sharing with himself a few years back the right of sovereignty of this State, were to be deprived of it, forsooth, because by some infelicitous act of their own, some peculiar unfortunate combination, they were no longer able to provide for their own support during the few years that must elapse before they go to their graves. Moreover, I beg leave to say, I could hardly understand how a gentleman of that committee who rose a few days since in support of the report of the majority, could have persuaded himself that this same result was essayed in the Constitution of 1846. If you will remember, as I think he said it was the purpose of that Constitution to effect the exclusion of this very class. The gentleman must have forgotten, it seems to me, that that section from which he quoted, commenced with these emphatic words, "for the purposes of voting." How then could he have pretended that what followed, as regulating the residence, should divest the very right that was sought to be protected?—how could he so divest by legal construction of this clause to say nothing of his refusing the concurrent testimony and practice in this State from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time? How could he have ventured to tell to this Convention that it was the primary object of that section in the Constitution of 1846, to deprive those very persons of the right to vote? If his logic was good for anything, where was the soldier, whose residence was not to be lost by his going forth in the defense of his country? Where was the boy or the youth who had gone to an academy or public school who, like the public pauper was protected under this very article for the purpose, as it was clearly expressed, of giving him his vote. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CHESEBRO — With the permission of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] I would move that the Convention take a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is of the opinion that such a motion cannot be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I move that the committee do now rise, for the purpose of moving in Convention for a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. CONGER — I will say in regard to the motion, that I hold myself entirely at the disposition of the gentlemen who are here present, but that unless they desire a recess for their convenience (as I ought to say in all frankness that I shall take some time in my remarks) I will go on or will yield as shall be desired.

Mr. E. BROOKS — Those gentlemen who are present certainly would like to hear the argument of the gentleman, but would like to avail themselves of a short recess when members now absent will have returned. I will make the motion that the committee do now rise.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD from the Committee of the Whole reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. E. BROOKS the Convention took a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at half past seven o'clock.

Mr. SILVESTER moved that the Convention adjourn.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Silvester and it was declared to be lost. A division being called for it appeared that no quorum was present.

Mr. SHERMAN moved that the roll be called. The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll, which also showed that there was no quorum present.

Mr. ALVORD—I move that the officers of this Convention be directed, to proceed to the various hotels and desire members to appear in Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that officers have already been sent in search of members.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move that the Convention now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The PRESIDENT—It appearing that there is no quorum present, the Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman cannot be entertained.

Mr. GOULD—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Gould, and it was declared lost.

Mr. ALVORD—I now renew my motion in reference to directing officers to go in quest of delegates.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that there will soon be a quorum present, and I think the Convention might as well resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the pending question.

The PRESIDENT—The opinion of the Chair is that it cannot be done when it has been shown that there is no quorum present.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose if there is no objection the motion might be entertained.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair hardly thinks that a unanimous consent would constitute a quorum.

Later the following members were found to be present:

Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Case, Cheritree, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Cooke, Conger, Comstock, Corbett, Curtis, Daly, Develin, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond Harris, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landou, Lapham, Larremore, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Lowrey, Ludington, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merrill, Merwin, Monell, Murphy, Paige, Pond, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Seymour, Sherman, Silvester, Smith, Stratton, Tappan, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Campen, Verplanck, Wales, Wakeman, Weed, Young.

A quorum being present, the Convention resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of a Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The Chairman announced the question to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

Mr. CONGER—Mr. Chairman, if the report of the majority of this committee to the Convention should receive its approbation, the application of the test of property as a qualification, in one case, to enfranchise a very small portion of the inhabitants of this State, and its application in another direction, for the purpose of disfranchising a very large portion of those who have been associated with us in the majesty of this franchise; if this report I say, should receive the sanction of this Convention, it would be useless hereafter to advert to the cruelties resulting from the antagonism of races; for such cruelty as this, would be felt and acknowledged by all the civilized world as the remorseless blade of the political guillotine falls, to be without a parallel in the history of a race that makes liberty and enfranchisement its boast and its protection. I turn, however, with great pleasure to the report of the minority of the committee, not for the purpose of examining all the recommendations it contains; but because it affords to the Convention a note of warning against the ruthless assault to be prosecuted upon the liberties of the people. That report speaks to you of the vote that was taken in 1846 and again in 1860, and it very quietly yet emphatically gives you the statement of that vote and the majority by which the sovereign people of this State expressed themselves as unwilling to change their ancient institutions. I have thought it was desirable in order to justify the action of this State at that time, that I should pass in calm review, what that action was, and for this purpose I first propose to you to-night, to ascertain the true numerical value of the vote which was then taken. You do not get the expression of the will of the people from a mere statement of the vote had, because it appears by the comparison of that vote, with other votes, that all the electors did not see fit to exercise their right to the franchise, upon that question. According to the report the vote in 1846 upon the question of negro suffrage, stands: in favor of it 85,306; against it 223,834; making a total vote of 309,140; the majority against negro suffrage being 138,528. At the same time the whole Constitution as proposed by the Convention of 1846, was presented to the people. The vote in favor of it was 221,528; against it 92,446; making a total of 313,974, nearly five thousand more than the total vote on the question of extending the suffrage, while the majority by which the Constitution was adopted was 129,082. At the same time the people of this State exercised their franchise on a question which is more generally supposed to express the popular will, and on the gubernatorial vote you find that Governor Silas Wright received 187,306, while his then competitors, Young, Bradley and Ogden Edwards, received a total vote against him of 218,027. The total vote on the gubernatorial question was 405,333. Suppose we concede that the whole of that vote, which was cast in favor of negro suffrage, was a vote to be taken out of that column which supported Young, Bradley and Edwards, representing what was known as the Whig and Anti-Slavery party; then if we take that whole vote and subtract from it the entire vote in favor of negro suffrage, you have left 132,721, expressing the Whig vote of the State at that time, non-concurring in the right of negro suffrage. If you take the whole vote which was given on the question of this suffrage from the whole vote which was given on the gubernatorial question, and suppose that the balance expresses the indifference, or the non-concurrence, as a vote of non-liquet, you may say that one-half of that difference might be added to the Whig vote of non-concurrence, in order to give a good test of the actual Whig vote that refused to concur on the question of negro suffrage. But if, on the other hand, you prefer to obtain the whole vote non-concurring, take the whole Whig vote as against negro suffrage and add that to the entire vote given on the democratic ticket, which supposes, by the bye that not a single democrat cast a vote in favor of extending that sovereignty, you have a total of 320,027, which represents the number of those who were positively against or non-concurring in the extension of the elective franchise. You will perceive, Mr. Chairman, some one might urge the same objection as to ascertaining what was the true preponderating vote of the people of the State upon the subject of the Constitution itself. Even if that were so, we have light upon this question from the vote taken in 1860. That vote is far more intelligent and a far more definite and commanding expression of the will of the people. I will proceed to give you that vote. For negro suffrage the vote in 1860 was 197,503; against it 337,984, making a total vote of 535,487. At the same time the vote was taken by which Governor Morgan reached the gubernatorial chair, with a majority of over seventy thousand; the vote in his favor was 388,272; the vote for his opponents was 314,653, making a total vote for the gubernatorial ticket of 702,925. If you take from the total Republican vote given for Governor Morgan of 388,272, the vote that was given for negro suffrage of 197,503, you have 190,769 as expressing the sentiment of the Republican voters of the State, now concurring in the measure. If you add to that, the total vote of the Democratic party (for it is conceded in this computation, that the whole vote which was given for negro suffrage was a republican vote, and the total vote against it was democratic); I say if you add to this difference the vote given by the opponents of Gov. Morgan, you have 505,422, as expressive of the vote of the people of the State of New York, as positively against or non-concurring in the question of negro suffrage. Now, sir, the census of the State tells us that at that election, only a fraction over ninety-one per cent of the whole vote of the State was given on the gubernatorial ticket; so that you may add by way of correction of this estimate, something like nine per cent on the total vote, which amounts to 63,263, and you have a sum total of 568,685, expressive of the vote of the people of the State of New York in 1860, against this question of negro suffrage, or the vote of the people non-concurring in the measure proposed. I have no desire at all in stating thus much and in this wise, to take by surprise, or cajole by figures the votes and opinions of the gentlemen of the committee; but it appears to me that a candid review of these figures must teach them a lesson of prudence, which I think is a wise and necessary part of statesmanship. I remember how, in the years gone by, on a question exciting the public mind from one end of this country to the other, a distinguished chief, then President of the United States, urged upon his friends in Congress the settlement of that question, not for the purpose of preventing any expression, but to avoid the necessity of resort to any expression on the part of the people of the country, as either against it or in favor of it; I remember, too, that policy was fatal to his own party, resulting in the reaction of the people of the country as against the question of policy, which they had theretofore approved, principally on this ground—that they had not been consulted, that their views had been anticipated in a way which did not suit them. When I go further back in the history of this country, I remember one whom we all regarded as the wisest man of his day, one of the sagest chiefs of any party, who on a similar question, instead of urging his friends in Congress, who were in the majority, to support his impeachment of the course of the United States Bank, quietly told them to go home and take the voice of the people in regard to it. I see the superior sagacity of Andrew Jackson, and I am disposed to regard it as a fundamental principle in the policy of this country, that it is never wise on a question of grave importance to undertake to anticipate the decision of the people. I never was more surprised in my life, when in conversing with one of the old and tried champions of the democratic party, a man who had attained a high celebrity in this State and held the highest post as a jurist in this land, he confessed that he felt such indignation in view of the attempt to forestall the expression of the people of this country, on a question of so great pith and moment, that he had thrown off the old ties, that bound him to the party of his youth, and went against it, in the expression of the indignation he felt at such a policy. I am disposed, sir, for one, to take this as the lesson of experience and prudence. Whether it affects or determines the action of any other gentleman in this committee, it must determine mine. I am not willing to go to the people of this State after I have computed what was the sum total of their vote, of indifference or opposition to this measure, as some 560,000; I am not willing to assume a responsibility as their representative to say to them: "This is a question we will not submit to you, in your independent sovereignty, as a separate question. You must take it as we make it, you must take the whole matter as we send it down to you, or you must do without anything." Sir, I have but one opinion—that the independent yeomanry, the sovereign electors of the State of New York will rise in indignant majesty and turn upon the men who undertake to trifle with their sovereignty, and say to us: "You have exceeded your trust, and we turn upon you as men who have been faithful to it." Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think I am wise, or if not wise, I am at least prudent, in taking the teachings and admonitions of the past, which if it establishes any one rule as a great cardinal rule in administration, it is this rule above all others—that in a country where the people are sovereigns, it is not wise for their agents or representatives to assume sovereignty. I tell you sir, the people of this State, much as they may be cajoled from time to time, much as they may be misrepresented, much as they may be trifled with, still appreciate above all things those great functions with which they have never parted, of the sovereignty of this land. If I have succeeded in impressing the mind of any gentleman with the numerical value of the voice of the people of this State, so lately expressed, I think I have but very little more to urge in defense of the course I shall adopt; when I say that the more recent expression of the opinions of the people—the sovereign people of this State—is of much more value and much more suggestive to us acting here as their representatives, than any vote taken in the times that are past. They voted upon the Constitution and the appendant query presented to them in 1846; and fourteen years later the second time, when the question of extending the suffrage to the negroes of the State was presented to them, they voted against it. They stood up like the barons of old in the presence of King John, "Nolumus nos leges Angliæ mutari." The institutions of New York are not to be changed! And I think that is their candid and enduring opinion at this time. Mr. Chairman, if I were able or worthy in my place to undertake to justify the action of the people of the State of New York—if it should fall upon me, who have had of late so little participation in the councils of the people, and who can only know what they say and what they mean, as one living far away and distant, and taking note more as one who observes from year to year, than from day to day, of the counsels of the people: if it should fall to me this night to undertake to state to you the reasons which support and justify that action, I hope you will give me a very candid and a very impartial hearing, for I do not like—I tell you the truth in all honesty—I do not like to be forced into this position at so late an hour, to undertake to justify the traditional sentiments of the people of this State. I think that work ought to have fallen upon gentlemen representing the majority of the people of this State; they ought to be able to say what the traditional voice of New York is. If it has changed they ought to have been able to have told us why, and how it has changed; if they had any reasonable, any firm, any sufficient data upon which to base any such opinions, they should have presented them to this committee. But nothing of this kind has been urged on this floor. I have failed—and I have listened with great patience—to catch the first intimation of what is the ground of change in the sentiment of the electors of this State. My honorable and eloquent friend from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] thinks those were not the better days that were referred to by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], but he thinks we have fallen in these later times upon the best and most glorious days of the republic. Accepting the position as if it were true, pray, I ask you, did he or any one else, tell us the particulars in which those days were better, or why they indicated any change of the opinion of the sovereign electors of this State? I do not speak now as one who goes beyond his ground, I am not speaking about the opinions of the people of the United States. This is a question local to us. What we want to know is, what is the opinion of the sovereign electors of the State of New York? Why, sir, if we listened attentively to what has been said on this floor from time to time, we would believe that the people of this State, releasing themselves from all the old traditions which have come down, not only from the period of the revolution, but from the days of the first settlement of this colony; that the people had gone back and become advocates and disciples of the doctrines of natural rights and the theory of the "consent of the governed." When and where, Mr. Chairman, in the history of the State of New York, did you ever hear, before this Convention (except, perhaps, in the Convention of 1821), a persistent and united advocacy of the doctrine of natural right? Did our forefathers, when they came to this country come as the exponents of and believers in, or the advocates of natural right? They came as humble citizens of his majesty; they came as colonists, under his protection; they came as citizens of the old kingdoms, and they never aspired until the days of the revolution to be anything else. They came under the protection of settled laws, they never talked about natural rights; and it was only when they were forced into revolution, that they threw out the doctrine of natural right, they did not mean the natural right to go back and form society over again. No, sir, they meant merely the natural right, that when men were down trodden, they would rise in revolution. The doctrine of natural right is simply, as the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] said here, the doctrine of revolution. It is not the doctrine which marks either the progress, or the hope of society. It is a doctrine which speaks of destruction to existing institutions! Away then, sir, with any such theory as the doctrine of natural right! The people of this State never entertained that doctrine. It is only of late years, the doctrine has been proclaimed on our soil, by some teachers of false doctrines from Massachusetts and the like, who have been floating around within our sovereign bounds, who have told us that government is based upon natural right. So, too, some gentlemen will tell you that all government is based upon the consent of the governed. What a monstrous fallacy; what an abominable heresy this is, in this age of the world. Why, Mr. Chairman, when that lamented chief of your party, who registered that oath in Heaven, of which you have a copy registered and on file here in this high court of the people (referring to the language of President Lincoln, inscribed on a scroll on the walls of the Assembly Chamber) "I have the most solemn oath registered in Heaven, to preserve, protect, and defend the government." When he went to take charge of the government which he was commissioned to assume; when he went to the city of Washington with one million of the popular vote against him, had he the consent of the governed, in the way gentlemen talk to us of the consent of the governed, as a numerical vote? When the people of the South rose up in rebellion, taking advantage of this nonsensical doctrine, and said they would not submit to the government while he was at the head of it; what was the answer, what was the response of the sovereign electors of the State of New York? They said the consent of the people had been constitutionally expressed. They knew enough of law, plain law, to know that a consent may be expressed or may be implied; that no man could stand up as a friend of order and of society, and say in that day, that this government rests simply upon the consent of the governed represented by a numerical vote. Why, what use is the Constitution of this State if these doctrines are to govern? We shall have a democracy fast verging on mobocracy. There is no such possibility of doctrine under a constitutional government. Then we have another doctrine. Another doctrine has been quoted on this floor, and I confess to you, believing in that doctrine and its right application, as I do, and accepting it as the rule of my life, I was pained to have the doctrine enunciated by the Redeemer of mankind, brought on to this floor as a cover of political fallacies in government. We were told by a distinguished jurist on this floor, that we should do unto others as we would that others should do unto us, and, therefore, that is the great reason why the people of the great State of New York should demit their sovereignty to those who make application for it. Sir, is there any greater absurdity in this world than to undertake to use the cardinal principle, the plain and unvarnished doctrine of Christian ethics, and to make it play such a part as this, to work the destruction of society on questions within the political arena. Suppose the distinguished gentleman who broached that doctrine on this floor should go with it to the other side of the Atlantic, and present himself before Her Majesty; suppose he should take that doctrine and set it like "apples of gold in pictures of silver," or if he wish to ornament it let him make each letter a burning gem till it glisten with a brilliancy beyond that of the Koh-i-noor, and present it to Her Majesty as an expression of his opinion as a political doctrinaire, and ask Her Majesty to share the sovereignty she holds from the people of Great Britain with him, on the basis of that doctrine, and by virtue of the force of that command, would he escape a straight —? But I hope Her Majesty would give him a very quiet and very candid answer — "This [trust which I hold I have received from my people, and I never can demit or share it.] Then, sir, when the christian electors of the State of New York are brought in council here, and it is urged upon them on the fundamental doctrine of Him whom they make their guide in religious matters, that they should share their sovereignty in this matter with those who do not participate in it, what is the proper and sufficient answer that these electors make? "This is a sacred and holy trust that we have received from our ancestors. This trust we must maintain in its purity; this trust we propose to exalt in its majesty: we cannot demit it." I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who do not hesitate to say that government is ordained of God; that it is not an invention of man, although a necessity for it exists, yet it has a higher and superior source for its authority. And when I say that, I say it intelligently, for I know that it is coupled with a sacred trust, and that those who received from a spiritual power this trust of government, are bound to execute it in accordance with the terms of their trust.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. Conger] a question. Does the gentleman consider it wrong to govern one's political conduct by the word of God?

MR. CONGER—If I thought that question was worthy of a categorical answer, I would give it; but I do not see Mr. Chairman, that that question is anything more than a delusion and a snare to the gentleman who puts it, for, if he has followed me in the argument I have given, I think I ought to have convinced him by this time that he could not apply that doctrine in the matter of any trust. Suppose he has the trust of a few infants, and some one comes along to him and says: "I plead this doctrine of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and I ask you to share that trust with me, because I am a man and a brother." What is the answer the gentleman gives? "This trust is mine, committed to me solemnly and I cannot demit it." I wish to place this trust which God has reposed in the sovereigns of the State of New York, where it is, on high and lofty ground, and I wish the sovereign electors of this State to act and execute that trust in accordance with every doctrine which humanity, political morality, and sound policy demand. If I was standing on this floor to-night, sir, simply to advocate the doctrine of a party; if I was here as a political doctrinaire to enunciate some new thing, then I think I might be questioned; then I think it might be proper that you should sound the depths of my faith or the wisdom of that I announce. But I am here simply to say to you to-night, what I believe the sovereigns of New York believe, the doctrine they hold. If you question the grounds of their faith go to them. I am not responsible for the faith that is in them. I only propose to-night to give you just that which I accept and believe to be historically true; that the people have very high and glorious conceptions of this function of sovereignty. You can go to a man on the other side of the Atlantic, and he can talk to you about the privilege of voting, but does that privilege of voting make him a sovereign? When you come to this glorious State of New York, the man who puts his ballot in the box knows he is a sovereign by the grace of God, free and independent. It is the sovereignty, sir, that is in him that I am here to interpret and vindicate, and, I trust shall be able to do it. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the people of the State of New York are historically possessed of certain information. They know certain things about these questions; they may not, all of them have their knowledge from books; they may not, like the honorable gentleman [Mr. Curtis], be read in Lord Coke, Blackstone, and with all the wisdom of Story to back them; but the knowledge they have is traditional, they have got it from the fathers of the revolution; from the sages, the political guides of the people of this country in times that are past. They know what equality before the law means; they know that a man is equal before the law when he is entitled to the protection of the law; they know that the child is equal before the law; that the woman is equal before the law, and that now, the freedman is equal before the law. Equal in what way sir? Equal in his claim for the protection of his life, liberty and property; equally amenable on the other hand to the laws of his country, so that if he violates any of them, he has nothing to say, he is equal before the law. But there is not a gentleman in my audience that does not know that that equality before the law does not make him an equal participator with me in the sovereignty I enjoy. The people of the State of New York also know that which their ancestors knew, that a man may come to a country and have a right of sojournment in it; that as a sojourner and guest of the country, he is entitled to certain respect and to the enjoyment of certain rights. Mr. Chairman, when we remember that this is a christian people; when we understand that these people know something of the Mosaic institutions; they know what it is to be a sojourner in a strange land; they know a man there may remain a sojourner from his birth to his death, and not acquire any rights in the country, except those conceded to him by the laws of the land. The mere effect of sojournment in a strange land is not to make a man a citizen of that country. They also understand that the children and the wives the engrafted stock and the branches of their family have certain rights—rights in common with them as citizens of this fair land. They also know this doctrine, that there are two kinds of citizenship in this country; that two kinds of citizenship have always been known to men of the Anglo-Saxon and Hibernian blood and lineage. There is a citizenship of him who is born free and entitled under the law only to certain privileges, and there is a citizenship of him who being also born free, is yet one of the sovereigns of this land. Years ago, sir, in the early history of Great Britain there was but one sovereign; years ago there was no voice heard that Parliament was sovereign, and even now, although you announce the doctrine of the sovereignty of Parliament, you know there is a power in that country that will check it. Much as England may boast of its institutions, all that can be said of it is, that it is a government of blended sovereignty; it is not an absolute monarchy, nor is it a pure republic like ours. There the sovereignty is divided; there is a partial sovereignty in the people, and a higher sovereignty in her who sits upon the throne. In this country we have no such doctrine. The free born electors of the State of New York are its sovereigns. They are sovereigns by the same right and title that her majesty claims to be the sovereign of Great Britain; their sovereignty comes to them by inheritance and under law; but there is no one to share that sovereignty except those that they permit to share it with them. Their children may grow up to be heirs of this same glorious covenant with them, and those who may be invited to this land; and who go through certain requisites, may also share this sovereignty with them. But that you must remember is always on invitation of those who have it originally, extended to those who come here and embrace certain conditions. It does not come to the naturalized man as of right, it comes to him by covenant. The people of this State, therefore understand that there is a citizenship which means magistracy, judicial, executive, representative, and supreme magistracy. They know there is another kind of citizenship which merely means a right to an inheritance of that sovereignty when the time may come, according to the institutions of the country, a right to enjoy certain privileges of the land, and the people of the State of New York understand that by the organic law of this land. Need I say to you that this is recognized in the Constitution of the United States, the difference between the citizenship of the land and the political sovereignty in it. Why, sir, if they had been one and the same when Congress passed the original provision that citizens of one State should be entitled to the privileges and immunities of another State, why did not they undertake to say who should vote and who should not, as the test of political sovereignty. You know perfectly well they did not dare to trench on the rights of the people of the States in regard to this question, but they simply adopted a rule that those who were entitled to vote for members of the lower House of a State, should have the same privilege to vote for members of the House of Representatives in Congress assembled. There is no conflict—no conflict was attempted. But the distinction is clearly maintained in the Constitution, and has been maintained unto this day. Does any gentleman ask me to detain him at this time to refer him to Blackstone for authority on this question? Must I go back to Aristotle, to show that in his day the clear distinction was recognized by him, that citizenship was divided; that there are two kinds of citizenship. Let us see what the Stagiritae says very briefly, remembering that he, of all other men, that have written on this subject has given the highest definition of a republic—a definition which I wish in this day we could say we really enjoy:

"A government administered by the people at large, but administered with justice; not oppressive to any class of citizens, but impartially consulting the good of all."

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER—Yes sir.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I would ask the gentleman whether he believes it more becoming to quote Aristotle in this Convention, than to quote the sacred Scriptures?

Mr. CONGER—I will leave the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] to answer his own question. I read from Aristotle as follows: "There is nothing that more characterizes a complete citizen than having a share in the judicial and executive part of the government." Now, sir, there is an organic idea running down from the earliest period of republican governments, given to you by a man that lived 350 years before the Christian era, and it has come down through all time, permeating every country and every land where republican institutions have been established and acknowledged. It is no new idea, it is not an idea that the people of this country originated; it is an idea that they received as a common inheritance of humanity, and it is an idea which I trust will last until the last syllable of recorded time. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have made clear what views the people of the State of New York entertain on the general question of sovereignty and citizenship as connected with sovereignty, and the distinction that exists between that kind of citizenship and other kinds of citizenship, I am prepared to draw your attention, very briefly, to the question presented this afternoon, by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], in his eloquent address. No man can appreciate more highly than I do the beauty and the power of so eloquent an argument. But looking at it as a work of art, I find it is subjected to some of those conditions which always pertain to those works which we class above others for the elegance and power of their artistic expression. For it not rarely happens in examining a work of art you find that no little labor has been bestowed in some special direction, and in looking still further you find that the principal aim of the artist has been to hide and cover up some defect, either original or newly discovered. I will not trouble you with other instances, but you are aware that not unfrequently, when a jewel of great value is given to an artist, his great work, his chief aim is, in case there is some natural defect in it, as far as possible by the beauty and skill of his workmanship to hide it. I would not venture, sir, in the presence of this committee, to undertake to break up or analyze, or, on the other, put together again so clever a work as that of my honorable friend. All I ask is the privilege of casting a side light upon it, and perhaps I can discover the flaw, although it has been most artistically hid. Now, in regard to the argument presented by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], there is this very plainly to be said: If you admit that society is based upon man as an individual; if you concur with the learned gentleman and the disciples of his school, then you must concede all that follows from their premises. If you adopt the philosophy of Condorcet, and his school, if you take the French theory of man and society, I think you must follow legitimately the deductions based thereon, even to the verge of French libertinism. When the gentleman quoted to you this afternoon, the authority of the distinguished Mill, I should have been pleased if it was possible for him to say Mr. Mill was not a disciple of that school. Why, sir, the authority of Mill's name is no greater or higher authority than that of the Westminster Review. Although there is to be conceded to him superior advantage, both in the talent he possesses by nature, and the manner in which he applies it, yet, we may not receive his advocacy of any system to destroy or tarnish a cardinal doctrine of society. The doctrine of that school is in direct antagonism to the doctrine which the people have received, and which they have been taught. And if the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] will pardon me now for quoting the doctrine they received from the Bible—there is nothing more clearly taught by that Bible, and there is nothing more clearly to be accepted by every reasonable man than this simple enunciation, that society is not made up of man, but is made up of families. The family is the unit, the monad of society; and not man. If there are any who would question the divine authority of such a doctrine, or of the book in which the doctrine may be traced, I ask him if he can conceive for a moment, society as existing anywhere except in connection with the family. Was there ever in the pre-historic periods, a supposable case where society existed made up of man as a unit—man as a monad? No, sir, there is not a sentiment which we have on the subject; there is not an intuition which we may derive from the doctrines of revelation, or of the law of necessity, that does not concur in teaching us these plain simple propositions—society is made up of families; in society the family is the unit. Now, sir, if that be true, is there any difficulty in receiving the other doctrine that the man is the divinely constituted head and representative of the family? I know it is customary now-a-days to sneer at these doctrines, and I regret extremely to have a doctrine of such universal respect and authority with the people of this State, spoken of so lightly at some meetings which were informally held in this hall some weeks ago; but I am convinced of one thing, that the sovereign christian people of this State regard that doctrine as one of the corner stones of all modern society. So that on that question, if you concede my premises, there is no difficulty in coming to my conclusion: if you concede the gentleman's premises, I think you are bound to follow him to his conclusion. If it be true that God made man and woman and decreed that they twain should be one flesh; if it be true as a philosophical proposition that man is not a perfect animal without woman, and that the one is the complement of the other, in order to represent the generic idea of man in society; what is the use of recurring to the doctrine of natural rights in order to show that woman has a natural existence in society independent of and anterior to this law. But some will say that the woman as an individual should be protected. Certainly. Is she not protected? They pretend to say that under the common law some of her rights were very sedulously withheld from her, and I was astonished to perceive that no allusion had been made in the whole discussion upon this subject, as far as I could hear, to the authority that had always been claimed for the court of chancery in Great Britain and for the court of chancery in this State. Where will you find a more perfect protection of woman as married, in all her rights, in every single particular, than you find in the court of chancery of this State? When you come to the law which was passed in 1848, and modified as I understand in 1860, can you say reasonably and with wise regard to the legal proposition, that woman is better protected now in her rights, and in her property, than she was under the decrees of the old court of chancery? Why sir, it has been said on this floor that it has come to this; that when a wife owns property, it is a sort of prima facie evidence that her husband is utterly worthless if not worse. And if that be so, then simply the wife under this modern legislation has been reduced to the sad and deplorable level of being a protection to her husband in his wrongs upon society. But admitting that some modern statute or some application of the civil law, may have made some progress on the common law, which proposition I will not dispute; if it were a question presented to any father in this land, how he would protect his daughter in case she was likely to make an unfortunate marriage—would he be willing to throw her upon the rights secured by this modern statute, or would he not feel it to be an indisputable duty to protect her by the old fashioned form of a trust. Whether this be so or not—and I am not prepared to offer any authoritative opinion on this subject—has woman really gained anything by the agitation of this question? And that leads me to this other question: Is she likely to gain anything in her real interest by the agitation of this other question? Has it ever been so in the history of society? Go back to those periods when the Roman matron made a positive effort to establish a right in the State as antagonistic to the right of the husband. Go back to the Augustine age, if you please, when the law, which I think was named Lex Pappia-Poppæa was established, which called upon certain men of the nobility of Rome and obliged them to marry women at an early age, in order that they might hold certain offices in the State. Was there any benefit gained either to the community, to the Empire or to the Roman matron? She was degraded by such a law as that—almost as low as the reluctant Senator who was frequently driven into marrying a child of four or five years of age. But not to detain you, sir, in other matters, the historian records that this was the commencement of the decline of good manners in that Empire, and that by slow and insensible but sure degrees, the Roman matron sank from her high estate, and although at that time a hen-pecked Senator had to go to propitiate the Goddess Virginitas, yet after all her fate was sealed by the very antagonism presented in the law of the land, as between herself and the marital race. I cannot hope for any good to result to the matrons of this land from a similar policy in legislation. To me, it is a revolting and I presume an abhorrent idea to most of the members of this Convention. If I were to talk seriously to any of those who have advocated this doctrine, not so much on this floor as elsewhere, I would like to ask them this single question—whether, to their minds, the dignity of her who is known as the mother of Washington, would have been advanced at all, in their estimation or in their judgment, had she, in her day, been classed with the political body, and had the power of voting? We form all our judgment on such questions, not so much from the logical statements made in regard to them, as from our intuitions. The feeling a man has to his wife is the reflex of that sentiment which, as a son, he had to his mother, and the attempt to destroy the relation between the husband and the wife, or to take her from the position which she properly occupies, is partly an attempt to destroy the estimate which the son has of his mother; and I am convinced that in that light no caudid mind is willing to try the experiment proposed. But I suppose it is due to the committee that I should pass more rapidly to some other propositions before it, and devote this subject, farther than I have essayed to open it, to those who can best investigate the yearnings of human instinct in the breast of man to carry the woman whom he has made the partner of his life, to, and secure for her, sovereignty in the social scale as her true realm and noblest dignity. I must pass, Mr. Chairman, now to the consideration of other questions before this Committee, and I will introduce what I have to say by a direct reference to the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], who is better known to me, and probably to most of this Convention, as a professor of law of high repute in the city of New York. That learned gentleman undertook to lay down to this Convention the other day certain qualifications, five in number, as a test for some rule which he thought was sufficient to meet all the exigencies of the case. I would not like, at so late an hour, or in any ungenerous spirit to say that such a division as he has laid down, would hardly serve the purposes of a calm and elaborate exposition of the matter in a text-book because the classification was bad, some of its heads being those of inclusion while some others were heads of exclusion. But it is sufficient for my purpose to draw the attention of the committee to that which he seemed to make the principal guide of his own views and the test of propriety of action in the matter of extending negro suffrage and that was simply this—the incorporation into the mass of society of that 'class' of inhabitants. I wonder that the learned gentleman had failed to perceive that in the very statement of this as a test, he had virtually begged the whole question. He had not presented it except under a learned title in any other phase than that, in which it had always been presented to the intelligent jurists of this land. Why, sir, if he had incorporated at any time into the mass of the contents of his stomach some indigestible matter, he would have paid the penalty demanded by the laws of nature, and he would not have received the commendation of his physician. The incorporation into a mass in order to mean anything applicable to this case, implies an assimilable element; and had the forefathers of this nation seen a possibility of incorporating the negro into the mass of society, as an assimilable element, do you suppose they would ever have retained him in slavery? I am not here, to-night, to justify that institution, for I never did; but the test of the honorable gentleman is not presented in any sufficiently logical form in order to assist us in our investigation. The actual condition is one of hotch-potch, and not a true incorporation into the mass of society. If I were disposed to treat that proposition at all pleasantly, I would say that such an incorporation as that should receive an especial charter; for the reason which the present Constitution assigns that its object could not be attained under a general law. [Laughter.] Because, if there is any general law by which we can incorporate this race into our society, and make it an assimilable element. I would be obliged to the gentleman if he would show the way. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state what I suppose to be the views of the christian people of this commonwealth plainly, intelligently and fairly. I believe that it is the desire and the purpose of the christian people of this State, who I suppose represent the majority, to regard the negro just as he is to be regarded under the authority and sanction of that book which they receive as the guide of their life. It is no new thing in the history of this State that its christian people receive the black man as a fellow-christian, and it is too late, and it is unnecessary to go to the people with any idea based upon the ordinary views of his exterior, and tell them that psychologically he is not a man. No one receives that doctrine I suppose. But I have not heard that doctrine announced on this floor. That as a man he is capable of being christianized and educated, no one, I believe, in this State really doubts. But after all, that is not the question. I think, sir, we should view this in the light in which humanity presents it, that if we believe the negro is not capable of a true physical as well as moral improvement in this State of New York, we should be candid enough to tell him so. When we invite foreigners to come to this land, it is because we hope that they will be so incorporated into the mass of society, as to prove useful citizens and members of the social state. But how can any person regard the future status as it is really presented, as a practical question, supposing the negro can be incorporated into the mass of our society in this State? Now, sir, I have taken the trouble to procure that map [referring to a map of the world, showing the isothermal lines across the two continents], which is the only protest the scientific mind of this country can give against certain attempted practices to be enforced upon the people of this State, in regard to the future status of the negro. This map is prepared by the Department at Washington, for the purpose of showing, by certain lines drawn across from the old to the new Continent, the lines by which the citizens of the old world can safely emigrate to this country, and the belt of land within this country, which can make a home as safe to them in point of health and development as the home that they left. Ordinarily we supposed that all those in either hemisphere who dwell on the same parallels of latitude, are capable of passing from one country to another. But those lines teach a far different and a wiser lesson. You can see how the inhabitants who left Great Britain and the northern sections of the Continent, and came to this country, deviated very little from the line which science has taught. You can see how they came along that isothermal line at 50°, and landed in the State of New York or a little northward into the State of Massachusetts. You can see how the citizens of the lower section of Europe traveling along the line marked 60°, find their natural home in the southern part of this Union. But not to dwell upon this matter, it is sufficient to show you where the lines that run from the Continent of Africa express themselves on this side of the Atlantic, and it is very surprising that science should have developed the fact that there is no portion of this State of New York which can ever be a true home for any original citizen of Africa.

Mr. AXTELL — Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER — Yes, sir.

Mr. AXTELL — In what manner has science developed the fact?

Mr. CONGER — These lines are traced from Continent to Continent, by careful observations made by the most scientific minds on either side of the Atlantic, in determining the question of heat, and they are mostly expressions of the medium temperature of the countries in which the observations are taken, and these lines express the mean actual temperature from year to year. I do not mean to say that with reference to these lines it would not be safe for a citizen of Great Britain to go down below the 70th isothermal parallel to make it his home. But we very well know that if he goes as a laboring man, he can neither enjoy health or secure to himself a strong constitution. And just the same law, the same necessity forbids us going two or more lines above, if they were traced on that map and taking our home in the arctic regions. If you trace the lines which mark the continent of Africa from 70° to 70°, you see that they are expressed on this side from the north line of the north of Mexico, down to a point in South America just below the Brazils. And the meaning of all this is simply that the American home of the African lies between these lines. He may go ten degrees above it, but if he goes twenty degrees he goes at a considerable risk of all the effects that must necessarily follow in the change of his constitutional vigor. But when you propose to the negro that he should come from his native climate, or coming from the South, ten degrees above his natural range, should come here and make it his permanent home, I say you make a proposition to him which is against the laws of God, clearly traced and expressed on these two continents. I have no proposition to make in regard to what portion of the United States might possibly be a home for the African, where he could develop himself, and increase his constitutional vigor. My friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould] talked the other day about "brain culture," and, while I have not the time to pass any criticisms on that subject, you perceive that even if you admit his theory it is perfectly impracticable, if you put a man where he cannot develop his body and maintain a good constitution, or secure an average duration of human life. But some gentleman will say, in response to all this, "the negro does live in the State of New York." The practical question that really comes before the people of this State is, how does he live? What are the statistics which your own census give you on this subject? Do they show that the negro is capable of increase here? Has he increased, and if so, why and how? I will not detain you with all these particulars; but I have taken the trouble to look at the United States census from 1790. You will find that the population, free, colored, and slave, increased from 25,978 in 1790 until it reached its culminating point in 1840 to 50,000. Now, take that population sir, in 1840 at 50,000. If it had increased according to the laws which marked the white population of the State of New York at that time it would have increased at the rate of two forty-one one hundredths per cent each year, and that would have given you 80,000 negroes. What is the fact? Instead of the negro population of the State of New York being 80,000 you find your census in 1865 puts it below 45,000. How will you account for this difference between what would have been his natural increase and the positive status of the population? —

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — Will the gentleman repeat his last statement?

Mr. CONGER — Had he increased according to the annual rate of population, the lowest in the State of New York for the white population during a period —

Mr. HAND — I would ask the gentleman if he cannot perceive that that difference consists in the acquisition of foreigners to the white population?

Mr. CONGER — I am not giving the gentleman the per centage of the black population to the white. I am giving him the absolute numbers.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — What was the last amount of the population — 50,000?

Mr. CONGER — The colored population of the State of New York in 1840 was 50,031. The population in 1865 was 44,708.

Mr. LUDINGTON — May I ask the gentleman a question, whether he does not know that by reason of the Fugitive Slave law in 1850, some nine thousand of them fled from the State of New York into Canada, as he will see by the census of that year?

Mr. TAPPEN — I think I can afford an explanation by asking my colleague [Mr. Conger] a question. I would ask him whether the present census of 1865, was not taken by a gentleman who then was Secretary of State, Mr. Chauncey M. Depew? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER — The census of Canada shows in 1850 a colored population of about 2,000, and in 1860 less than 9,000 more. But perhaps it would be more satisfactory to the committee that I should run over all these figures. In 1790, the sum total of the black population was 25,978; in 1800, 30,717; in 1810, 40,350; in 1814, 38,034; in 1820, 40,068; in 1830, 44,945; in 1840, 50,031; in 1850, 49,069; in 1860, 49,005; including 3,313 blacks and 382 mulattoes that were of foreign birth. So that in 1860 there were only 45,000 that were born in the United States, and residents of the State of New York. Now, sir, if you will take the trouble to look over the percentage which marked the increase of the white population of this State, you will discover that the lowest rate we had for many years was 2 41-100, and that would make the natural increase of the black race in the State of New York, from 1840 down to the present time, 30,000; so that the last census instead of giving us a population less than 45,000, should have given us a population of 80,000. Supposing that there was a mistake in the late census, as suggested by my associate from Westchester [Mr. Tappen]—suppose the population of the black man shared the same misfortune which the population of the city of New York and the county of Kings shared, by which under that estimate instead of gaining anything either by a foreign increase or by a natural rate of increase, they made a positive loss—suppose that the true colored population of the State of New York in 1865 was 50,000, you have got to account for 30,000 according to the law of increase which determined the white population of the State of New York. I shall not ask the gentlemen of this Convention to draw upon their own private knowledge in regard to the unfortunate fate which has everywhere attended the settlement of the negro within our State, about which I have been told from time to time by gentlemen who are in and out of this Convention, that there is no question whatever, in order to show that the negro race cannot maintain good health or a vigorous constitution, or live to old age, in this climate of the State of New York, and under the institutions of the State. Now I put this simple question to you, whether you can as a christian people, in obedience to the laws of humanity, propose to the negro that he shall make the State of New York his permanent home in such a way that if he comes and settles here he should become a citizen? When you invite foreigners to come to this country, it is because you believe that if they come and settle with you, they will promote not only your own material prosperity, but enhance their own. But, in the case of a negro, the census returns collected by your own State, as well as the United States, show that no such result is possible for him. I think, therefore, sir, we are justified in saying that humanity requires at the hands of the intelligent white race in the State of New York, that they should say in all frankness and in all kindness to the black population, "You can never be permanently and advantageously located in the State of New York; you are destined, by the laws of nature, over which we have no control, to be sojourners in this State." If that be so, sir, it is no violation of the great principles of Anglo-Saxon law which recognizes a distinction always between denizens and citizens. But suppose you entice the negro and ask him to come here now, by the voice of this Convention, to be a permanent citizen of the State; you offer him a home, sir, and what do you give him? You give him a grave. You furnish no true and just facility for his increase, or the increase and development of his family. You offer him liberty and political rights, but after all, practically, if these census returns are true, the liberty you offer is the liberty to die. I had designed to illustrate and confirm this view by other matters and facts that I had collated from the census, and by considerations drawn from his physical type by which the negro can never be amalgamated with the superior race without moral degradation to both and physical degradation to the latter. But the time and patience of the Convention are exhausted, and I feel some evidence of that in the fact that I am not strong enough to go through in a mere outline of presentation the thoughts that I desired to present to this committee. Now, Mr. Chairman, what is to be the conclusion of this matter? If you say that you will adopt the theory of natural rights, why then you cannot be consistent unless you admit the woman as well as the negro to the franchise. I think the ladies who presented their views here the other night, had the best part of the argument, when they lectured their republican friends for giving such high privileges to the negro man and denying them to their own equals in citizenship. I thought there was some propriety in the criticism when they said that their hope had been in the Constitution of the United States, by which they were recognized as citizens, but the amendment to the Constitution had effectually cut them off from that hope. If you propose, sir, to send this question down to the people, in my judgment you ought to submit it as it really stands. If you propose to ask the people to give up some share of their sovereignty, you should be able to show to the people a reason why they should demit that sovereignty. You should show some great necessity, based either upon public law, upon humanity or the principles of christian faith and practice, why you should ask the negro to come here and make this his home. In the State of New York you did not treat the alien that way, in the year 1825. In 1825 a law was passed giving limited rights of citizenship by which aliens were enabled to hold real estate, become liable for taxes, duties, and assessments, and for the performance of military duty, in the same manner as citizens might, on filing their declaration, but they were not capable of voting or holding office or serving on juries, except when the jury de medietate linguae was summoned. Now, there is a clear distinction, a distinction of citizenship, a distinction which you made in 1825 to the white population coming to this State, not merely coming as sojourners, but coming and declaring their intentions of citizenship. You told them that on declaring their intentions they might hold limited citizenship, that they should render military service, and that they should pay their taxes, but that they should not be capable of voting or holding office, or serving as jurors. Now I take it that in the statute of 1825, this great distinction was properly maintained, a distinction by which incomplete citizenship is recognized with all its privileges and its duties clearly defined. But if you proceed as is now proposed, the question is presented to my mind, and I shall feel it my duty to present it to this committee, in order to get an expression from it on the question, whether it is really your intention that the sovereign electors of the State of New York shall admit negroes to the highest grade of political citizenship? Do you mean them to serve as jurors? Do you mean them to hold positions in your courts? Do you mean them to be capable of holding the executive function of magistracy? Because if you do not, then I think that you ought very clearly to define the nature of the citizenship you want to give.

Mr. FOLGER — I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. Conger] a question. Is there anything to prevent a negro being a juror now, if he has the property qualification?

Mr. CONGER — That depends altogether on the practice of localities.

Mr. FOLGER — Is there anything in the law which prevents him from being a juror if he has the property qualification?

Mr. CONGER — I presume there is no absolute law against it.

Mr. LUDINGTON — I ask the gentleman whether a Democratic sheriff in the county of Seneca, has not recently placed the name of a colored man among the list of jurors, and whether that man was not drawn and did not sit on the jury in that county quite recently.

Mr. CONGER — As to the fact which is quoted I know nothing, but I am prepared to take very decided and high grounds on this question on the ground of public policy. We have reached, Mr. Chairman, a new stage in the history and relations of the State of New York to the general government. It was never pretended until the present day, that any authority at Washington should say to the sovereign electors of this State in what manner that sovereignty should be exercised or shared; but yet, you remember that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke] said two or three days ago that a decree had gone forth, the inevitable result of which was that the negro should become a citizen of the State. I undertake to say, sir, that if you give a true and a fair construction to the amendment proposed in Article 14 to the Constitution of the United States, that that same doctrine of limited citizenship still shows itself. If the United States government had the power and authority to say that a negro resident of the State of New York should be a citizen, in the highest sense in which I use the term, why did not the same amendment declare that he should vote? If he was to be a citizen of the highest grade, "an complete citizen," as Aristotle says; if he was to have all the functions of magistracy, and if he was capable of holding office, why, I ask, did not the same amendment declare that he should vote? Congress never pretended to assume any jurisdiction over this question and it has not yet. All that the second amendment says, is, that whenever the right to vote is denied, then the State that will deny that vote shall lose a certain share of its representation.

Mr. E. BROOKS — Will the gentleman [Mr. Conger] allow me to state that Congress has gone so far recently as to declare that a State Convention in session as we are here to-day, unless they recognize the right of suffrage for the negro, shall not be recognized in their relations with the Federal Government. That is substantially the proposition of Mr. Kelly of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONGER — Does the gentleman [Mr. E. Brooks] mean to inform the committee that any such declaration has absolutely been enacted into law?

Mr. E. BROOKS — I do not mean to say that; but I mean to say this, that innovations of the Congress of the United States upon the established rights and usages of States have gone so far as to admit of that proposition; and that within the last forty-eight hours a bill has been pressed in the United States Senate, compelling equal recognition of the rights of suffrage for the negro in all the States of the Union.

Mr. CONGER — Whatever the exact status of the negro as presented by the national Congress is, I think the sovereign electors of the State of New York are prepared to meet the issue. Not that I, for one, propose to make the issue, nor that I shall propose any measure which would be in derogation of any just right of the national Congress; not that I propose to bring the sovereign citizens of the State of New York in conflict with Congress, or any of those who seek to extend such unlawful influence over the votes and the actions of the sovereign people of the State of New York; but, sir, I think that this is the political question that we should send down to the people: "Will you deny this vote, because if you do, you lose a certain representation in Congress?" Small though it is now, it may be large one of these days. I want the people to look at that matter very calmly and to decide it very carefully. I do not suppose it is necessary to present the question of a property qualification, in order that the people shall vote on this thing intelligently. I had intended to show the reasons why we could consistently set aside the property qualification in this age of the world, but the time and the temper of this committee forbid that I should go into any other branch of the question. But as it stands now, with this amendment, I say as a matter of law that although Congress might have designed to compass something else, it has only made the black man a citizen in the second degree; he is not, by the proposed amendments (which are not law yet, for they have not passed, but on the supposition that they will pass one of these days) a citizen possessed of the highest functions of citizenship; he is not of necessity, a voter of the State of New York, if he is a resident therein, and the people have their choice whether they will accept the conditions imposed by way of penalty in this amendment, or whether they will not. I propose, Mr. Chairman, when opportunity offers to present this question to this committee, and through this committee, to the Convention. I think that is the practical question to present. I also want to make a distinction between the two kinds of citizenship. I am willing to admit for the time being that the negro shall be a citizen of the second grade, but I am not willing to admit him without the consent of the sovereigns of the State of New York, by a vote taken by them separately on that question; I am not willing to recognize him as a citizen with the highest functions of citizenship, and therefore I shall ask the Committee to say, and I wish the people to decide this question, if an opportunity shall be presented to them, whether they mean to permit the negro in the State of New York to be a candidate for any office in the gift of the people, either executive, judicial or representative. It strikes me that this is the fair, plain and direct course which this question ought to take.

Mr. RATHBUN — Will the gentleman [Mr. Conger] allow me to inquire if he knows the fact that the colored man to-day, who possesses two hundred and fifty dollars worth of real estate free from debt, may be a candidate, legally, for any office in the State?

Mr. CONGER — Then I propose in a proposition to be submitted either to this Convention or to the people, to have that thing forever settled, that the possibility shall no longer exist.

Mr. RATHBUN — I ask the gentleman if he does not know that such is the case now to-day?

Mr. CONGER — It exists by bare possibility because of the very inefficient way in which all these questions have been regulated by former enactments, and by constitutional provisions. But it is time, Mr. Chairman, that I should close. I regret extremely that for the last half hour or so I have felt so utterly inadequate to pursue the discussion after a plan that I had so imperfectly sketched; but, as I said before, I do not wish this question to be now set aside in any way in which the true merits of the case cannot be presented to the people. So far as the present negro vote is concerned, it is quite insignificant. Numerically it is not worth any agitation, but on great principles and with regard to the future, it is a matter, in my judgment, of the highest practical moment. You do not know, sir, and no man can tell in the years that are to come, what an influx we may have from the Southern States, of this same population. The state of things has changed so materially since the adoption of the Constitution, since 1846, that I think it is now high time that the sovereign people of the State of New York, should speak out in clear and unmistakable language on this subject. I do not think that opportunity should be presented, in any contingency, of a reaction in the Southern States —

Mr. DUGANNE — I would like to ask the gentleman merely if he supposes that at any future time we will have such a great influx of southern blacks as can overcome the isothermal lines. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER — Yes; in obedience to the laws by which these lines have been violated ever since the negro had a home in the State of New York. But that is not the question—that is not the issue. If a hundred thousand of these people were to come here, colonized for any special purpose, and brought here as paupers, unable to support themselves, and a charge upon the public charities, or the revenues of the State, who could shut them out? What would bebar them, if you give them citizenship and sovereignty, from coming here and maintaining their home, and exercising the elective franchise? I do not mean to say that it is within the highest possibility that such a course as that would be adopted by any political party in this State, in order to secure a vote on some exciting election, but I do think the question of future migration of the colored population to the State of New York is one of very great practical moment. We do not know how long the present status of things may exist in the South. I think the people of the State of New York—land [Mr. Conger] opposed to the negro voting when he acquires a property qualification?

Mr. FOLGER — Is the gentleman from Rock-

Mr. CONGER—Yes, sir.

Mr. FOLGER—Then you are opposed to the traditions of the people?

Mr. CONGER—I am not opposed to any one exercising the elective franchise who has received that privilege under any existing law. I do not propose, as the majority of this committee do, to disfranchise any one on account of color; but I propose hereafter to lay down a new rule, I shall propose in the amendment that I shall submit, that every man who is now entitled to vote, shall have the liberty of voting, but in reference to those who are to enjoy the franchise in the future, that that question shall be submitted to the people. If they approve of that action, I, of course, consent. But I am not willing that this question should be passed over at this time in such a way that we will have no clearer understanding in the future, whether a negro is a citizen of the highest grade. I regret, sir, that I have detained the committee so long, but I hope, that however imperfectly I may have presented some leading thoughts and views in this matter, that there is a kindness and an appreciation sufficient in this committee to give the views I have sought to present, a candid and a fair interpretation.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of, Mr. Dwight, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the Report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. MURPHY the Convention adjourned.

Mr. MERRITT, from the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., unanimously report the following amendment to their report as heretofore submitted.

1st. Strike out of the second section the first sentence, to wit: "The Senate shall consist of thirty three members."

2d. After the word "territory" in the third section, insert the following words: "And the first district shall be entitled to such additional Senators as its citizen population shall in proportion to that of the entire State entitle it."

Which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUGANNE called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that persons of African descent, residing in the State of New York, are entitled to the same rights and immunities claimed by persons of European descent.

Mr. LIVINGSTON — It may be that I do not exactly comprehend the meaning of this resolution, but it seems to me that in its present shape it is so vague that the members of this Convention, who may vote for it without having had an opportunity to fully consider the proposition, might be found to have voted for a measure which they would not have done. In order, therefore, to limit the meaning of this resolution, and to avoid any misconstruction which might otherwise be placed upon a vote, by which it may be adopted or rejected, I beg leave to offer the following amendment thereto, and to call for the ayes and noes thereon:

"Provided, however, that in the opinion of this Convention, the amalgamation of the two races is to be deprecated, and should be prohibited by the fundamental law in this State."

Mr. GREELEY — I move that the whole subject be laid on the table.

Mr. DUGANNE called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number not seconding the call, the ayes and noes were refused.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Greeley and it was declared carried.

Mr. MERRITT called up for consideration the resolution offered by him a few days ago.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the consideration of all propositions having in view the mode or manner of submitting the Constitution as revised or any article or any part thereof to the people, be postponed until the Constitution or proposed amendments shall have been definitely acted upon by the Convention, and prepared for submission.

Mr. HUTCHINS moved to amend the same by substituting therefor the following:

Resolved, That a Committee of fifteen be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into and report upon the following subjects:

1st. The arrangement of the several articles and sections of the Constitution, as amended and adopted.

2d. The manner and form in which the Constitution as amended and adopted shall be submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection.

3d. The publication of the amendments, or of the Constitution as amended.

4th. The form of the notice of election.

5th. The form of the ballot.

Mr. MERRITT — I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CONGER — I would like to inquire of the mover of this resolution, whether he intends by the scope of the first part of the resolution, to prevent by special order any determination, or to forestall any action of this Convention in regard to any proposed amendment, or any proposed method of submitting any question to the people, so that if the Convention at this time, adopt this resolution, it will be considered as a special order referring to some future day every vote which the Convention may take on any matter which is either now or will be in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUTCHINS — Certainly not.

Mr. ALVORD — When the resolution, to which this is a substitute, was offered a few days ago by my friend from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], I was opposed to its passage at that time, because of the fact, that we had before us in the Committee of the Whole, a question which had already been advocated, and which that resolution must necessarily, or by implication, have cut off for the then time. I, sir, shall vote for this substitute for the reason that now that question has been virtually disposed of, at least for the present, by the action of the Committee of the Whole. I thought, at the time, the question then being agitated for a separate submission of any portion of the Constitution, was, to say the least of it, premature, but we have got over that difficulty. We have already disposed of that question so far as that action was concerned, and it seems to me now eminently proper that we should delay this question of a separate submission of any proposition made before us, until we have finally concluded our labors, and we can devise what portion, in our judgment, shall be submitted separately, or what portion shall be submitted as a whole. I do not myself, as far as regards the agitation of the particular subject which is in the minds of every member of this Convention, think there should be any debate stifled, or any change of opinion growing out of any political arrangement whatever; but I do desire, in these the intervening stages of our action here as a Convention, we shall have no such disorganizing element brought into our midst for the purpose of taking our minds away from questions which should be legitimately in consideration before us. It is for this reason, sir, and for the reason that this is an opportune time for the movement, that I am in favor of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

Mr. HARRIS — I approve of this resolution. Its form and provisions are very carefully prepared; but yet, sir, I think, it is premature to act upon this subject now. What will there be for this committee of fifteen to do? We have not agreed yet upon a single proposition to be submitted to the people—upon a single amendment, and unless we make much more rapid progress than we have yet made, it will be very long before this committee will have anything to do. Undoubtedly this is the proper mode of preparing for the submission of our work to the people. In every Convention, towards the close of it, when the deliberations of the Convention were nearly over, when there was something to be submitted to the people, then a committee of revision has been raised to arrange the order proposed for submission, and to arrange the mode of submission, whether in separate articles or together; and until we have something to submit, until we have made some further progress in reference to this matter, it seems to me that we are acting very prematurely. We have not a single thing to submit, and non constat we never shall have. Why shall we begin at the wrong end and prepare the machinery for submitting the matter to the people, before we have adopted anything to submit.

Mr. HUTCHINS — The law under which we are acting, section 5, provides:

"The said amendments or Constitution shall be submitted by the Convention to the people, for their adoption or rejection, at the next general election, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November next, and every person hereby entitled to vote for delegates may, at that election, vote on such adoption or rejection, in the election district in which he shall then reside, and not elsewhere. The said amendments or the said Constitution shall be voted upon as a whole, or in such separate provisions as the Convention shall deem practicable, and as the Convention shall by resolution declare. In either case the Convention shall prescribe the form of the ballot, the publication of the amendments or of the Constitution, and the notice to be given of the election."

That duty devolves upon us by the terms of the law under which we act. The gentleman said, the resolution is carefully worded. It is but the transcribing of the language of the statute into the form of a resolution. The only question is, whether this resolution is now premature. Under other circumstances I should have certainly said that it was; but the Convention will perceive how long a time has been taken upon this very question of separate submission, which is provided for in the law under which we are convened. On the very threshold of our debates another question comes up, and whether that shall be separately submitted or not may consume weeks in discussion, and so on with the twenty other subjects that may come up. It is for the purpose of preventing this, that I propose this resolution. If we adopt no amendments, then no Constitution is adopted, and there will be no work for this committee; if there are amendments, then this committee will be prepared to act; and it is for the purpose of saving this long discussion that we have been listening to for a week past, that I have offered the resolution as a substitute to that of the gentleman from St Lawrence [Mr. Merritt].

Mr. KERNAN — I differ with my friend from New York [Mr. Hutchins] as to his premises. While on a certain subject the only question before this Convention was whether a proposition, which all concede must be submitted to the people in one form or another, should be submitted separately or as a part of the proposed Constitution, yet no long time has been spent in this Convention discussing that proposition. Indeed, no time at all, scarcely, has been devoted to its discussion. The truth is the time has been spent in discussing questions which must go before the people, and which cannot be determined by this Convention; therefore, sir, there is no need of this resolution to save time, so far as our past experience is concerned in discussing the question of separate submission here. It seems to me, therefore, that there is great force in the remarks made by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], that it is not wise at this time to raise a committee and thus take from this body the opportunity of discussing whether one proposition or another is to be submitted separately, or submitted as a part of the others. We are not prepared to say, it seems to me at this time, and we should not raise a committee to consider and report at this time, in reference to the mode and manner of submitting propositions which shall be matured here. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] desires to save time by stopping discussions here on questions which should be discussed before the people, and which must be passed upon by them, why he can do it by calling gentlemen to the point involved in debate, and determination here. Now, sir, there has been scarcely anything said in reference to a separate submission of any proposition in this body, and I do not concur with the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], and I should be sorry to believe that the vote taken the other evening, on a single proposition, at the close of the session, when but few were here and none expected it, was to stand as a determination by this body that either that question should not be solved by a separate submission, or that other questions were not to be discussed and determined here, whether they would be separately submitted or conjointly with others. Now, sir, I trust and believe that it is wise for all here, whatever their views may be, to postpone for the present, the raising of the committee to arrange, determine and report, as to the submitting of our work, especially as we have not adopted a single proposition in this body, and have not gone over a single section of the report that has been made. I, therefore, appeal to members that we should not, at this stage, be cut off from expressing our views in reference to a separate submission of one question or another; that we shall not have all that referred to a committee, and all discussion upon it cut off until the close of our labors, when there will be no time for discussion at all.

Mr. HALE — I am in favor of the adoption of this resolution, not entirely for the reason stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], who proposed it, although it might have some weight with me. I had the honor of introducing a resolution yesterday which was laid on the table, substantially to the effect of this, except that it differed in regard to the size of the committee, and also that the present resolution proposes to give more subjects to this committee than were mentioned in my resolution. I am in favor of this resolution, not for the purpose of preventing or forestalling debate upon this question, but for the purpose of having a convenient committee to whom all resolutions and questions that may arise relating to the form of submission, of any amendments that we may propose, may be referred. I think it is eminently wise there should be such a committee appointed; it will not prevent discussion by gentlemen whenever any question is raised on the subject of separate submission, but it will probably prevent determined action by this Convention upon that subject until after we have acted on the different propositions that are made to amend this Constitution. It seems to me that we shall all be better prepared to determine definitely on this question, after the reports of the standing committees are made and acted upon, and after we know what they have passed upon. It does not seem to me, however, that this fact is an objection to the appointment of a committee; we shall undoubtedly do something; I do not suppose there is a gentleman in this Convention who doubts that some amendments will be proposed to the present Constitution. I see no harm, therefore, in appointing a committee now, a committee which will not be obliged to act, and which will not act until after the reports of the other standing committees are in; a committee to which matters can be referred that relate to this subject of submission. I must say, Mr. President, that I do not agree with my friend from New York [Mr. Hutchins] as I understood him, that the question as to whether the people shall be allowed to vote separately upon the report of the Suffrage Committee has been determined by this Convention. All that the Committee of the Whole have determined upon that matter is to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. It is known to this body that many who voted against that amendment and were opposed to it, did not by that vote intend to express themselves against a separate submission, or what is equivalent, against allowing the people to vote separately against this or any portion of the Constitution. But I think we shall be better prepared to vote upon that question of submission when it comes before the Convention, after the standing committees have reported, and the most convenient manner of postponing the action of the Convention will be the appointing of this committee, which will not act until the reports of the standing committees are in. I propose as an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] the addition of these words: "That said committee is not to report until after the reports of the standing committees have been received and acted upon."

Mr. HUTCHINS— I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale].

The PRESIDENT— The Chair will inform the gentleman that the amendment is offered to the resolution of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt].

Mr. MERRITT— I will accept the amendment.

Mr. MURPHY— I do not discover from the reading of that resolution that any member of this Convention will be prevented, when a subject shall be under consideration, either in the Committee of the Whole, or in Convention, from proposing an amendment to such article providing for a separate submission to the people. As I understand the reading of the resolution, it is that the subject of separate submission may be examined into and reported upon by the committee proposed to be raised by it; leaving it to the Convention in its superior capacity to determine in any case whether it will or will not submit any articles separately, to be voted upon by the people. With that understanding, I have no particular objection to the resolution.

Mr. MERRITT— That is my understanding of the proposition, and with that view I accepted the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

Mr. CONGER— I am frank to say that that is not my view of either the meaning of this resolution, or what I now understand to have been the object in offering it. When I first put the question to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], who offered this proposition, he said, if I understood him correctly, that he did not mean that this should operate as a special order to control certain ends or purposes to which I alluded.

But when, Mr. President, the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] rose to give his view of the operation of this resolution, he said distinctly, that it would operate to prevent a submission of any single proposition for a separate submission, either in Committee of the Whole or in the Convention. He avowed the object to be not only to cut off debate upon this proposition, but to cut off a vote. Now you will perceive, and I think the inference is irresistible, that in referring to a committee, a certain classification of the work in this Convention, with power, you are really establishing a special order for the control and management of your business. Suppose sir, in Committee of the Whole, I present a proposition that a certain clause in the Constitution is to be separately submitted to the people, and the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], immediately rises and moves to refer the proposition of the gentleman from Rockland, to a committee of fifteen having charge of that subject; I am shut out from my privilege of either presenting the proposition, or asking a vote upon it, because by a special order you have referred the whole subject-matter to this committee of fifteen. Is not that it?

Mr. ALVORD— Certainly.

Mr. CONGER— Exactly. That is a frank avowal. You pass this resolution, and every gentleman, no matter what his views may be on any subject, is precluded by that action from even making a motion in Committee of the Whole or in the Convention that a certain proposition be submitted to the people for separate vote. Now, Mr. President, if the object of this was simply to postpone the action upon these propositions to a convenient time, I would have no objection. But do you not see that the immediate and direct effect of it is to preclude every gentleman, no matter what his views may be, no matter what his position may be in this Convention, on one side or the other, with the political majority or minority, from presenting any proposition in Committee of the Whole or in Convention from calling the ayes and noes on that question? It is referred to the committee of fifteen, and how will you ever get a vote, even when the report of the committee of fifteen comes in, can you raise a vote on the original proposition? I would like to ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] if I am not correct in saying that this is the parliamentary effect of the resolution, that we are about to establish as a special order.

Mr. ALVORD— I think the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], is entirely mistaken in regard to the operation of it, and that on the incoming of the report of the committee it can be amended in any particular or regard, and upon such amendment the ayes and noes can be called in the Convention, and discussed as long as they please, under the rule.

Mr. KERNAN— Did I not understand the gentleman to say, the object of this was to save time in this body, by preventing discussion or argument as to whether there should be really a submission of separate clauses, or not, and referring that to a committee, who were to submit a report?

Mr. ALVORD— I will answer the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], and will answer the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], also. Sir, I say to the gentleman from Oneida that my idea in regard to this matter is, and that upon which my action proceeds, that this question of separate submission is prematurely brought into this Convention. It belongs to another and a different stage of our proceedings, and should go down to that stage in the regular order of our business. It only complexes and involves us in difficulties, in reference to these separate and distinct propositions, each and every of them, as they may come up, can as well be, and better, as far as the time and energy of this Convention is concerned, taken care of, examined, discussed, and determined, at the close of our labors, than now. I, sir, with the consent of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], if he will permit me still to continue, desire to offer an amendment, so as to carry out distinctly and clearly my views: "that all resolutions referring to the subject embraced in this resolution shall be referred to that committee as of course, without debate." I desire to say, in answer to my friend from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], in a remark I understood him to make when he was up the first time, that he misunderstood me. I did not say, I do not wish to be so understood, that the determination of the vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], determines the sense of this Convention upon the question of separate submission. I do not think I did. I am aware of the fact that that vote was taken under peculiar circumstances, that there were many who were in favor of separate submission on this floor who did not like the form of the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and who, therefore, are recorded as apparently against the idea of separate submission. But what I did say was this: that in my estimation, the discussion of the question of separate submission was at that time premature, but that I avoided pressing, either by my vote or by my voice, the motion of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], because that question had been opened up in the Committee of the Whole, and I thought it a little ungenerous to say the least, in that manner to cut off the debate which had so far proceeded; but when that debate had been stopped by the action of the Committee of the Whole, I thought it entirely proper that the proposition of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] should come before the house and have its final action in regard to what should be the disposition of this matter from now till the end of our labors. I wish to speak plainly on this subject. We are to have thrown into our faces every hour and minute of the day at which we shall come to the different orders of business, this question of separate submission, and the chances are to be rung on it from time to time throughout the whole of our labors. I ask, gentlemen, if they do not know that there lies upon the table of this Convention to-day, to be called up at any moment, when the mover requires, a separate and distinct proposition in regard to negro suffrage; resolving that it is the sense of this Convention that it ought to be submitted separately? Now, sir, unless the majority (I speak not of a political majority) of this house shall see fit to move that that lie on the table, we are to be compelled to come up here and have a discussion on that, outside of the Committee of the Whole, and outside of the action of the Convention on that report, and it is for the purpose of getting rid of this difficulty, and bringing this down to the time when all men can speak with the entire length and breadth of their opinions and desires, and speak about it understandingly, and take it as a separate and distinct proposition, one from the other, that I desire this resolution to receive the assent of the majority of this Convention, and I trust, therefore, in this view, and in this light of the subject there will be no question in regard to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I am in favor of the resolution as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord.] We shall act, if we pass this resolution, in conformity with the Convention of 1821, and the Convention of 1846. The question of the separate submission of any article that was agreed upon in those Conventions, was never agitated until the close of the proceedings of each of them, and one of the reasons offered, and a very forcible one, not only in the Convention of 1821, by some of the most able men in that Convention, but also in the Convention of 1846, by some of the most able men there, was, that the Constitution could not be prepared, article by article, to pass upon each subject before the Convention as to their separate submission, and because the adoption of some articles, in connection with the adoption of other articles, if some were passed upon by the people, and others rejected, the symmetry and harmony of the whole instrument would be destroyed. We cannot tell, therefore, how much the adoption of one article is to be connected with the adoption of another article, or if one should be rejected and the other passed upon, the harmony of the whole is destroyed. It is for that reason, and to use the words now, of one of the most eminent members of the Convention of 1821: "It is impossible for us to determine as to the practicability of submitting several articles to the people until the determination of the whole, because the difficulty would be increased by the reflection, that the adoption of some articles, and the rejection of others, may greatly impair the symmetry of the whole instrument." Therefore, it is proper we should wait until we have passed upon all the articles submitted for our consideration, until we determine as to which shall be submitted separately. For that reason, I am in favor of the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. WEED—I do not know that I understand the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] fully, as to his opinion upon this question. As I understand the resolution and amendment offered by him, any resolutions that are offered bringing up the question of separate submission would be referred to this committee, and debate upon them stopped; now I do not understand that we, by raising a committee to whom these questions shall be referred, will prevent, for instance, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] renewing his amendment to the report upon the question of suffrage in the Convention, and discussing the amendment before the Convention under the rules. I ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] if, in his opinion, after the adoption of this resolution, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] could not in Convention offer the same amendment to the report of the Committee on Suffrage that he did in Committee of the Whole, and to have it discussed and passed upon.

Mr. ALVORD—In answer to that question I will say that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has a vested right that we, by resolution, cannot take away from him, to bring it up before this Convention and ask for a division of the question, and discuss it also.

Mr. WEED—I think, under the decision we have made in this Convention, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], has no more vested right upon that question of amendment, than any other member, because we decided that amendments are in order in the Convention. It seems that distinction must be made here, that we cannot by resolution prevent a member of this Convention from so amending a proposition, that, from its very terms, it would have to be submitted separately, and that when such an amendment is proposed, it being an amendment, to a proposition and germane to it, it must be considered and cannot be taken out of the Committee of the Whole and referred to a committee, but can be taken out of the Convention and referred to a committee, and in that view I do not see any objection to the resolution. If I thought it would prevent such amendments in the Committee of the Whole, and tend to change the proposition so as to compel it to be referred to the people separately I should oppose the resolution.

Mr. MERRITT—I certainly understood the resolution to allow any proposition to be submitted either in the Convention or Committee of the Whole, having in view the manner of submitting propositions to the people; but I did suppose that the disposition of such resolution or proposition would be referred to this committee, and this committee I understand is to be raised for the purpose of considering all such propositions, and, like any other standing committee, any subject of which they should have charge, would be referred to them; but since this discussion, and for the purpose of coming directly to the question, and considering the proposition of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] to be more nearly like the one I originally offered, I shall accept his amendment, and allow, as far as I am concerned, a division of the question when the vote shall be taken. I therefore accept the motion of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. MURPHY—The position in which I understood this resolution to stand when I spoke a few moments ago has now been changed by the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] and accepted by the original mover of the resolution. In that form I am constrained to oppose it. I cannot consent in advance, to limit and restrict the action of this Convention upon the different propositions which shall be submitted to them in regard to the amendment of the Constitution. We are, by the law under which we are assembled here, authorized to submit to the people, either as a whole or in separate propositions, the different matters that may come up for consideration here. These propositions are various; they relate to different subjects, some of which may appropriately be referred to the people separately. Others do not require any such distinct submission. I think it is in contravention of the law and would be unfair, in advance, to bind this Convention to say that none of these propositions shall be considered in connection with the different articles which may come up with the report for consideration. But sir, I am particularly opposed to this resolution, because it seems as if it were aimed at limiting the action of this Convention in regard to the amendment which I had the honor to propose a few days ago, in Committee of the Whole, which has been the subject of consideration. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] speaking ex cathedra on this subject says, I have a vested right to have the proposition voted upon in the Convention. I will merely say to him that he is not the presiding officer of this Convention. He has no authority to say what will be the determination of that officer, on those questions which shall be submitted to the Convention upon the rising of the committee, and if this resolution be adopted it will cut off all offer of that amendment on my part, notwithstanding I may have offered it in Committee of the Whole. I think it is highly unjust to cut off the minority in this Convention from having that question considered now, which has been so fully discussed in Committee of the Whole. I am opposed to it for another reason. I wish to follow up that amendment with another one, and that is the propriety of a separate submission, of the admissibility of the negroes to suffrage without the restriction of the property qualification. I want to have the determination of this committee and of this Convention upon the two projects: first, the submission to the people of the extension of the right of suffrage beyond what it is now, and also submitting to the people the question whether persons shall vote or not without the property qualification.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], that I have examined the proposition of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], and it only provides that resolutions should be referred to that committee, but does not provide that propositions, amendments, etc., should be referred to that committee, as I supposed it impossible to do. A proposition offered in Committee of the Whole cannot be referred to any committee outside. This does not propose to do that. It only proposes to refer resolutions which may be offered.

Mr. MURPHY—That may possibly be the proper construction of this resolution. I think it well however, that there should be no doubt upon the subject; and I therefore propose to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the resolution, as follows:

"But nothing herein contained shall limit the power of the Convention, in the Committee of the Whole, in the consideration of any subject, to so amend the article under consideration, as to submit the same to the people separately."

I do not know that I have anything more to add upon this subject. But I wish to have the determination of the Convention with regard to the proposition which I had the honor to submit, and the other proposition which I have already intimated that I intended to propose in such event. As regards other matters, it will be time enough when they come up for consideration in the Convention, for us to adopt this resolution.

Mr. SPENCER—When the question of a separate submission was first introduced in Committee of the Whole by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], on the proposition to submit an amendment in relation to a qualification requiring the ability to read and write, I took occasion to deprecate the introduction of the discussion of any question for a separate submission in the discussions of the Committee of the Whole, apprehending as I did, and as the experience of almost the past two weeks has proved, that it would occupy the time of the committee to the exclusion of the discussion of the proper subject before the committee. And I here wish to submit to the Convention, whether the law under which we are assembled authorizes the discussion of that question in that form. I now read from the fifth section of the law authorizing the meeting of this Convention. The clause which reads as follows:

"§ 5. The said amendments or Constitution shall be submitted by the Convention to the people, for their adoption or rejection, at the next general election, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November next, and every person hereby entitled to vote for delegates may, at that election, vote on such adoption or rejection, in the election district in which he shall then reside, and not elsewhere. The said amendments or the said Constitution shall be voted upon as a whole, or in such separate propositions as the Convention shall deem practicable, and as the Convention shall by resolution declare."

I suppose it to be impracticable that the Convention, in Committee of the Whole, shall by a resolution prescribe the manner of submitting any question before it to the people; but that, when that question comes up to be determined, it must be by a resolution of the Convention.

Mr. LAPHAM—I am opposed to the amendment last offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], for the reason that it is in direct contravention of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. Under his amendment all resolutions on this subject are to be referred to this committee without debate in the body of the Convention. I beg leave, sir, to differ respectfully from the statement of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], that this question of separate submission has not thus far occupied any considerable portion of the attention of the Convention. I have not been an inattentive listener to the proceedings of this body, either in the Convention or in Committee of the Whole, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] to the fact that three at least, of the most elaborate speeches which have been made in the Committee of the Whole, have been made exclusively upon this question of separate submission, and made by gentlemen who have avowed their intention to vote for suffrage to the colored men. Many other gentlemen have spoken on the subject. A vote in form has been taken upon the question. We now find that all that action practically goes for nothing. It is claimed here that thus far we have not advanced a single step upon the question as to whether this proposition, or any other, shall be submitted separately for the consideration of the people. We find, on looking at the law which authorized the calling of the Convention, that this question of separate submission by the framers of the act, is placed in juxtaposition, with the other propositions upon which we are to act—which relate to matters of form merely—to the mode of publishing the Constitution which we may adopt, or the amendments, which we may recommend, to the form of the ballot, and to the notice to be given to the electors. It is found among those matters, and it properly belongs there. Now, Mr. President, I have another reason for favoring the resolution of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] as amended by the proposition of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] and it is this. In the reports of the committee on the subject of suffrage, which are before us, I find an elaborate report by the minority of that committee, devoted to the question as to whether the proposition to extend suffrage to colored men, shall be submitted as a separate proposition to the people. The report closes with a resolution recommending that that form of submission shall be the one adopted by the Convention. The report of the minority is entirely silent as to the right of the colored man to vote. Not one word is contained in it against his right to vote. The report, like many of the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of separate submission, implicitly recognizes the right of the colored man to vote. The fact is, this question as to whether the right of the colored man to vote, shall be submitted separately, rests in the mere caprice of the members of this Convention, and for that reason I am in favor of postponing it until we take up questions which are matters of form merely. I am not indifferent, in this aspect of the case, to what has been said by gentlemen in the Committee of the Whole. I am aware that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Larremore], three of those who have spoken, have spoken against the right of the colored man to vote, but they are three exceptions. In all the other elaborate speeches which have been made here, not one word has been uttered against the right of the colored man to vote. The question, I repeat it, is one partaking more of caprice than anything else, and for that reason it should be postponed, as this resolution will postpone it, until we have adopted the fundamental articles or the amendments which we are to recommend, and the question shall come up as to the manner in which they are to be submitted to the people.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move that the consideration of this resolution be postponed until the second Wednesday in August.

Mr. MERRITT—We do not know how long the sessions of this Convention will last. It is conceded it is very proper such a committee should be raised. There has been no reason submitted, in my judgment, why that committee should not be raised now. I am, therefore, opposed to the postponement of the consideration of this resolution, and I hope that we will now decide definitely whether we shall act upon it, and for that purpose I shall call the ayes and noes, on the motion to postpone.

Mr. KERNAN — I desire to make a suggestion. If the resolution was a simple one to raise a committee, to report as to the arrangement and submission of the Constitution, or parts of it not otherwise determined by the Convention, I could see no objection. But my objection is that, under the name of appointing a committee to devise as to the manner and mode of submission, gentlemen avow that they propose to prevent any discussion or consideration in the Convention or committee, if they can, of the separate submission, of any particular provision of the Constitution. Now, it places gentlemen in an awkward position. There may be, and I presume there are, many gentlemen here who are entirely willing to propose for submission to the people of an article to the Constitution in regard to the question under consideration of the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair must ask the gentleman to confine himself to the question of the postponement.

Mr. KERNAN — In regard to that, I do not desire to make any remarks.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Brooks, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes — Messrs. Barto, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Comstock, Conger, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Develin, Gross, Hitchmar, Kernan, Larremore, Livingston, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, Morris, Murphy, Paige, A. J. Parker, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Weed, Wickham, Young — 89.

Noes — Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Clinton, Cooke, Daly, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Ferry, Field, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hland, Hardenburgh, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lindington, McDonald, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, C. E. Parker, Pond, Potter, President, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams — 78.

Mr. KERNAN — If it is not postponed, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will be adopted, otherwise gentlemen will be placed in this position. Gentlemen who may be willing to submit, as a separate proposition, the proposition as to female suffrage and who are entirely willing to mature such an article and to submit it to the people separately, very likely would not be willing to put it in the Constitution without knowing whether it was to be submitted as a part of the Constitution, or as a separate proposition. So as to other propositions; and, if I understand right, it is claimed that unless this amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] is adopted, then that the resolution will prevent the determination by the Convention at the time of action upon a particular article, whether it shall be submitted as a part of the Constitution, or as a separate proposition. It seems to me, therefore, that we are making, in advance, with that construction, a committee which really ties up many gentlemen as to their votes, and ties up the entire Convention from discussing whether they will or will not submit a proposition separately. I trust, therefore, that with that construction of the resolution, it will not be adopted without amendment.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], for the very reason that at this stage of the proceedings I am opposed to being foreclosed in my action in regard to questions of that character. I am not able to say now whether I want to submit the question separately or not, and shall not be able until I see the work of this Convention. As to the question of submission separately or joint, whether the colored man should vote or not, it has been assumed in the Convention that the party with which I act have decided that they will not submit the question of colored suffrage separately. I voted against the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], proposing to submit that separately. I do not wish to be understood, and it must not be understood that by that vote I committed myself one way or the other upon the question. I must leave that well understood. It is the part of wisdom, in this Convention, to postpone all questions with regard to submission as a whole or in separate parts until the action of this Convention has advanced to such a stage that we may wisely judge of the propriety of submitting it as a whole or in parts.

Mr. CLINTON — I understand the effect of this resolution perhaps differently from other gentlemen, and I wish, if I am wrong, to be corrected about it, because my vote depends on its meaning, or the way in which I understand its meaning. Now, I understand that this resolution, and the amendments to it, as proposed, look only to, and include only the perfected work of the Convention — that it refers to and includes only such amendments of the Constitution as have been actually passed upon and adopted by the Convention, and goes no step further. That it has no tendency whatever to prevent the Convention from acting in two directions upon any proposition, and that it still remains competent for any member of the Convention to ask it to act upon the proposition, first in one and then in the other of these directions. Now, to make myself clear, by an example. I apprehend that this question of the extension of the right of suffrage to females equally with males, which has been presented to this Convention — I suppose that that proposition is lost. Then this committee will have nothing to do with it; but this resolution under consideration prevents those who favor female suffrage from introducing to the Convention another proposition, and that is, that it shall be submitted to the people directly, irrespective of the Convention and its determination whether or not they will incorporate such an amendment in their Constitution.

Mr. MASTEN—I would ask the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton] whether the question whether or not a certain thing shall be done, which is to be submitted to the people, does not involve separate submission?

Mr. CLINTON—I suppose not, and if the question be answered the other way it answers my question. I suppose this, Mr. President, although I may be wrong, that the Convention may possibly be in doubt upon a question, and choose even where they are opposed to introducing it directly into the Constitution, to refer the question to the people.

Mr. ALVORD—I merely wish to say, in so many words, that with the usual adroitness and skill of my friend from Kings [Mr. Murphy] he has introduced a proposition which, upon its face may appear entirely fair, but when gentlemen find they have voted for it to be incorporated in this resolution they will find they have not voted for the original resolution.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I am entirely satisfied with this resolution as it stood on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], but since the amendment has been adopted, offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], which would have the effect of precluding all discussion, I think, upon the question of submitting different propositions to the people, by referring them at once to this committee, it seems to me important that the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] should also be adopted. It will not do to preclude discussion upon this subject. The mere appointment of the committee at this time cannot be objectionable. I see no reason why this committee might not have been appointed when the other committees were appointed, as a standing committee, and resolutions might be referred to it, not of course and not precluding debate, but upon the order of the Convention, as resolutions are referred to the other committees. The committee should be organized, in my judgment, and it should receive such questions as are sent to it by this Convention; but I think the Convention at the same time should reserve the right to discuss fully and fairly any proposition that may be brought there, and the question whether the proposition shall be submitted separately to the people; for there are propositions, undoubtedly, which we will agree to adopt upon a separate submission, but which we will not consent to adopt by incorporating them into the body of the Constitution. Those of us, who sincerely desire to make the best possible Constitution, one which shall receive the approbation of the people, cannot consent to incorporate into it a proposition of doubtful character, which may lead to the rejection of the entire Constitution. I hope, therefore, this Convention will not tie its own hands, will not deprive itself of the right of considering such questions as shall be presented with regard to the propriety of a separate submission; but either that the mover of this resolution will adhere to the substitute as offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], or that the amendment offered by the delegate from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will be adopted in the resolution. If, in any form, a separate proposition can be presented for the raising of a committee to which these matters can be referred, I should prefer it, but I shall vote against any resolution which precludes discussion upon any of these separate propositions.

Mr. CONGER—When this resolution was first offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] I submitted to him the question whether it was designed to cut off the action of this Convention, as in Convention or in Committee of the Whole upon the existing question in Committee of the Whole. Subsequently, the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], avowed that it would have that effect. But he has since said that inasmuch as a proposition was submitted by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] for a separate submission of his proposition, or of some proposition, that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] had a vested right to present that question to the Convention when the Committee of the Whole should rise and report on the whole subject. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] whether, when that proposition comes into the Convention, it can be amended, so that some other proposition could be submitted to the people?

Mr. ALVORD—I trust not.

Mr. CONGER—Very well. Now, then, clearly the whole object of this resolution, at this time, is to prevent the submission in Committee of the Whole, or in the Convention, of any modification of the original proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. That proposition was that there should be submitted to the people the question of negro suffrage, based upon property qualifications. I was a little surprised that my friend from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] should have supposed from any remarks I made last night, that I was opposed entirely to negro suffrage. I thought I distinctly said that I did not propose to disfranchise a single person who already exercised that right, but that I designed to submit some other proposition, as an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], or a substitute for it, that in my judgment would place the proper question before the people as a proposition separately to be submitted. Now, Mr. President, I consider that it is right and proper that at some time this Convention should agree to refer certain propositions on which it is acting to the committee of fifteen. I do not rise here now to oppose, directly or indirectly, the propriety of a reference of every proposition that has been matured in Committee of the Whole to this committee of fifteen for final revision, and I agree with the gentleman who spoke here that it would be unfair to infer, from any vote which is or might be taken, that any gentleman is concluded, from changing his vote towards the close of the session on any proposition for a separate submission. But I think I can show clearly that the only effect of this proposition at this time is simply to take this single question, as to the manner in which the suffrage is to be determined, out of the power of the Committee of the Whole, to entertain any proposition in regard to it, and that the whole effect of the resolution is to send every matter involving the question of a separate submission directly to this committee of fifteen, without any vote upon it. I consider that this is unfair. I think that if, before the Convention had gone into the question of suffrage, it had been distinctly announced that they would cut off every proposition for a separate submission, and send every such proposition to a committee on final revision, that would have been a fair notice. But, now, when only one form and proposition for separate submission has been presented and voted upon in the committee, to conclude all other forms and to send them to this committee of fifteen, the "tomb of the Capulets" for all such propositions, I think it is unfair, I will also say I think it is ungenerous. I do not know what may be the pleasure of the Convention in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], but it was my purpose to submit an amendment, and if that is voted down, I now desire to submit the following addition to the resolution, by way of amendment:

"Provided, however, that this resolution shall not be construed as a special order to prevent, either in Committee of the Whole or in Convention, the presentation or consideration of any proposition for a separate submission to the people of this State, or the calling for a vote thereon."

Mr. PAIGE— I understand, sir, from the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that he expresses the opinion that no delegate in the Committee of the Whole on the question of the right of suffrage should be permitted to offer any proposition presenting in a different form the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] which was offered in Committee of the Whole. If that, sir, is to be the effect of this resolution, it is presenting this principle, that the Convention has in its power, when any amendment of the Constitution is reported or presented, to deny to every delegate the right to present any proposition amendatory of it, to cut off all propositions to amend and perfect the article so presented. If this, sir, is the effect of the resolution I cannot conceive a proposition presented to this Convention that is so radically objectionable. I cannot conceive any proposition of so arbitrary and so despotic a character. It interferes essentially with the rights and the privileges and powers of delegates as representing their constituency. If a delegate is to be precluded, in Committee of the Whole or in Convention, from offering an amendment to any proposition presented for the amendment of the Constitution, it is the denial of the highest privilege that we possess. If this is to be the construction of this proposition, I trust, and I should hope that the majority of this Convention would reject it.

Mr. LAPHAM— I desire to say, in answer to the suggestion of the honorable gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], that there is in the resolution no denial of any right whatever to a delegate to offer his proposition. It is simply a question relating to the order of our business, and nothing else,

When the report of the committee is made, and the subject shall come up before the Convention, or be taken up in Committee of the Whole, the learned gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], and every other member of the Convention, will have full opportunity to present every topic which they wish to have discussed. Unless this is done we shall debate these propositions over and over again in Committee of the Whole, when we are considering these subjects on their merits and then renew and reiterate debate when we come to the final proposition of the committee. It is simply a question of the order of business.

Mr. SKYMOUR— I think the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] must be mistaken with reference to shortening the time of the Convention by the adoption of the resolution which he has advocated. This question of separate submission of articles of the Constitution may occur with regard not only to one or two, but with regard to any article that may be proposed to be inserted in it. A case was stated the other day by a gentleman on this floor where the State of Massachusetts, in amending its Constitution had proposed nine distinct amendments, and that each one should be presented separately to the people. Now, there may be and I think there will be by the time we shall get through and establish what these articles are to be, a prevailing opinion that more than one article that is proposed to go into this Constitution should be separately submitted. I will assume that it may be so, and that discussion will be had upon all questions, and I would ask my friend from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] whether it would not be better, whether it would not be shortening time, and facilitating the business of this Convention, if the discussion should come up when the subject-matter of the amendment is before the Convention. If it is deferred until these questions shall be presumed to have been settled by the voice of the Convention, and then the report of the committee which is proposed to be raised shall be brought in, I cannot see why we would not be subjected upon the various motions that may be made to amend that report, and to submit one, and another, and another of these amendments and separately to another discussion, just like that which has detained this Convention for the past two weeks. I think the question of the separate submission of an article will be better discussed, and will be discussed in a shorter time, if that shall be taken in Committee of the Whole when we have that article before us, and are discussing it. What are the arguments in favor of the submission of any article, and from what source are they drawn? They are drawn from the character of the amendments, they are drawn from the supposed favor or disfavor with which that amendment, if adopted, will be received by the people. They are drawn, in fact, from the general nature of the subject itself, and I, for one without any reference whatever to the particular question of suffrage that has occupied the attention of this committee and the Convention so long, would prefer to discuss such a question, and I could discuss it more intelligently and in a shorter space of time if I were to discuss it in connection with the merits of the proposition itself.

I look upon this as a saving of time, and the facilitating of the business of this Convention. When the report of the proposed committee shall come in, you may move to amend it, to be sure; but in order to do that, you have got to go over the same ground that has been gone over again and again. In the discussion upon this proposition in committee, and I prefer, for one, that we should consider these questions as we pass on, and complete the consideration of them, and not be compelled to recur to them again from time to time.

Mr. GREELY — It is a mistake of the gentleman [Mr. Seymour]—a vital mistake—that we shall have as many proposals for separate submission to discuss if we pass as if we reject this resolution. We are discussing from day to day the propriety of submitting to the people amendments to the Constitution which may never be made. In case this resolution is adopted, we shall consider and debate only the question of separately submitting those propositions which this Convention shall have adopted in this Constitution. We shall probably not have more than two separate submissions to discuss instead of having a discussion on the separate submission of each provision here before its adoption in Committee of the Whole, and before its adoption in Convention.

Mr. DALY—I beg leave to differ with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley.] The proposition under discussion is whether the proposed provision in the Constitution we are about to frame, shall be incorporated into the body of the instrument to be submitted to the people for their ratification, or whether it shall be submitted as a separate matter to be decided by a vote of the electors, and with their approval to become a part of the Constitution. As one having little feeling or sympathy with the existing provision, so far as it imposes a property qualification or makes it depend upon a distinction of color, I have abstained from any active participation in the debate, though, at the same time, I have felt the deepest interest on the question of the submission of this provision to the people. I have felt that interest, not from anything arising from the question itself, but from a conviction in my mind, that the fair work of this Convention will go for nothing if that provision is unconditionally incorporated in it. I do not mean to say that my judgment in this matter is infallible; I merely mean to say that it is fairly and honestly exercised, and that I have no sympathy with the causes which lead to that judgment. It is my impression that a large portion of the people of this State have views upon that subject, very different from mine, and that we shall array against the Constitution, we shall frame an amount of organized resistance that will render its adoption exceedingly doubtful. I believe, Mr. President, from what I have seen here, that we are about to adopt a good Constitution. I think we have never had such an opportunity in the history of the State to make a Constitution which will tend to the perpetuation and preservation of our republican institutions. There are very many important provisions involved, necessary reforms to be incorporated in that Constitution, and I am jealous of their preservation; I am apprehensive of their fate; and it is for that reason alone that I am anxious that the majority of this Convention shall not peril the work we are about to do, by making it a condition with the electors of this State to accept the new Constitution with this provision in respect to negro suffrage in it or no new Constitution at all. If the idea of incorporating the provision in the body of the instrument is suggested to gentlemen as a matter of political policy, in my humble judgment they will find it to be a very great mistake; and there is no better proof of that than the fate in this State, of the party that insisted from political reasons upon inverting certain provisions in the Constitution of 1846, in such a form, that we are now called upon to restore it to its past condition. The consequence following that work in this State, was the removal from power of the party that framed it: and nothing will be gained in this body nor in any other body, by framing the fundamental law of the State with reference to the exigencies of any party, whether it happens to be in the majority or in the minority of this Convention; and any movement, having its foundation in such a cause, whether it proceeds from the party to which I belong or whether it proceeds from those who compose the majority of this Convention, will have no sympathy from me. I most sincerely feel that this is a very grave and important question, and I do earnestly hope that gentlemen who control the action of the Convention, will not preclude the possibility of discussing that question at some future stage of our proceedings. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] says it is simply a question of the order of business. He is right in a certain sense, but it will become the last order of business when everything else is finished. But this is so important a question, with reference to its relations to the Constitution itself, that I feel, with the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], that the true mode of disposing of that feature is to dispose of it in connection with the subject-matter, and not leave it until the last stage of business of the Convention, then to revive all the discussions that have taken place. The matter is now fresh in our minds, and many be disposed of, one way or the other.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I suppose it will be in order for me to ask the President of the Convention what will be the construction of the resolution without the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. Will or will it not take from the Convention or the Committee of the Whole the power to consider the question of a separate submission in connection with any particular proposition for constitutional amendments?

The PRESIDENT — The Chair will respectfully inform the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] that he can give no other decision. When a case arises calling for the decision of the Chair, it will endeavor to give it.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I should be in favor of the resolution with a proper understanding of it. But I am opposed to it if by its adoption this Convention abdicates its own power. When I vote for a constitutional amendment to be incorporated into the body of the Constitution to be submitted collectively, it is because I favor that amendment. It is necessarily implied that I approve that amendment and am willing to put it into the body of the Constitution. But, sir, I am willing to vote for another proposition which I do not necessarily approve, for the purpose of sending it to the people to be voted upon separately. The question of female suffrage, when that arises in the Convention and I am called upon to vote for it, if I do not know that it is to be separated from the body of the Constitution, as at present advised, I am not prepared to vote for the proposition. But, if I know at the time, when the question is before the Convention that the Convention will send it to the people as a distinct and separate proposition, I think I may vote for such a submission without committing myself upon the merits of the subject one way or the other. The same illustration may be made with reference to various propositions which may well come before this Convention. I think, therefore, that the adoption of the resolution, without something like the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], will tend very much to embarrass the deliberations of this Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—On the question of determining whether we shall or shall not separate and divide the propositions which we shall complete in this Convention, I wish to stand in a different position from the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], who has just addressed this Convention. Sir, I hold it to be my duty, absolutely, not to send to the people of this State any proposition which does not meet my hearty approbation and which I am not free to support and sustain. That is the position I occupy, and I occupy none other. Whatever may be the action of other gentlemen in this Convention, I will not vote for a submission to the people of New York of any question that I do not myself believe from my inmost heart to be the duty of the people of the State of New York, as well as my own to sustain and support. And now, sir, a little farther in reference to this proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. That proposition results in an entire abrogation—in an evaporation of the resolution to which it is proposed to be attached. It takes away from it all power to accomplish what is intended by it. It might as well read that no resolution shall be passed on this subject. Its result is this: that gentlemen will have passed a resolution for a particular purpose and then have stultified themselves—backed down from their position by adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

Mr. MURPHY—The motives which the gentleman attributes to me are such as I never intended. I do not think my amendment "eviscerates" the resolution so as to render it a nullity. My amendment restores the resolution to what it was as it was offered by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt]. In my judgment it is a proper amendment to be passed by this Convention, with this resolution. As proposed by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] in his amendment, this question of a separate submission is to be left until the close of the proceedings of this Convention. The question of a separate submission is not to be considered by the committee of fifteen until the Convention shall have nearly completed its labors, because the resolution provides that all the articles and propositions which are to be determined upon by this Convention shall be referred to that committee to be examined and reported upon. We shall have gone through the whole order of business in this Convention, considered all the topics that are to be embraced in the Constitution before this committee will be called upon to act; and then in the last stage of our proceedings they are to consider and to report upon the subject of a separate submission. How much time they may have, and how much diligence they will use, we cannot say; we know in the last stages of the life of any deliberative body like this, there is always haste to close the deliberations, and the proper consideration of a subject at that time is not bestowed. There will not be time enough for them to consider the propositions which will be submitted; and I ask whether it is proper and statesmanlike to leave the consideration of this important matter to the short period, which will be necessarily left after this Convention shall have concluded their chief labors.

Mr. McDONALD—Will the gentleman [Mr. Murphy] allow me to ask him a question? Which does the gentleman consider the most important, what shall be submitted, or whether it shall be submitted separately?

Mr. MURPHY—In regard to the alternative which the gentleman [Mr. McDonald] has presented, I suppose that which is submitted is the most important.

Mr. McDONALD—Then will the gentleman [Mr. Murphy] inform me why we should not first consider that subject?

Mr. MURPHY—The gentleman asked me which I consider the most important. I consider submission also important, though I think the suggestion has no relation to the matter that I am now discussing.

Mr. McDONALD—What I wish to know is whether the less important subject should not be last considered?

Mr. MURPHY—I do not choose to answer every impertinent inquiry. I do not mean impertinent in an offensive sense, but impertinent to the subject I am discussing. I was about to remark that the proper object of a resolution of this kind, it seems to me, is to submit to such a committee the different articles as they are passed upon in this Convention in order that they may arrange them both in matter of form and matter of language; this they can do as each article is passed upon and perfected substantially by the Convention. That is the proper object of a resolution of this kind, and such I supposed was its object as proposed by its mover [Mr. Merritt]. Now, it seems to me, Mr. President, that the purpose of the resolution as amended is to shirk the record. We have had here under consideration for a week or ten days this very important proposition—the one of all others which we deem, or at least those who think with me, deem proper to be submitted to the people, and yet we have had no vote upon it. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] is wrong when he says that there is already a record on that question. We have had no record. We have considered the question merely in Committee of the Whole, and we have taken a vote not by yeas and nays, but by a division of the Committee. How gentlemen stand upon this question we do not know, and we cannot tell until the report of the committee shall be made to the Convention, and this amendment shall be renewed, and the yeas and nays taken under the rules of the Convention. Adopt this resolution and the purpose at all events will be effected of having no record made upon this question now. I remark again that I consider this the most important question to come before us. I introduced it early in the discussions of the Convention; but whatever is to be its determination upon this question, I can see no objection to its consideration in connection with the discussion of the report. The reasons which are given are that there will be discussion upon submitting all the different propositions and articles which may come up, and thus the time of the Convention will be consumed by the repetition of the argument already made to the question now under consideration in Committee of the Whole. I am anxious and desirous that a vote should be taken on that proposition, and my amendment proposes that that shall be saved for this resolution, and of course, upon the general principles which I have advanced it would also be saved in regard to all other articles which may be considered separately. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr Lapham] says that this is a mere question of the order of business. It is not, sir, a matter of the order of business. It is a matter, in my judgment, which affects the right of every delegate in this Convention, and the honorable gentleman might as well propose in so many words that every amendment coming from the minority of this body should be submitted to that committee of fifteen to be reported upon at their pleasure. I am in favor of a free and full discussion of all topics. I am willing to meet the majority upon every question, but I wish gentlemen who are opposed to me may be put on the record also, in order that the people may understand where each and every member stood on the various propositions which shall have come before the Convention.

Mr. RATHBUN — I do not intend to occupy the time of the Convention but for a moment. It seems to me that the course of argument adopted by gentlemen on the other side, ignores the fact which stares every member of the Convention in the face, and which meets every man who looks at the business of this Convention directly, and presents to him the two sides of this question as debated. On the part of those who object to the resolution, some say they want to debate the question; and that this is a "great question;" and they want a "record made upon the great question;" they want gentlemen of the Convention to come up here and record themselves and show that they are not afraid. Governor Seward once said, out in Minnesota, when speaking about the war in the South, "who's afeared?" After he got back to Washington, among Southern senators, it turned out that he was himself "afared to speak." I say that if gentlemen want to record themselves—if they want to make a record, they should have that privilege. I was sent here for that very thing and I believe other gentlemen also. There need be no apprehension about the record—we will make a record—and a clean record in the progress of this business. The idea of being charged with endeavoring to "stifle debate" or to "shirk responsibility" is not decorous for any body. I would not say that of any gentleman of this Convention, although I would not find very much fault with any gentleman who should say it of me, for I think he will find out before we get through with the business of the Convention, that he is mistaken. On the one hand we see (I mean those who believe in having order in the proceedings of the Convention), a gentleman who wants to debate this question; another gentleman over yonder thinks that it is orderly and profitable to discuss the proposition in regard to each provision as we go along and determine whether we would submit that separately. That is the proposition which is now before the Convention. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] thinks it is a waste of time to cut off these debates in connection with the topic which shall be discussed and argued in regard to each and every proposition as to whether it shall go into the body or shall be a part of the tail of the Constitution; that is, section by section and article by article, we are to discuss as we go along the two questions, always in connection. One is, is the thing proper to go into the Constitution at all, and the other is, shall it go into the body of it, or shall it go on the outside of the body? How long will it take to discuss those various propositions in this manner? We have spent ten days here in discussing a single proposition, and mainly upon the point whether it shall be submitted separately. Now, we are to take this as a sample, and each proposition is to be discussed by itself and to be marked as an inside passenger or an outside passenger as we go along. Then we are to have a committee appointed to report to us in regard to the arrangement of the Constitution by articles and by sections, and then when it is all arranged by articles and sections we can look at it as a whole. Then we will see that we have wasted a great deal of time in discussing the question whether this article, or that, should go into the body of the Constitution or go outside. And after we have wasted all that time, perchance, we shall not agree upon anything—then what? What an enormous amount of apprehension and fear and trembling has been wasted upon this floor. Now, I can say to gentlemen of the Convention, that I believe that those who intend to vote for a change in the suffrage, intend to permit the fullest discussion of the question as to how that question shall be submitted, and that they intend that every gentleman in this Convention shall speak until his wind is broken if he chooses [laughter]; and then we will decide, those who agree on one side voting in one way, and those on the other side voting the other, and the majority will rule. I have not determined how I shall vote upon that question, but I apprehend that I shall make up my mind by the time the discussion takes place. On the other hand, it is claimed that each section should be taken up, one by one, and examined, and one by one settled, and when they are settled and ready, to put them into the fabric we are to erect for the purpose of making a complete work; and having thus proceeded in order, we complete our work and lay it before the Convention, ready to be disposed of. How shall it be done? We say that it is not now for us to look at and examine and see what part of it shall go in the body of the instrument. I submit that at the proper time no one wants to prevent debate and cut off discussion on that point; but I desire to cut off argument and declamation as to which of these articles shall go into the Constitution, and statements that the people will not agree to this or to that. But you have got to go to the people. Everybody knows that all this must be submitted to the people. It amounts to nothing until it is submitted and passed upon by them.

It is for the Convention to determine at the proper time whether we have anything to submit, and say then how shall it be determined, and then take out such parts as are necessary to be submitted separately. I submit, Mr. President, that there is but one way to proceed in regard to this business in an orderly manner so as to reach the ultimate object at which we aim, and that is to proceed to discuss the provisions of the Constitution as we go along, until we get the whole thing ready for the hands of the committee to put it in proper form and shape, and then the question will arise, how shall this be submitted? On that, the most free, the most liberal and the most independent discussion is the right of the members of the Convention, and I apprehend that members will not be deprived of that enjoyment. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILDEN—I am one of those who have taken no part in this discussion (of the negro suffrage), and I have at no time designed to say anything on the subject, until what is properly the preliminary question—the mode in which the proposed amendment in regard to suffrage is to be submitted—should be disposed of by the action of this Convention. But it seems to me that in respect to that there is a fallacy lurking in the argument of my friend [Mr. Hutcheson], who introduced this resolution, and it surprises me that it is not apparent to so astute and keen an intellect as he possesses. It is this, sir. If we vote on this question without determining whether we are to submit the change separately or not, it incorporates the provision into the Constitution that is to be submitted, and no further action of this body on it is necessary at all to dispose of that question; it disposes of the whole matter finally. I take it, sir, that every section presented here and voted upon finally and adopted, becomes a part of one entire Constitution to be submitted to the people, unless there be action to the contrary by this Convention. I suppose that results as a matter of course. I suppose that gentlemen who are willing to vote to submit a proposition to the people which they are not in favor of incorporating in the Constitution, and submitting as an entire body, have no way to express their opinion except to vote against the adoption of that clause. Sir, I do not think my old and valued friend from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] is right in supposing that there is any danger that we shall discuss all the various propositions here made in regard to their mode of submission. I do not understand that anybody proposes to make a submission in more than three or four parts. My individual judgment when I came here was that in regard to the suffrage question, it had so connected itself with old controversies and with controversies now existing in another part of the country, that if we wished to elevate the action of this committee out of the influence of those controversies we could do so. I trusted we should be able to do so by a unanimous vote in submitting the clause calculated to promote that sort of discussion, in a separate amendment. In regard to the amendment of the judiciary so far as the court of appeals is concerned, certainly, and perhaps the entire amendment, it is my individual and personal judgment, although I have no knowledge or ground to form an opinion as to the result this body would arrive at, that it would be expedient to submit that also as a separate matter for the reason that if it should so happen that we should fail in respect to other parts of this Constitution to suit public expectations, we could yet meet the general and almost universal demand there is to relieve the court of appeals of the great burden which it now feels itself unable to satisfactorily discharge. Further than that I do not see any occasion for a separate submission, although it is quite possible that somebody might propose another subdivision to which I might feel willing to assent. I, sir, have no possible motive except to extricate this Convention from the danger it would be in of drawing this Constitution within the irritating and exciting controversy that prevails in other parts of the country and which have prevailed in this. Assembling as we do here to reform the Constitution of the greatest State in the Union, a State which, as I observed the other day, comprises a population larger than the entire population of the United States when the Convention of 1777 was in session, comprising a vastly larger variety of interests, and having a duty to perform of the highest magnitude which man can undertake, it seems to me eminently desirable that if we should extricate this work from anything upon which we were pretty sure to differ, and should sit here like wise men, and candid men, and statesmen, and endeavor to revise the other parts of the Constitution, and make it what it ought to be for this great State—what it ought to be also because it will be an example in other States. Sir, there recurs to me a singular incident illustrating the extent to which our constitutional regulations have been copied in other States. It happened to me in the Convention of 1846 that an article on corporations had been baffled to and fro without coming to a result satisfactory to anybody; and it was sent to a select committee of which I was chairman.

That committee decided on the adoption of one provision that I was not able at that time to understand and never have been able to understand since I reported it as they ordered it and it became a part of the fundamental law. A short time after that I was passing through Albany and I heard a very curious discussion in the Senate as to the meaning of that provision. On my returning to New York I met the author of it, and I found him as much puzzled as the Senate had been or as I had been. But, sir, that article, clause for clause, word for word, and letter for letter, stands in the Constitutions of seven different States of this Union. It illustrates to what extent our example is likely to be followed in other States. I consider, therefore, that we have a most august and important duty to perform, and for my part, unmoved by any consideration except my desire to fulfill that trust to the utmost of my ability, rising, as I think it does, above all other considerations that could affect the action of men in this body and remembering that I shall scarcely live under another Constitution of this State, and that all those associations and that honorable pride that have clustered around my native State from my childhood are concerned in the result of our work, I certainly desire to do everything in my power to accomplish that result in the most satisfactory manner. I am not here to question any man's motives, or to arraign any man's judgment, but I regret profoundly that this Convention has not found itself able, by a little conference among the leading gentlemen who represent the two great parties here, to have come to a result that would have withdrawn this topic from our deliberations. I think it could have been done. I think it is unfortunate that we have not been able to do it. I am content. I certainly would be quite content to have a reasonable postponement of this question, provided that postponement did not involve a decision beforehand of the question postponed. But, sir, to be called upon to put this clause in controversy into the Constitution, to make it a part of an entire instrument, to vote on its adoption, so that if there be no other action of this body, and no other action is necessary, the question is wholly and completely decided, does not seem to me to be the best way to reserve the question of separate submission. If we are finally to act upon the whole matter, I shall desire hereafter to submit the reasons which govern my vote on the main question.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden], allow me to ask him a question? Did not the Convention of 1846, of which the gentleman was a member, perfect the article upon suffrage according to the opinions of the majority of that Convention, and leave the discussion of the question of separate submission until the coming in of the report of the committee, to whom was referred the question of the mode of submitting the Constitution?

MR. TILDEN—I will answer my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend]. The question of suffrage, and the question of submission, in the Convention of 1846, were questions of very little comparative consideration or importance.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—I ask the fact, whether they did not so perfect it?

MR. TILDEN—I have not quite done. The action on that subject was deferred—that is to say, action enlarging the suffrage. The Constitution was adopted in respect to negro suffrage as it then stood. Does the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] mean to propose that we shall follow that example now, and take the Constitution as it is?

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—I propose nothing. I was asking how his friends did in 1846.

MR. TILDEN—Well, sir, we will do now precisely as they did then if the gentleman is satisfied with it. We will let the clause now in the Constitution stand until the close of the Convention, and then we will submit the proposition to enlarge the suffrage. We will follow the precedent. Sir, I have no personal feeling about this question, except a desire that this Convention should get along in the most harmonious, useful, and satisfactory manner with its business. I regret to be compelled, to enter into any discussion on the general question. But if we are to vote finally on the adoption of a clause in the Constitution, it may be necessary that I say something in respect to the grounds upon which I put my vote.

MR. ROBERTSON—I think that this is a fit occasion for us to look at the chart by which we are to be guided in the government of our action there. If I understand aright the proposition of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], it is to have the question of the separate submission of the various amendments to be proposed by this Convention, postponed until after we have all the propositions as adopted assembled in array before us, just as they have been carried by the Convention, and then we are to determine whether they shall be separately submitted to the people for their votes, or whether they shall be submitted in mass as a new Constitution. It appears to me that this question has been discussed by all parties who have undertaken to reason upon the subject, as if we were collected here to make a new Constitution, under authority of the Legislature, for the first time, influenced by the present Constitution, as an existing institution, simply as to its effect upon our votes, and by the opinions of the people of this State in regard to their already established fundamental law. The Constitution of 1846 was formed under the authority of the Legislature, which spontaneously ordered an election of delegates for the purpose of making an entirely new Constitution. There was no restriction in the act under which they assembled by which they were enjoined or advised to submit to the people of this State any separate proposition which they might think proper to introduce by way of amendment or as part of an entirely new Constitution. It would, therefore, have been novel to submit, as an amendment to a prior Constitution, a separate proposition of a Convention collected together by authority of the people of this State, for the purpose of forming an entirely new Constitution. We are not collected here under any such revolutionary statute. We are assembled in pursuance of that very Constitution of 1846, which has prescribed that after its trial for twenty years the Legislature should call together, upon the summons of the people, delegates, not to reframe the entire Constitution, but for the purpose of revising that Constitution as it stood, so that if, upon inspection and consideration, the united wisdom of the delegates collected should so determine, amendments should be made to the Constitution to be submitted to the people. Before that provision we had been without any one of this kind. We had been obliged to fall back upon the original power of the people to change the government as they thought proper through its most direct and effective representative, the Legislature of the State. We have now, as authority for our meeting, the support given by the Constitution of 1846, which calls us together for a particular purpose. It was not the intention of the delegates who met at the Convention that formed that Constitution or that of the people who finally adopted it for their government, that there ever should be vital changes made in that Constitution but that whenever, by the light of the experience of twenty years, sufficient changes should appear necessary to be made in that Constitution a Convention should be called together for the purpose of making them. We have now met under that authority and for that purpose and no other. We are bound in all our actions here to see that we do nothing more than to amend and repair an old time-honored building, not endeavor to build a new one of entirely new materials according to the fashion of the times—of unseasoned materials, not half as able to bear a strain as the old, and a building not half as commodious as that old fortress of the people's rights, not having half its precautions and defenses for the protection of the rights of every member of the community. I maintain that such was the object for which we were called together and I find the Legislature of this State has strictly followed such interpretation of that provision in the old Constitution. Section 1 of the act by which we are assembled, provides that "an election shall be held on the fourth Tuesday of April next, of delegates to meet in convention to revise the Constitution of this State and to amend the same."

Then section five provides that:

"The said amendments or Constitution shall be submitted by the Convention to the people for their adoption or rejection, at the next general election, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November next, and every person hereby entitled to vote for delegates may, at that election, vote on such adoption or rejection, in the election district in which he shall then reside, and not elsewhere. The said amendments or the said Constitution shall be voted upon as a whole, or in such separate propositions as the Convention shall deem practicable, and as the Convention shall by resolution declare."

Here, in the 5th section, is the first suggestion made or hint given that a "Constitution" is to be framed and submitted to the people. In the views I am presenting, I do not desire to deny in any respect the power of this body to change the whole fabric of our present Constitution by way of amendment, or to amend each section of the Constitution and submit the fabric so changed to the vote of the people of the State. But I contend that the whole purport of the act of the Legislature, following up the spirit and letter of the old Constitution was to provide for amendments to that Constitution, and that they rather looked to this Convention when it met to prepare and submit such propositions by way of amendment as, in the language of the 5th section, "the Convention should deem practicable" and necessary. Such section proceeds to provide specially, and it takes particular care therein, after providing for separate amendments and changes to be made in the old Constitution for their submission to the people of this State. It says that—

"In either case the Convention shall prescribe the form of the ballot, the publication of the amendments or of the Constitution, and the notice to be given of the election. In case the said amendments or parts of the said Constitution shall be voted upon separately, every person entitled to vote thereupon may vote for or against any one or more of them. At the election mentioned in this section, the inspectors in every election district shall provide a suitable box or boxes, to receive the ballots given upon the said amendments which ballots shall have the word 'CONSTITUTION,' written or printed, or partly written or partly printed upon them, so that when they are folded that word will appear upon the outside of the ballot * * * And when it shall be ascertained by the board of State canvassers, under the foregoing provisions, that any proposition submitted as aforesaid has received more votes in its favor than have been cast against the same, then that proposition shall be declared to be adopted, either as the Constitution, a part of the Constitution, or an amendment to the present Constitution, as the case may be; and said board of State canvassers shall determine and declare, by their certificate in writing, to be filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of State, the Constitution as adopted, revised or amended, * * and each of the said amendments which shall not receive a majority of all the votes given upon it at the said election, shall be void and of no effect."

Looking at this statute in connection with and as carrying out the provisions of the old Constitution, I would ask gentlemen before they undertake to pass and submit any amendment, whether as a part of the duty enjoined upon them of making amendments, it was not intended that this Convention should provide that each separate proposition as it come up, if it were an amendment of a part of the old Constitution should take the place of such part, or if entirely new, and to form a part of the new Constitution should be separately submitted to the people, and whether that question of separate submission ought not to come up in and be submitted with each separate proposition as it may be passed upon by the Convention, and not postponed to a late hour of the session to determine what should and what should not be so separately submitted. Because, as been well said, the propositions which we are to submit may be of great magnitude. The changes may be of a violent kind and repulsive to the people of this State, it becomes therefore very important to determine whether those violent changes, repulsive and revolting, be welded to other provisions, and then left to the mercy of a majority, who, at the end of this discussion, may determine that all the propositions which are submitted in the Convention shall be submitted in mass, the good and the evil, the pleasing and revolting, the safe and the dangerous, thus preventing each proposition from being left to stand or fall by its own merits, and thereafter submitting them in the same way to the people—who are thus precluded from passing upon their separate merits. The question of a separate submission should be passed upon while the subject is before us and under discussion, or else we shall be wanting in our duty to our constituents. We shall entirely deviate from the primary authority under which we are collected together, and usurp powers which the Legislature has not given us, if we undertake to act upon all the parts of the Constitution in mass, and leave to a mere committee privately to select at their discretion the parts which should be separately submitted, so that when their report is brought into this Convention, the mass may be carried as a whole, when every part could not be. I trust we shall not prove so recreant to our duties and our oaths.

Mr. DUGANNE—It would seem to me, that in the opinion of many gentlemen in the Convention, the Constitution which we are about to frame is a mere paper kite, and that the business we have come upon to manufacture wind enough to support that kite—its skeleton covered with printed speeches—while we shall attach a series of bobs to it in the shape of what are called separate submissions. Mr. President, I have not come up here to engage in any kite flying or to amuse myself with any paper bobs. I have come here to take part with my fellows, instructed by my constituents—the people of the State of New York, to form a symmetric instrument—a Constitution which, in some amended form, is to take the place of the Constitution which was adopted in 1846.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman [Mr. Duganne], give way for a moment. In the discussions which take place, I hope gentlemen will confine their remarks to the question pending. I hope it is the purpose of those who are in favor of raising this committee, to reach a conclusion on that subject at this session; and if a point of order should be raised when a speaker is wandering from the question, I hope it will not be taken as a personal affront.

Mr. DUGANNE—I gave way to the gentleman [Mr. Merritt] supposing that a question was to be asked; instead of which, he has favored me with a lecture upon the way in which I should address the Convention. I have merely to say that I alluded to this, because I believe that in constructing this instrument—in doing the work we are sent here to do, we should do it methodically, and in such a manner that, at the conclusion of our labors, the whole work will be before us; and, when that is done, we should take upon us the duty of so arranging and so deciding upon the different provisions and amendments as to present them in a methodical and symmetrical form to the people. Therefore, I am in favor of postponing the consideration of any separate amendment, or its mode of submission to the people, until we have the whole Constitution before us, and can look upon it intelligently and ascertain whether the house which we are sent here to build is symmetrical in all its proportions, has its pillars, its bases, its foundation and its superstructure all in proper regard to what is required. When we have decided upon that, it is time for us afterward to conclude whether our instructions go so far as to permit us to submit also other portions—extraneous matters which do not belong to the perfect fabric which we are sent here to construct.

Mr. GRAVES—In the present condition of the business of this Convention, I cannot see the importance of the passage of this resolution; I therefore move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Graves and it was declared lost on a division by a vote of 51 to 59.

Mr. WEED—I am forced, Mr. President, to rise to a question of order, by reason of the position taken by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], who proposed this amendment. As I understand the gentleman, he claims that his amendment will cut off the right to offer amendments which have been offered in Committee of the Whole in Convention. If so, it violates rule 39 of this Convention, and for that reason, as the amendment accepted by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], proposes to suspend or modify a rule of the Convention it cannot be considered without one day's notice.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WEED—I would ask the Chair if it so rules because in its opinion the amendment does not modify or change the rule?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is not aware that it changes the rule. If it should have that effect, it holds it to be the province of the Convention to adopt such regulations as it chooses. When a case arises the Chair will decide it. Does the gentleman [Mr. Weed] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. WEED—No, the statement of the Chair is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands that that is the only way by which a rule can be contravened. If a course of action shall be adopted by the Convention, which shall in any way contravene a rule, the Chair, when the case arises, will decide whether the rule has been regularly contravened or not.

Mr. McDONALD—If anything has been demonstrated here, it is this, that postponing the consideration of how we shall submit this Constitution until a later period in the proceedings of the Convention, time will be saved. The simple statement made by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] shows this must be so, because we shall consider more questions than we shall approve. But gentlemen say that there are only one or two questions to be thus considered. We have already a half dozen propositions for separate submission. We have one in regard to the educational qualification; we have one in regard to female suffrage; we have one in regard to negro suffrage; and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Tilden] proposes one in regard to the judiciary; others may want one in regard to the Legislature, and so on through the whole list. But supposing there is no saving of time whatever, ought this proposition for a postponement to prevail? In answer to a question I put to the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] he answered that he regarded the question of what we were to submit as more important than the question as to how we were to submit it. Then when I asked him why we should not postpone the consideration of the least important subject until we should have first determined the most important, he replied that my question was "impertinent," and declined to answer it. If my question was impertinent, I was impertinent for asking it. If it was pertinent, then as a member of the Convention I simply submit that the gentleman from Kings should have answered it. Now, was it pertinent? If it is admitted that one subject is more important than the other, is it not the direct result of that admission? If we have less time to consider the one than the other, we should consider the least important question last? Should we place the less important subject where we have the less time or the greater time? It seems to me that the admission of the gentleman [Mr. Murphy] that one was more important than the other, carried with it the idea that the less important subject should be considered when there was less time to consider it, and for this reason, in addition to the other, that time will thus be saved. I submit then that this order of business ought to be adopted so that the less important subject should be placed at the time when (if there be any such time) we shall have the least time to consider it.

Mr. BURRILL—It is so near the usual hour of adjournment that I shall not add anything more than a single suggestion to what has already been said in reference to postponing the subject under consideration. I merely wish to suggest a practical difficulty which will arise from a postponement of the question of a separate submission until after the entire Constitution shall have been perfected by the action of this Convention. If the amendments to the Constitution had been proposed in form, as amendments to the existing instrument, it would be very easy, after the action of this Convention had been completed, to provide a method for submitting any separate amendment to the people so that they might take a separate vote upon every independent proposition. The amendments which have already been made to the first section of this report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, must have convinced the Convention that the only mode of providing for the separate submission of any proposition, connected with or embraced in that report, must be by adding a proviso to a section or by altering the language of the section. It seems to me, therefore, that the only manner in which the question of a separate submission can be secured, will be either to restrict the Convention to the adoption of separate amendments to the existing Constitution, so that they can be submitted separately, or by allowing the alteration of the language of the section previously passed, so as to bring up the precise question which it may be desired shall be separately presented. It seems to me, therefore, that a practical difficulty will arise from the postponement of this subject until after the entire Constitution shall have been completed, and that the way to secure the separate submission of any particular subject will be to frame the language of each section so as to separate the proposition to be submitted from the residue of the section, and thus to avoid confusion and mutilation. If this be so, then it must be evident that the question of separate submission of each proposition desired to be submitted must be settled as we proceed, and cannot be deferred until after the form of the entire instrument shall have been completed.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—At the opening of the debate upon this question this morning, I was of the opinion that time was lost by the introduction of the question. I supposed that the gentlemen who are in favor of separate submission had discussed the question so fully, that probably it would be much shorter to allow the debate to be finished upon that subject, than it would be to discuss the question of the mode in which this discussion should be conducted. But we have used up the regular session of the day and I have become satisfied that business will be facilitated by adopting the resolution that shall defer the discussion of the question of the mode of submission until a later day in the session. For this reason, I shall vote in favor of this proposition. I think, however, that proposition, even by rejecting both of these amendments is not sufficient to accomplish the purpose proposed: that the proposition should be still further amended; and that, instead of the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] being confined to mere "resolutions," it should be propositions. So that I do not express myself fully in favor of the resolution, even rejecting this amendment. I feel that no injustice will be done by taking that course, for in bodies such as this, as in the courts, some reference must be had to precedents. Those gentlemen who are in favor of a separate submission, as far as I know, claim to be the representatives of the party who, in 1846, had a majority in the Constitutional Convention of that day. And in that case the majority of the Constitutional Convention perfected a section such as they believed ought to be adopted, and then passed from it to other work of the Convention, and it was not, until the report of the committee as to the mode of submission of the article was made, that a further proposition was formed and prepared for a separate submission. We may adopt that course in this Convention very well, if the majority of the Convention shall be in favor of it, but in the discharge of the duty which the people have devolved upon us, I esteem it our duty to first see what we believe ought to be the constitutional provision, and in doing that—

Mr. GRAVES—I would ask the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], to offer the resolution he speaks of, to see if we cannot dispose of this question.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My friend from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], will find that he is foreclosed, because there are two amendments now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tem—A further amendment is not now in order, there being two amendments pending.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I feel that is the true way to proceed, and while I should have been willing, had it not been for the time we have been already occupied in the discussion of the mode of procedure, to have assented to the discussion of this question when the article itself was under consideration. I feel it is due to the Convention and due to the people of the State, to have a vote on some proposition that at this stage of the proceedings shall put an end to this debate. I have one thing further to say and but one, and that is in reply to a remark made by my respected friend from New York [Mr. Daly]. I understood him to say that the party in power in 1846 were thrust from power in consequence of adopting the Constitution of 1846. I may be allowed to dissent entirely from that remark. The party that adopted the Constitution of 1846 was the democratic party.

Mr. MERRITT—With great respect I call the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] to order. The matter of debate is not pertinent to the question before the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem—The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], will proceed in order; though the Chair is not aware that the gentleman has yet deviated from the rule.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My remarks were in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], and I have but a word to say. I hope my friend [Mr. Merritt], will be patient with me, as both he and I believe in equal rights, and he has occupied a good deal of the time of the Convention. The party which adopted the Constitution of 1846, called itself the democratic party; and it lost its power, because in 1848 it proposed to surrender the whole of the territories of this Union to slavery. Sir, the feeling upon that subject was so strong, if my memory does not—

Mr. VAN COTT—I call the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] to order. It is not relevant to the subject under discussion before the Convention, whether the democratic party in 1848 proposed to surrender the territories of the United States to slavery or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] is taking a rather wide range in his remarks.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I hope the Convention will allow me to conclude the sentence I was uttering, after which I will not say another word. If my memory serves me, the feeling on the subject of slavery in 1848 was so strong as to cause the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] to break over the isothermal line of the democratic party and vote for Martin Van Buren [Laughter].

Mr. TAPPEN moved that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock.

Which was lost.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to say very briefly—

Mr. VAN COTT—I call the gentleman, [Mr. Conger] to order. He has already spoken twice on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is not well taken unless some other gentleman desires to speak.

Mr. CONGER—I wish to state now to the Convention what is to be the practical result of the operation of this resolution if it is adopted. I will present the point briefly and clearly, and I ask a patient audience if I have trespassed too much on the time of the Convention. When, in the Committee of the Whole on the question of suffrage, every proposition to submit any question to the people is taken out of the committee and referred to the special committee, then the final result of the Committee of the Whole will be this: that all male persons aged twenty-one years will have the right to vote. When that report comes to the Convention the question will be taken upon that proposition, and if any gentleman wishes to have it amended so as to insert a provision that any woman of this State may vote, if he has voted he will be voted down on that proposition; and the question will come up to him whether he will say that the Constitution shall pass in that form that all male citizens aged twenty-one shall vote. If a man is conscientious about his position, and he votes to protect his real position as to the right of the women, he will have to vote "no" on that proposition, and be so recorded on the Journal, and so in regard to a gentleman who wishes to submit the question of negro suffrage to the people. He will be precluded from his vote and he must vote squarely on the proposition that every male of the age of twenty-one years shall vote, and in order to justify his position or to protect himself in his notions of what is right, he has got to vote "no" on that proposition, and be so recorded on the Journal. I submit to the Convention, that this is a sort of parliamentary dodge which is not worthy of this body. I do not think it is right to say that any gentleman who wishes to present, conscientiously, any proposition, and if he is voted down on that proposition he must so far abandon his whole position as to take the proposition submitted by the majority and vote "aye" or "no" upon it and be so recorded.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Conger, and it was declared to be lost.

The question then recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. Murphy.

Mr. E. BROOKS called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Murphy, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barto, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Keruan, Livingston, Lowrey, Magée, Masten, Mattice, Merwin, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, Tilden, S. Townsend, Tucker, Weed, Wickham—40.

Noes—Messrs. A. L. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Axtell, Ballard, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, W. C. Brown, Case, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Everts, Field, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, McDonald, Merritt, Miller, C. E. Parker, Pond, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Rumsey, Seaver, Silvester, Sheldon, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wales, Williams—62.

Mr. MURPHY offered the following amendment to be added to the resolution:

"But nothing herein contained shall limit the power of the Convention in the Committee of the Whole, to consider the propriety of submitting the provision of the Constitution now under consideration, separately to the people, without reference to such committee."

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask if this is not substantially the amendment of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] upon which we have just taken a vote?

Mr. ALVORD offered the following amendment to the amendment:

"But nothing herein contained shall prohibit the consideration of any amendment already passed upon in Committee of the Whole, by the Convention upon the incoming of the report of said committee, but such amendment shall not in the Convention be—

Mr. MURPHY—I accept that.

Mr. LAPHAM—I hope this amendment will not pass. No one will fail to see, that it excepts out of the operation of this resolution, the question and the only question which will give rise to protracted debate upon the question of suffrage—we waste the resolution if we put this amendment to it. Do let us preserve the object of the mover of this resolution to postpone, as legitimately should be done, until after we have considered the various propositions upon their merits, the collateral question as to the mode in which they shall be submitted to the people.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to make a single remark. If this resolution prevails, I think its effect will be to disallow members in this Convention to vote upon propositions to submit questions to the people, as it places it in the power of the Convention, when the report shall be made from this committee upon the question of submission, to prevent all debate in the Convention, as by this resolution they prevent debate in Committee of the Whole. Let me illustrate. Gentlemen present their report upon this subject of revision to the Convention and it is in the power of the the majority of this body to move the previous question and cut off all debate upon the subject.

SEVERAL MEMBERS—We have no previous question.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Gentlemen say we have no previous question; but, sir, we have intimations from two different quarters, one yesterday and one to-day, that there is to be a previous question. That will be the precise effect of the resolution if we adopt it.

Mr. LAPHAM—I move that the Convention now take a recess until seven and a half o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Lapham, and it was declared lost.

Mr. GRAVES—Is it in order now to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion it is.

Mr. GRAVES offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all questions as to the separate submission of any part of the Constitution framed by this Convention be deferred until the whole Constitution is framed by this Convention.

Mr. WEED—May I ask whether this is a substitute for the original resolution, or an amendment.

Mr. GRAVES—I offered it as a substitute for the original.

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order. That this is a new proposition, and not germane and cannot be offered as an amendment to this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion it is proper to offer it as an amendment.

Mr. TAPPEN—I renew the motion, that this Convention take a recess until half-past seven.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Tappen and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. BELL—I would like to know whether the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] proposes that amendment should be added to the other resolution, or whether it is a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands it is proposed as an amendment, but if it is adopted it takes the place of all that has gone before it.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Graves, and it was declared adopted—yeas 43, nays 27.

Mr. WEED—I call for another vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], as it is evident there is no quorum voting.

The question was again put on the amendment of Mr. Graves, and it was declared adopted, on a division, by a vote of 55 to 31.

The question then recurred on the original resolution as amended, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURPHY—I understand the amendment which has just been adopted, is a substitute for the original resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] offered the resolution as an amendment, the Chair decided it was in order as an amendment, but having been adopted it takes the place of all that has previously been considered.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask, whether this leaves everything just as it was before we commenced this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it is not now in order to ask questions, the call being commenced.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call, and the resolution as amended was declared adopted by the following vote.

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Ballard, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, W. C. Brown, Case, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Field, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hatch, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington Hutchins, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, McDonald, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prosser, Rathbun, Rumsey, Seaver, Silvester, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—58.

Noes—Messrs. N. M. Allen, Barnard, Barto, E. Brooks, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Devlin, Folger, Hardenburgh, Kernan, Kinney, Livingston, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, Tilden, S. Townsend, Weed, Wickham—41.

Mr. CONGER—I rise to a point of order, that the vote taken, not being a two-thirds vote on the passage of this resolution, therefore the resolution is lost, the rules requiring it should be passed by a two-thirds vote. I refer to Rule 39: "No standing rule of the Convention shall be suspended, amended or rescinded, or additional rule or rules added, unless one day's notice of the motion therefor shall have been given; nor shall any such suspension, addition, amendment or repeal be then made, except by the vote of two-thirds of all the members present, or that of a majority of all the members elected to the Convention. But such notice shall not be required on the last day's session. The notice and motion for a suspension shall each state specifically the number of the rule and the object of the proposed suspension, and every suspension on such notice and motion, shall be held to apply only to the particular object or objects specified therein."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] that this point of order has already been raised and passed upon in the negative.

Mr. DEVELIN—I rise to a point of order, and I refer the President to Rule 40. I understand this resolution which has been passed changes the order of business. Before this resolution passed we had discussed this question, and this prohibits the discussion, and Rule 40 declares that the rules of the Convention shall not be altered unless by a vote of two-thirds.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair does not find in Rule 40 any such provision.

Mr. DEVELIN—I have not a copy of the rules before me. I think, then, it is Rule 39.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair would inform the gentleman the point of order on that rule has already been decided.

Mr. HUTCHINS offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That a committee of fifteen be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine into and report upon the following subjects:

1. The arrangement of the several articles and sections of the Constitution, as amended and adopted.

2. The manner and form in which the Constitution, as amended and adopted, shall be submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection.

3. The publication of the amendments, or of the Constitution as amended.

4. The form of the notice of election.

5. The form of the ballot.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I move that for the present that resolution do lie on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hutchins, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL—I move that the Convention now take a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move to amend by making it half-past four.

Mr. ALVORD—Is this a debatable question? The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it is.

Mr. ALVORD—I will say, as far as regards the recess, I am in favor of a recess until half-past seven. Owing to the position which I have occupied, in common with others in this body, for the past three or four days, one of the important Committees of this Convention has not been able to meet owing to these recesses till four o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Will the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] yield? The Chair is of the opinion he was in error in saying this question was debatable. The Chair thinks it is not debatable.

Mr. ALVORD—I supposed the Chair was in error.

On motion of Mr. PROSSER, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, July 20, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M., the President pro tem. [Mr. Folger], in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Rev. WM. BAILEY.

The JOURNAL of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. presented a plan by E. D. Smith, for the organization of the Judiciary. Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. also presented a memorial from J. C. T. Luddington, asking for a submission to the people of a separate clause for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adult-erated Liquors.

Mr. HUTCHINS presented the petition of Thomas Marsh and others, citizens of New York, praying that the Constitution may be so amended as to secure the right of suffrage upon equal terms for men and women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. presented a communication from the Auditor of the Canal Department in answer to a resolution of the Convention passed June 26th, relating to the cost, etc., of the Champlain canal.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDONALD gave notice of the following amendment of rules:

"This Convention will go each day into Committee of the Whole on any general or special order pending, one hour after it convenes, unless the order of business is reached before that time."

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, that the following substitute for section 2, of article 1 of the present Constitution, be referred to the Committee upon the Preamble and the Bill of Rights as a proper subject for their consideration, viz.:

Trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, shall remain inviolate, but jury trial may be waived in all civil cases, in the manner prescribed by law. Adequate uniform compensation shall be made to all jurors.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—The dropping of the term "forever," a presumptuous one either in the statute or in the organic law, after the word inviolate in the existing section, was at the suggestion of one of our most eminent statesmen. The provision as to uniform adequate compensation for jurors is highly necessary from the fact of the diversity of the present compensation, varying in the several counties from 12½ cents in a case tried, to two dollars or more per diem. We have recently seen the State courts in the county of New York greatly embarrassed for the want of a sufficient jury panel present.

Mr. MOORE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next at eleven o'clock A. M.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I move to amend that, by inserting, Monday evening at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. ALVORD—I move that the resolution do lie on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Alvord and it was declared carried.

Mr. GRAVES offered the following preamble and resolution.

It appearing that many members of this Convention are in the habit of absenting themselves from daily attendance upon its proceedings,

Resolved, That after Monday the 22d day of July instant, the roll be called every day at its organization.

Mr. BECKWITH—I hope that resolution will not be adopted.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid over.

Mr. A. J. PARKER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be submitted to Committee number 3, on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution of this State, as to provide that the Legislature of this State, to which an amendment of the Federal Constitution shall be submitted for ratification, shall be one of which the popular branch shall have been elected after the passage by Congress of the amendment proposed.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the adjournment of this Convention at the close of the week shall hereafter be regulated as follows: on Saturday next the Convention shall adjourn at 2 o'clock, P. M., to the succeeding Monday at 11 o'clock, A. M.; on the succeeding Friday the Convention shall adjourn at 2 o'clock, P. M., to the following Monday at 7½ o'clock, P. M. and that this order shall be pursued week by week in regular alternation.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that this resolution is an amendment to the rules, and therefore requires one day's notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Then, sir, I give notice that I shall offer this as an amendment to the rules.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That at a regular meeting of the Convention a majority of the members present may move a call of the Convention, with the same powers and effect as in the like case in the house of Assembly.

Which was adopted.

Mr. BECKWITH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That from and after Tuesday next, immediately after reading the Journal, the roll shall be called and the names of all absentees be entered as absent on the Journal of the Convention.

Mr. SILVESTER.—I hope, sir, that resolution will not be adopted.

The resolution giving rise to debate was laid over.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns to-day it will adjourn to meet on Monday evening, July 22, 1887, at 7½ P. M.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. That we have just passed upon a matter of the same kind, and laid it upon the table by a vote of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SILVESTER—Then I propose, sir, to alter the resolution to make the hour at 7 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that with that alteration the resolution is in order.

Mr. ALVORD—Then I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared to be lost, no quorum voting.

Mr. SILVESTER—I call attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There being no quorum, what is the pleasure of the Convention?

Mr. ALVORD moved a call of the Convention. Which was lost.

Mr. BICKFORD moved that the roll of the Convention be called.

Which was carried.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll, when the following members answered to their names:

Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Axtell, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Cochran, Comstock, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Field, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hatch, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Landou, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Magee, McDonald, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, More, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Rolfe, Roy, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Schell, Silvester, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—70.

Mr. ALVORD—I move, sir, for a call of this Convention, and on that question I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Baker, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Case, Cooke, Curtis, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Field, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Hatch, Hitchcock, Hutchins, Kinney, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Merritt, Miller, C. E. Parker, Rathbun, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Van Co't, Wales—37.

Voices—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Cassidy, Champ-lain, Chesebro, Cochran, Comstock, Corbett, Corning, Ely, Graves, Harris, Houston, Huntington, Macee, McDonald, Merwin, More, Paige, Parker, Prindle, Proesser, Rolfe, Roy, Schell, Silvester, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Wakeham, Williams—31.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call.

Mr. CHESBRO—I move that the further call be suspended and that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Chesebro, and it was declared lost.

Mr. MORE—I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. Mattice.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that no business can be transacted except that before the Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—As I understand this matter, those who have moved for a call of the Convention up to this point, have done so for the purpose of putting upon the record unmistakably the members of this Convention who are persistently absent from their duties, commencing Friday and up to the next succeeding Monday or Tuesday. I, for one, believe it is the duty of the members of this Convention, unless an absolute and indispensable necessity requires otherwise—

Mr. CHESBRO—I rise to a point of order. That there is no question before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. ALVORD—I move to suspend the further call, and desire to give my reasons therefor.

Mr. KINNEY—I rise to a point of order. That that question has just been decided by a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SILVESTER—I desire to ask leave of absence for Mr. Carpenter, of Dutchess, who is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it is not now in order.

Mr. MERRITT—If I understand the call, it only lacks ten of a quorum. Would it be in order to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to proceed to the different hotels and see if it is possible to find a quorum in the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It does not require such a motion.

Mr. ALVORD moved that the absentees be called.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the absentees, when the following members were found to be absent.

Messrs. Archer, Armstrong, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Bergen, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, J. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Cheritree, Church, Clark, Clinton, Colahan, Conger, Daly, Develin, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Eddy, Everts, Farrum, Ferry, Flagler, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Goodrich, Graut, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hardeuborgh, Hiscok, Hitchman, Jarvis, Keruan, Ketcham, Krum Larremore, Law, A. R.

Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Masten, Mattice, Merrill, Monell, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Pond, Potter, President, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Root, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seaver, Seymour, Sheldon, Sherman, Stratton, Strong, Tappen, Tilden, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—90.

Mr. ALVORD—I move a suspension of the call, and I desire to give my reasons therefor. When I was interrupted before by a point of order, which was declared to be well taken, I was about to say that there seems to have been a chronic disease upon this subject of the business of the Convention on the part of certain gentlemen during our entire sittings here, and it has resulted, not injuriously possibly in the first stages of the Convention, but entirely so subsequently, and has virtually confined the sittings of this Convention to four days in the week, and the fourth of those four days has been absolutely used up by the anxiety of parties within the limits of this Convention to get through the business and go away, even on the fourth day, if possible. I recollect, sir, another thing. A distinguished gentleman, a delegate to this Convention, who resides in one of the counties contiguous to New York, Westchester, or some other—I do not recollect which—has persistently, again and again, called the attention of this Convention to its neglect of its duties by their constant adjournments. I recollect also with regard to that distinguished individual, that at least for the last two, and I think three, Fridays and Saturdays and subsequent Mondays in each week, he has been absent from his place in this Convention. I recollect another thing. But a few days ago there was a division on the call of the ayes and noes upon the question as to whether we should adjourn or take a recess, and upon that division the vote stood fifty-five for the adjournment and seventy-one against it; and the result of that vote was, we were compelled to take a recess, and held a session which lasted very late in the evening. I, sir, took the precaution to have the matter determined in reference to those who were within the body of this Convention after that recess; and I found that sixteen of the seventy-one who voted against the adjournment were absent from this Convention during the entire of that time. If they had voted as they acted the result would have been an adjournment, carried by seventy-one votes in favor of it to fifty-five against it. So that those of us, the fifty-five who voted for that adjournment, were compelled by the action of sixteen men, who paid no attention to their own action, so far as regards an adjournment, to come here and fritter away a large portion of the evening. I hold this to be the duty of the members of this Convention. I do not speak in laudation of myself, but I speak of what I deem my duty as a public servant, in this position—that no man should absent himself from his duties in this chamber unless he could give a good and sufficient reason, and that that good and sufficient reason should be given beforehand, and he should ask permission of this Convention thus to absent himself. But no possible excuse can be given by gentlemen who thus inconvenience the members who have come here to do the duties which the people called upon them to perform; and there will be no remedy for this unless this course is pursued. We are satisfied of the fact that there is business coming in upon us here each and every day so that hardly any of us can see the end of it, or when we shall get through the work we are called upon to perform. If it is impossible, after all our deliberations, after all our thought and our best intellect shall be given to this subject, that we should conclude our labors in time to be given to the people for their decision, we should certainly take away from those who could blame us in regard to the matter the argument that we were called upon within certain days to do and perform this work, and to point us to the record to show that one-half of that time had been frivolously and uselessly wasted by this Convention. Again, sir, men who upon the pretense of having committee work to do, or having an abundance of work to do, say, therefore, it is no matter if the body of the Convention go away, yet the committee work can be done, ought to know, if they do not know, that the moment the voice goes out that the Convention has adjourned that moment it is an utter impossibility to convene any committee within the body of this Convention. They go away with the adjournment, and your committees have to go over not only until Monday night, if we adjourn until Monday, but until Tuesday afternoon, and sometimes until Wednesday; so that the result is, through this inconvenience many important committees of this Convention do not have over two or at the most three sessions a week. If we pursue this course in the future we shall of necessity either be compelled to bring up in the latter days of this Convention our work illy done and put it together hastily, in order to put it before the people, or else go back to the people not having done our duty. And, sir, I wish, in addition to what I have said in this regard (meaning in good faith this motion to suspend the call) to say, that if it is in the power of the body of this Convention, and if the members of this Convention who remain here in Albany to do and perform their duty will stand by me, I will upon any subsequent occasion like this move a call of the house, and shall persist with their aid to carry it to its full extent and meaning.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—I entirely concur with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. Many delegates come here from remote parts of the State, and when they sit here from day to day and see gentlemen come here seemingly only for the purpose of making speeches to gain some political advantage, and then seek the first opportunity to run away home, when it is convenient for them to get there, it is certainly unpleasant when we are compelled to stay here, those of us who cannot get home conveniently. I believe if gentlemen looked into the matter they would see that those gentlemen who wish to adjourn the most, are those who live convenient to the Capitol so they can easily rush down to the steamboat or cars and leave for home. It is not so, I am happy to say, with this entire Convention. The people have sent us here to make the organic law of the State, and I believe that those gentleman who have come here simply for the purpose of political advantage will find themselves mistaken in this matter. The people are not indifferent to this Constitutional Convention. I can assure gentlemen they have it at heart. They have sent us here for the purpose of revising and amending the organic law of the State, and they will hold gentlemen accountable for their action here. The people are not desirous of obtaining immense speeches, long winded speeches, which are but a mere rehash with nothing new in them. They cost too much to the people of the State. I wish to say to some gentlemen who perhaps are rich in non-taxpaying bonds, that they had better look to it to see that this Convention shall do something to relieve the people of this State from their onerous taxation. I tell gentlemen if they put any more increased burdens upon the people of this State by taxation, that they had better look out for their non-tax paying securities. I think for myself, though I may be unsophisticated in this matter—but I think the people really believe that the Constitution needs amendment and altering; I believe we can do it, so as to be a blessing to the people of the State. When I first came here to this Convention I felt gratified and pleased to see the harmony that seemed to prevail, gentlemen were so cordial, and seemed to be so happy in each other's society; there was to be no politics in this hall; it was to be all done harmoniously. I said to my friends, when I went home (for I went home at one of the adjournments), "we are going to work harmoniously; we all agree; we are acting with a sincere desire to improve the Constitution of the State." But in writing home since, I had to tell them I was afraid a different state of things was rising up in this Convention, and I have thought in the past week, when I have seen men rise up here and discuss this question, seemingly for the purpose of trying to gain some political advantage, that some only came here for that purpose. I represent, sir, men of radical political views; they have sent me here not for a political purpose, but for the purpose of trying to improve the Constitution of this State. I have been glad to see the action which has been taken to-day, and I trust it will have a salutary effect upon members of this Convention.

Mr. GOULD—I entirely concur in what has fallen from the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], but I wish to inquire whether the absentees are not now in contempt.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will decide that question when it comes up.

Mr. GOULD—Then I shall presume they are in contempt—

Mr. LAPHAM—Will the gentleman from Columbia allow me to call his attention to Rule 33, which is as follows:

Rule 33. In cases of the absence of a quorum at any session of the Convention, the members present may take such measures as they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and may inflict such censure as they may deem just on those who on being called on for that purpose shall render no sufficient excuse for their absence.

Mr. GOULD—That is a very good and sound rule and one that comes to the very point. I happen to know that Mr. Mattice, of Greene county, is necessarily absent on account of the sickness of his wife. It seems to me, under that rule, it is perfectly competent for the minority who are now present to excuse him, and thus purge him of any contempt. I think that is due to him under the circumstances, and from motives of common humanity; and therefore I move that Mr. Mattice be excused, with the permission of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has no power to put the motion; and there being no quorum present, no business can be done.

Mr. GOULD—Does not the rule expressly provide that a minority may pass censure?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is only when the party is called up before the Convention, and then they can only be purged of contempt by giving a satisfactory excuse.

Mr. GOULD—The rule does not say so.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That has always been the practice under the rules. The absentees are brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and as they come before the Convention they give their excuses, and it is for the Convention to excuse them or not.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would wish for one that the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] would not abandon his call. I, for one, would like to see the doors shut, and some at least of the absentees brought in, that the Convention may show that they are in earnest in this matter. I, for one, have attended promptly at all times; I believe on every occasion on which the roll has been called, my name has been answered to. I am not disposed to treat the absence of gentlemen, whose business it is to attend here, as a trifling matter. I wish therefore that the call should be persisted in, that the doors should be closed, and the Sergeant-at-Arms sent to bring in members, that we may show we are determined now to proceed to enforce the authority of this Convention. We must begin some time. The Convention, when it was full, yesterday, ordered that a session be held at eleven o'clock, and we are here and met in pursuance of that order, and those who are absent should be made to face the music, and brought in, and if they have any good excuse we will then hear it; if not, we will censure them as we think they deserve.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask of the Chair or Secretary, whether there are any of the gentlemen whose names have been called as absentees,<sup>4</sup> that have been excused by any action of the Convention. Mr. Brooks has for one, certainly. That should appear on the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The secretary informs the chair that Mr. J. Brooks and Mr. Pierrepont have been excused.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I would like to inquire, if we adopt the resolution offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] for a suspension of the call, whether those who are absent will be in contempt then?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion they will not.

Mr. WAKEMAN—Then I am in favor of the last motion of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], but in future I am willing to go with him or any other gentleman in favor of compelling members to stay here and discharge their duties. I think, however, our action heretofore has been such as rather to give license to members to go away; but if we take this action and give this public notice that hereafter the rule will be enforced it will have a salutary effect. I therefore shall vote for the suspension of the call.

Mr. CHESEBRO—After the remarks which have been made by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], I think it is time the order of business now before this Convention be suspended. It is well known that it has been the habit of members of the Convention on Friday evenings to leave on the theory that no business would be done on Saturdays, and there has not been on the part of the Convention any action which has been a notification to any of them that such a course would be pursued.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHESEBRO—Certainly.

Mr. ALVORD—I ask him if this Convention did not through me take similar action within the last two weeks?

Mr. CHESEBRO—They may have done so, but not while I was present.

Mr. ALVORD—The gentleman was one of the absentees.

Mr. CHESEBRO—Quite probably I was in the same category with those who are now absent. I know quite a number of gentlemen have left this Convention, and some of them are now holding court in the cities of New York and Buffalo. They went away upon the theory that they would not be called to account, but as they will now receive from this action of the Convention an admonition with regard to the future; and believing that will be sufficient I move this Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn, and it was declared lost.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I hope the call will be suspended. The resolution which I introduced this morning, I think, will meet the difficulties in this case—that every alternative week we should adjourn from Friday till Monday, and on the intermediate weeks from Saturday till Monday, and gentlemen can then arrange their business accordingly. If that resolution shall be adopted I think it would be proper to hold gentlemen to a strict attendance, but I think we have accomplished now all that it is proper to accomplish at this stage.

Mr. COMSTOCK—I move that the Convention do now adjourn until Monday evening at seven and a half o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There is no quorum present, and it is not in order.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Alvord to suspend the call, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. N. M. ALLEN—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. COMSTOCK—I ask to be excused on Monday—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has no power to excuse the gentleman; and there being no quorum present, it is not now in order.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I desire to ask a question of the power of the Convention, because I am uninstructed—

Mr. ALVORD—I call the gentleman to order. The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Allen to adjourn, and it was declared carried. So the Convention stood adjourned.

MONDAY, JULY 22, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

The Journal of Saturday was read by the SECRETARY.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—As I understood the reading of the Journal, it is not stated that the resolution which I had the honor of offering on Saturday was referred on my motion to the Committee on the Bill of Rights.

The Journal was ordered to be corrected in that respect; and there being no further objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN presented a petition from citizens of the county of Columbia, praying for a clause in the Constitution to prohibit donations to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. CASH presented a petition of Rev. W. P. Canfield and ninety-six others, citizens of the town of Cazenovia, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Insurance to inquire and report as to the necessity and propriety of requiring the Legislature to provide by law the form of a policy of insurance, and rendering all provisions in such contracts void except those prescribed in such form.

Which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Insurance, etc.

Mr. WALES offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following amendment be made to the fifth section of the article reported by the Committee on the Organization, etc., of the Legislature, viz.:

"The salary of one thousand dollars shall be for a full attendance upon all the sessions of the Legislature for the year, or upon actual duty with some of its committees; and the amount paid to each member shall bear the same proportion to one thousand dollars as his actual daily attendance shall bear to the whole number of days the Legislature shall have been in session; and the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall prescribe the manner of ascertaining the actual attendance of the members respectively upon each session, and the time and manner of payment of their respective salaries."

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. A. J. PARKER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 3, on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting the authorizing by the Legislature of any consolidation of Railroad corporation, where the aggregate capital of the companies consolidated shall exceed fifteen million of dollars, and prohibiting a consolidation in any case without the written consent of three-fourths of all the stockholders.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GREELEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Convention will proceed on Wednesday, at 1 P. M., to act upon the article reported by the Committee on the Rights of Suffrage as it shall have been reported from the Committee of the Whole. Every amendment that shall have been or which may be proposed, shall be separately presented, and five minutes allowed the mover to explain and commend it, with a like opportunity for one reply, when the vote shall be taken thereon. All amendments having thus been disposed of, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays on the article itself.

Mr. PAIGE moved to substitute "Thursday" instead of "Wednesday."

Mr. GREELEY—I changed the time expressly to suit the convenience of the gentleman from Schenectady, [Mr. Paige] as he said he would not be ready by Tuesday. I leave it to the Convention to decide the time.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I think that this resolution ought to be laid over.

The resolution giving rise to debate, it was laid on the table.

Mr. E. A. BROWN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Cities, etc., be respectfully requested to inquire and report as to the propriety of a constitutional provision prohibiting the enlargement of the boundaries of cities by amendments of their charters under acts of the Legislature or otherwise, without the previous assent of a majority in number of the tax payers representing more than one-half of the assessed value of the property in the district proposed to be annexed to such city, and also prohibiting taxation of such annexed district for the pre-existing indebtedness of such city.

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities, etc.

Mr. LUDINGTON offered the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, The present Capitol of the State, with the improvements recently made in the Assembly Chamber therein, will, for many years to come, meet all just and reasonable requirements of the people of the State, and

WHEREAS, Heavy pecuniary burdens, both of general and local character, chiefly consequent upon the great civil war through which we as a nation have just passed, and bearing heavily upon the resources of the people; and

WHEREAS, Recent legislation has been had, and further legislation is in contemplation, having in view the expenditure of many millions of dollars for the purpose of building a new State Capitol; therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to prohibit any further appropriation of money for the purpose indicated in the foregoing preamble, for the period of five years, or such other period of time as will better enable the people to make such expenditure.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I shall have occasion to discuss that resolution; therefore I propose that it lie over.

The resolution giving rise to debate, it was laid on the table.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be upon—

Mr. CASSIDY — If I am in order, I propose to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN — It is not in order, there being an amendment now pending before the Committee.

Mr. CASSIDY — I propose to offer an amendment on behalf of my colleague [Mr. Conger]. I shall, therefore, reserve it until another time.

Mr. CASSIDY — Mr. Chairman, as one of the Committee on Suffrage, opposed to the article under consideration, I desire to be heard in vindication of the minority report. And first, let me correct an error copied from the Convention Manual into that report. It was in 1860 that the last submission of negro suffrage to the popular vote was made, resulting in 337,984 votes against to 197,503 in favor thereof. It was in 1857 that the amendment to that effect was forgotten in the pigeon holes of the Executive office. In discussing this subject, I shall not attempt to keep track of the discursive arguments with which gentlemen have illustrated their views, nor seek its solution in the results of comparative anatomy or in the problems of metaphysical politics. There is to me a mocking irony in the citation of the Declaration that "all men are born equal," and that "government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed," if I suppose that the representatives of thirteen slaveholding and slavetrading colonies applied it to the Negro and the Indian. There is a grim sarcasm in the citation of the spectacle in the cabin of the Mayflower, of a body of men framing a form of government for a land they had never seen, and proclaiming their dominion over the people in possession of it, and whom they were destined to exterminate. Yet these and the scenes upon our western border, where the rifle of the white settler clears the path of civilization through the hunting-grounds of the red man, have been cited to prove not the equality of men in their respective communities, but the equality of races! I leave such illustrations to refute the arguments in behalf of which they are advanced. Nor shall I attempt to analyze the delusion under which gentlemen have sacrificed to a favorite theory not only logic and history and philosophy, but the sympathies of kindred and of race. We have heard eloquent gentlemen here in their eulogies of the negro "smoothing the raven down of darkness till it smiled"; yet when the pleading voice of women was addressed them closing their ears—turn from the supplicants "and that fair mountain leave to batten on this Moor." "I will not ask Jean Jacques Rousseau," nor any other political philosopher under what clause of the social compact we derive our power to act here. It is enough for me that for the fourth time in the history of the State a Convention is called to revise the organic law. We, its members, are delegated by the existing constituency to revise an existing Constitution, and to submit our conclusions to the power that made us, for its approval or rejection. That is the grant and the limit of our authority. As I understood the repeated votes of last week, it is the purpose of the majority not to submit this clause of the Constitution to a separate vote. The plebiscitum of 1846, granted again in 1860, is to be withheld. Instead of trusting the people with the decision of the subject, by itself, it is to be carried by a "log-rolling" process—a device familiar to these halls; but which we were sent here to purge our legislation of, and not to countenance and perpetuate by our example. In parliamentary law, when a proposition is divisible it must be put separately; and shall we adopt another rule in the great popular deliberation to which our work is to be subjected? It is a denial of justice to the people! In the article reported by the majority of the committee we have salutary provisions for checking bribery at the polls, and for securing uniformity in the laws concerning registration. Are we to forfeit these unless we accept unqualified colored suffrage? We have unfortunately in the same article clauses which will deprive of their votes in the next presidential contest, and in the succeeding year, some twenty thousand naturalized citizens. Are those who object to this feature, and yet approve of colored suffrage, to vote against the latter in voting against the former? Already we have intimations of schemes of a strongly centralized State government. Are we to accept them for the sake of the negro? Are we to forfeit them, if we deem them wise and beneficent, because we encounter the prejudices against him? We have sacrificed in his cause already millions of treasure and lives, the Constitutions of ten States, and what is most precious in our federal system. Are we to lay the reforms we here propose at his feet, and make them the sport of his fortune? I tell gentlemen they cannot thus cheat the people. This question must come before them. It must come before them in the very shape in which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] placed it, by his amendment—upon the property qualification. The issue to be passed upon by the people in the election this fall will be the alternative between the Constitution of 1846 and that of 1867. You cannot escape this. If the clause we mature is rejected, with the rest of the instrument we propose, then section One of article Two of the present Constitution will stand. All that has been asked here is that, as this is the inevitable issue, you take it out from the text of the Constitution and present it to be passed upon by itself. And let me say here, not in order to defend the existing requirement, but in defense of the revolutionary patriots who proposed it, and of the good and wise men of the Conventions of 1821 and of 1846 who permitted it to stand, that it can hardly be regarded as a property test. In a country of superabundant land this requirement—equivalent to less than a £4 rent—comes down below the standard for which John Bright and his associates were, a year ago, contending in England. It was intended by us to define fixity of residence, and to distinguish the freedmen of this State from the refugees of sister communities. It was a boon to the class to which it was extended; and it was retained in this form in 1846, lest if presented as a naked question of colored suffrage it should be taken away altogether. But we are told that the patriots of the Revolution, the statesmen of 1821, the constitutional reformers of 1846 were behind the present time. The age has received an enlightenment unknown to them! And there is some truth in this doubtless; though much false boast beside. But when they add that it is in contravention to the spirit of the age to recognize the difference of races among men, they belie the present as much as they have misrepresented the past. The spirit of the age! There is not in the world a nation worthy of a name, there is not a State possessing institutions deserving respect, that does not recognize the difference—the organic distinction—of race. England governs possessions in Asia, Africa, and in Australia, tenfold greater than her own in territory and population. She is, according to definition of Disraeli, more an Asiatic than a European power. France colonizes Algeria, and seeks to subdue Farther India and Cochin China. Denmark and Holland own islands in the East and West Indies, and they rule them absolutely, refusing to the native races any participation in government. The proud boast of an English statesman, so nobly paraphrased by an American Senator, speaking of England, that “her morning drum beat following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England,” was uttered in the pride of domination of a ruling race. It is the tap of the drum, the bugle call to arms, the reveille to the garrisoned troops, that proclaim the supremacy of the English over distant continents and alien races. It is the mouth of the cannon that asks the consent of the Sepoy. It is the point of the bayonet that wins it from the Sikhs. England tolerates no partnership with inferiors in the great trust of government. She would no more admit her Hindoos, her Caffres, her Australians, to vote than she would invite to a European congress the king of Abyssinia or of Dahomey, or the cannibal chiefs of New Zealand. She would no more consult these inferior subjects than we have the Esquimaux, whom we have purchased wholesale, without their knowledge or consent, and whom we propose to govern wholly according to our views and with entire indifference to theirs. It is a justification of our trust in the people that time has shown that what were once called the prejudices of the multitude are the inspiration of a people, and are sustained by the conclusions of science. The question of race is the overruling one in the estimation of political philosophy. Already is Europe endeavoring to reconstruct its map, and constitute nationality upon the basis of community of language and of origin—to unite under one autonomy the German family, in another the Slaves, in another the Scandinavian. We have seen the fruits of the theory in the restoration of Italy as one nation, in the partial unification of Germany. And yet the difference between Celt and Saxon, Latin and Slave are but those of a common family and are reconcilable. The divergence of the African, Indian and Asiatic from the white and from each other has its source far back in the womb of time and cannot be obliterated for centuries of centuries. It is fortunate for the cause of humanity that the progress of the world has not been intrusted to such a partnership of races. What would have been its civilization if Europe in the past had been tied to Asia and to Africa? What would have been our own progress if the governing class of this Republic had been of this motley texture? We have the answer in the career of the mongrel republics below us, where the European element ceasing to predominate, religion runs into fetichism; politics into anarchy, and the dreams of humanitarianism end in tragedies of blood. “Better fifty years of Europe than whole cycles of Cathay.” Better one year of American liberty under the institutions of Washington, than centuries of such civilization as these anarchies present. Those who invite us to emulate them, point backward. They would make us retrace the path of improvement, and in the name of progress march us back into chaos. I do not say this in antipathy to the colored race. Without trenching upon the theological question, or accepting any particular ethnological theory, I may say that I regard them as a younger race—susceptible of improvement, but as yet only fit for a state of pupillage and protection. I think that I may cite, in support of this view, the leading minds of Europe. Michelet thus speaks of them; Darwin, Huxley and that school assign them that inferior place; Herbert Spencer recognizes the education of races by the reiteration of impressions made hereditary by their action upon successive generations; Agassiz, denies the common origin of Indian, African and white; Draper speaks of the tropic races as children in character. Unfortunately for these children they attain the age of passion before the age of reason. Like all young people and young races they have great imitative powers, and when mixed in with a largely preponderating mass of whites, conform outwardly to the higher standard. Where they prevail in numbers, as in some sections of the Union and in the adjacent islands, they speedily fall back into barbarism. They have been developed, normally as a race, no higher than the tribal condition, and their tendency is always to recede unto it. If we regard this question in its broader view—looking beyond the five thousand men for whom it is here asked—and estimate it as a national question, affecting every State, north and south, and still more vitally in the future, the States of the Pacific—we shall realize its true proportions. We have seen what a population Ireland and a few provinces of Germany have been able to pour upon our shores. But imagine the Asiatic tribes set swarming and lighting upon our Pacific slope. Imagine them claiming and receiving an award of citizenship, framing laws and constitutions, determining the course of government, and the character of public opinion, bestowing offices and honors, holding courts and commanding armies! Imagine the prevalence of Oriental vices, the obscene idolatry of the masses, the polygamous family, the violence and cruelty of the great, the abjectness and servility of the commonalty. What a future of American citizenship does not that present! And yet every argument for the equality of the African is a plea for the more advanced Asiatic. Already our brethren in that section feel the alarm at the approaching invasion; and the Republican State Convention has declared for the exclusion of the people, not only from citizenship, but from residence. As an example to the States, I would repel here, the African, the Indian and the Asiatic from any partnership in the great trust of government. I would preserve it to the race which alone may be said to have made the history of the world; and which alone has framed institutions for the preservation of individual and communal liberty. To trust it to the barbarous and untrained hands of fresh emancipated slaves would be to put back the clock of the world for centuries. If the effect of the revolution, through which the country is now passing, shall be to give up the Gulf States to a hybrid African population, and to surrender the Pacific region to the Asiatic hordes, then the great accomplishments of our statesmanship and of our arms, the acquisition of Louisiana and Florida, of Texas and California, are thrown away. We won these fertile and golden fields for what? To take them from France and Spain and Mexico, and bestow them upon the negro and the Asiatic? Nor is the effect of our fatuity limited to these regions. We submit our own State to the rule of these hordes. The black and yellow Senators in the Federal Congress will help legislate for New York, dictate the foreign diplomacy of all the States, regulate commerce, and administer internal laws. Who does not see that with such an element in our councils we shall go backward in legislation, reviving the cruel penal statutes, the restrictions, the bigotries, the trivial pomp and costly ceremonial of the dark ages, and in our best mood, re-necanting the patriarchic and protective system adapted only to immature communities. This is not progress! It is retrogression in government. The refusal to consult the people in regard to it, is but another step in that evil policy which has, in recent years and under evil counsels and the pretenses which our war has afforded substituted force and fraud for the rule of opinion. We must look for progress, through order, in the direction in which our fathers entered it, not in the excess of government, but in the relegation of the State to its fewest functions, and its simplest forms. The individual man, the family, and the voluntary associations which these form, have advanced thus far, the progress of society over the hindrances of States and governments, and their machinery of force; and to them we must look for future progress. If we are to accept of any new partnership, let it be the fair hand of woman, rather than the dusky palm held out to us though bearing gifts—proffering to some, exemption from taxes, to others offices, to localities schemes of improvement, to the speculating class increased debt. But rather let us pursue it alone, for her sake and for the inferior races, who share all the benefits of our progress and invention—for whom as well as for us the press speaks with multitudinous voice, the telegraph sends its lightning message, and steam performs its gigantic labors in mill, on rail, on river and ocean, and in the mines within the earth. Let us commit to this race and to the agencies it has created, the destiny of the future; and History will unfold upon this hemisphere chapters more brilliant and beneficent than any she has yet recorded. The giant form of this republic already stretches across the continent, spanning the hours. When the sunrise gilds its brow, its feet are yet shrouded in midnight. Let us not taint its blood by this poisonous infusion! Do not seek to tie down its immensity with the lilliputian devices of faction. Do not try to interrupt its destiny, as the African, in the eclipse, endeavors to arrest the movement of the planets, by charms and incantations, by the noise of drums and the din and clamor of bewildered crowds.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND.—Several gentlemen on this floor have intimated that I was mistaken in charging that Professor Agassiz, at the city of Charleston, when the behest of slavery seemed to require the announcement, laid down the doctrine that the colored race were distinct in their origin from the white race. I am able now, fortunately, to strengthen my position by quoting the very words of that distinguished naturalist from his own hand. They are as follows:

"The only ground I may have given to question the soundness of my views concerning the different races of men, is the opinion which I have always maintained, and which I still hold now, that the different types of the human family have an independent origin one from the other, and are not descended from common ancestors; but this idea I do not apply to the negroes only, but to the Indians, the Chinese, the Hindoos, the Australians, etc., as well. In fact, I believe that men were created in nations, not in individuals: but not in nations in the present sense of the word; on the contrary, in such crowds as exhibited slight, if any, diversity among themselves except those of sex."

I do not propose here to quarrel with the opinion of Dr. Agassiz, but to state it. The gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] who is not now in his seat, has endeavored to vindicate the soundness of the opinion heretofore put forth by Professor Lieber. I think my friend, with all his labor, has not succeeded in showing that distinguished scholar to be consistent with the ideas of the present age, if consistent with himself. I understand Professor Lieber to hold there are three races that are not susceptible of improvement—the Bushmen, the Hottentots and the Papous. I entirely differ with him. I know but one race—but one variety of the human race that is not susceptible of improvement, and that variety is called the "Bourbons." It is the only race I have ever seen in which individuals could not be found who had made considerable advance from the position in which their associates and themselves were born; but when you find a genuine Bourbon, he "learns nothing and forgets nothing." The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], who has just taken his seat, and several other gentlemen upon this floor, esteem the African race so low in position that we need not look for them to assume a position equal with ourselves in the world of intelligence. The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], has not told us what his views were in regard to the origin of the human race, whether we are of a common origin, or whether our origins were diverse. But the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] came down to the substantial stand point of the christian religion, and I have no doubt if my friend from Albany had gone in extenso to give his views he would be compelled to come down to the substantial doctrine of revealed religion. Now, sir, if we adopt the christian revelation, if we adopt the sacred history as the friends of slavery, and the emines of the black race in this country have always done, we shall be compelled to trace the origin of the negro back to Ham, the son of Noah. I accept that as his origin. It is the origin as shown by history and by christianity. Now, I wish, as the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] is the only one of those gentlemen here present in this hall this morning, to call his attention to the fact that the sons of Ham constituting the population of ancient Egypt, built upon the banks of the river Nile, more than three thousand years ago, structures of a magnificence and proportion, such as have ever been and are even to the present day a wonder. For more than six hundred miles these edifices are now standing along the river Nile, and it seems they shall stand as the wonder of the world while time itself shall last. But, yet, as I have said, the people of Egypt were the sons of Ham, not the same variety of the race to which the colored population of this country belong. True, they had not been subjected to the climatic and local influences that have produced the form, feature and color of the African race as they exist among us; but they were of the race to which this African family belong—of the sons of Ham. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] read from Jefferson the idea that the sons of Ham were unable to make mathematical calculations. I would like to see any scholar of the present day undertake to tell us what amount of mathematical power and capacity must have been possessed by the men who built the pyramids? What amount of learning and intelligence must be possessed by the men who built the temples of Thebes and constructed the Catacombs? What amount of progress in art was necessary to make those applications of color that stand in the Catacombs to-day, as perfect as when they were spread upon their walls. Aye more; the very letters by which this slander was uttered upon the sons of Ham, were invented by a son of Ham, by a Phœnician—by Cadmus. And where were the ancestors of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], and the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], and my own ancestors of that day? They were living in a darkness so dense that not a single ray of light has come down from them to the age in which we live. Not that the sons of Ham were superior to our ancestors in essential characteristics, but the sons of Ham at that day had enjoyed some of the advantages that we in this day enjoy a thousand fold increased. It is circumstances that has made us to differ, and until the spread of the christian religion among the Teutons from whom I derived my origin, and among the Celts from whom some other of these gentlemen derived their origin, there was but very little that our ancestors could boast over the negroes of Africa of the present day. Men should not forget the pit from which they were digged. Men sometimes do. My friend from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] to-day has put himself substantially in that position by quoting for our imitation the conduct of Great Britain toward subject races. If, as he has argued, it be right for England to pursue the course she has done toward her subject races, how can he avoid the argument that England, because she has the power, is justified in what she has done toward the Celtic race. He may satisfy his own mind, for there are minds formed in that way, but he has not satisfied mine. I do not believe the negro to be any better than the white man, nor more elevated than the white man, nor more learned than the white man; but I believe it is decided by history, and so it has always been true in this land, that the colored man is like the rest of the race. I will not speak of the rest of the State, but I will speak for the county of Albany, and I will speak for the county of Rensselaer—that the colored population of these counties are equal in point of morality, in point of intelligence, in point of quiet living, in point of industry and frugality, to any laboring population that we have. And there are specimens among them in my own city serving as clerks with eminent success, and one a clergyman. Certainly the rest of the clergy in my city, of any faith, Catholic or Protestant, will not hold him to be their inferior in any characteristics which marks the gentleman. We have also a surgeon, raised in our midst, who has held the rank of surgeon in the United States Army, who is now a successful surgeon in the city of Charleston. I say this not as putting this subject above every other subject, but as putting those people in a situation which shows that they ought to enjoy the rights and privileges of citizenship, and all the advantages secured in this country, to those willing to pursue those courses which lead to prosperity. But I have one word to say to the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger]. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has endeavored to frighten us from doing justice to the colored race by assuming two or three positions which certainly cannot be maintained. The gentleman took occasion to sneer at the suggestion made by several gentlemen upon this floor, that government, when rightfully organized, was the result of the social compact. I said in some earlier remarks which I made here, that some gentleman had taken the picture of the divine right of kings and cut out the divine right of kings and put in the divine right of society in its place, but the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has not taken the trouble to cut out the head. He says "the sovereign electors in the State of New York hold their power by the same right that Queen Victoria holds her power in England." Queen Victoria holds her power as the heir of the conqueror of England at the battle of Hastings. I can show you how the people of this State hold their power. It will be found they hold their power by the social compact. In the preamble to the Constitution of 1777, I find the following, and I wish gentlemen to note and to see how the fathers held this doctrine. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] said that we came here claiming that our government was descended from the British government. I will show by reading this preamble, that this government was established even during the revolution, in defiance of the British government, and without any connection one with the other.

"Whereas, the present government of this colony, by Congress and committees, was instituted, while the former government under the crown of Great Britain, existed in full force; and was established for the sole purpose of opposing the usurpation of the British Parliament, and was intended to expire on a reconciliation with Great Britain, which it was then apprehended would soon take place, but is now considered remote and uncertain."

It will be seen that this assemblage based their action upon the ground that the government of the State under which they then lived rested in committees and congresses having no authorization except the consent of the people of the country. The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] says the organization formed in the Mayflower proposed to govern the Indians. If the gentleman will look at the instrument there formed he will find that the framers of that instrument only propose to govern themselves.

Mr. CASSIDY—It proposed to govern themselves and the country.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—There is not a word in it except the proposition to govern themselves. So that in so far as regards New England and New York, so far as regards our national government, we live under organizations formed expressly under the social compact. One word more in answer to the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], and I am done. In one part of his argument, in that part where he proposed to exterminate the colored race by the severity of the climate (for he had two parts to it, one in which he proposed to have the colored race increased so fast as to outnumber us, and the second, in which he proposed the extermination of the colored race by climate). Now, in regard to so much as proposed to exterminate the colored race by reason of our climate, I wish to quote this single fact, that in 1790 the whole colored population of the State of New York amounted to 25,978, and that in 1860 it amounted to 49,905, showing an increase almost twice greater than has occurred in the Empire of France, and an increase greater than the average increase of any country in Europe since that time.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—What was the population in 1865?

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I will answer the gentleman. The population in 1865 is conceded by common consent to have not been properly shown by the census returns. We do not know what it was, because it was improperly taken. Sir, the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] ought to have remembered that within the last twenty years the increase of the colored population in Virginia and Maryland was so great that it was estimated that those two States sold to the southern States, of their own children, not less than thirty thousand in a single year. This looks very little like extermination, but it looks essentially in the opposite direction. But the gentleman told us that philosophers had now substantially established the fact that unless emigration was in isothermal lines, the emigrant might expect extermination; and he says that he himself brought that map, which hangs upon our walls with its suggestive lines upon it, all the way from Washington in order to show us that fact. This is not the first time that we have heard of isothermal lines. When it was proposed to extend slavery into Kansas, into a State whose climate is substantially like our own, Robert J. Walker was dispatched all the way from the city of Washington to Kansas to try and convince the people that although they did not want slavery, although they were determined they would not have it, they must have it in consequence of certain mysterious isothermal lines, and yet by and bye Robert J. Walker returned, not on an isothermal, but on a bee line to the city of Washington, and the last we have heard of his isothermal characteristics was in the Supreme Court of the United States with toothless old Judge Sharkey arguing for an injunction against the people of this Union in their attempt to put down the rebellion in the Southern States, and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], will have as much trouble in resisting the will of the people of the State of New York as Robert J. Walker had in attempting to force slavery upon Kansas, although he brings to his aid the same isothermal lines. But, says the gentleman, emigration is not successful unless on isothermal lines. Just look at Brazil. Brazil furnishes the only example, almost, of a successful and prosperous people who have emigrated from Europe to this side of the water, if you throw out the emigration of the Anglo-Saxon race, and their friends, the Celts and the Teutons that came along with them. Look at Brazil. Brazil is located down on the line of eighty degrees of heat. The people of Portugal, who settled Brazil, came from above seventy, and nearly up to sixty, and yet is there any complaint but what the people of Brazil are healthy? any complaint but what the people of Brazil are prosperous? But there is another striking example furnished by history. I have found, and perhaps it was a reason why I ceased to insist upon being called a democrat, that democracy, so-called, had to ignore history, had to ignore facts, had to ignore the providence of God. I find, sir, that according to history a people started from Mecca, which is on the isothermal line of eighty, passed up into northern Africa and over into Spain, advanced up to the line of sixty, advanced above sixty up to the middle of France almost up to fifty, and were there met not by an isothermal line, but by Charles Martel, with the powers of France on the battlefield of Poitiers, and were only driven back by superior military force. I have learned from history that that people, who for seven hundred years dwelt in Spain, were not only the most beautiful, physically, but the most intellectual people then in the world; and yet, although they crossed isothermal lines, they were so skilled in architecture and so far ahead of the rest of the world in that department, that even the Christian church has borrowed much of the principles of their finest architecture from them. This people surpassed all the rest of the world in mathematics. they were the very discoverers of algebra, they were second in literature to no people then in the world, and such was the standing of their institutions of learning that Christian scholars, or those who meant to be scholars from the North of Europe, went to learn in Moorish Spain what they could not be taught in Christendom, notwithstanding the Saracens had crossed over isothermal lines from eighty degrees up to sixty, and even above that line. Sir, isothermal lines are lines of fallacy—lines of nonsense. They are lines of individuals got up for the same philosophical purposes that Agassiz made his great announcement at Charleston; and for the same reason that Dr. Lieber, when he published his philosophy, placed the negro in so low a social and intellectual position as he did. But sir, God placed our common ancestors in a country whose climate was substantially like our own, in Mesopotamia, up between the Tigris and Euphrates, and some have gone to the north and some to the south and although a little acclimation was occasionally necessary, yet no case can be found where a people continued to flourish for two hundred years where the climate and the country prevented their success and their prosperity. But I have another illustration that I think will be very pat to my old whilom Van Buren, free soil friend of 1848, from Rockland [Mr. Conger]. In 1862 certain men from the State of Massachusetts, with Ben Butler at their head, found it desirable to cross the isothermal lines from North to South, to go into a hotter latitude—to the city of New Orleans. There were men in this country who not only told us about isothermal lines, but who rejoiced publicly in the belief that nothing but death and certain destruction awaited these men even if they passed the enemies' batteries and locked themselves in the city of New Orleans. Yet they went there, and instead of being troubled with the isothermal lines they put the common sense of those people who organized the government of Massachusetts under the social compact, the common sense of those travelers and wandering emissaries from Massachusetts, spoken of by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger]—they put that common sense in practice in the city of New Orleans, and while the men from the icy north-east, who had been accustomed to the north-east wind from the banks of Newfoundland, were in the city of New Orleans, yellow fever never entered it. I should think the gentleman and his friends would begin to feel that nothing was impossible, that even isothermal lines raised no barrier unsurmountable by men of intelligence, who have a belief in God and intend to keep their powder dry.

Mr. BELL—When the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] took his seat, I meant to ask him a question, and with his permission I will ask him now. He referred several times in his remarks to the rights of the women of this State. I would ask him respectfully whether he is in favor of engraving in the present Constitution a provision to allow them to vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—In answer to the gentleman I would say what I stated at the close of my remarks, that I would submit to the people of this State the question whether they would extend to the women of the State the right of suffrage. That is all that I propose.

Mr. BELL—I understood him to say he was in favor of it.

Mr. CASSIDY—As a choice between the two, whether we should take an alien race or not, or take that part of our own race who are only separated from us by sexes, I should prefer the latter.

Mr. BELL—Then I understand the gentleman is in favor of incorporating into the Constitution the privilege of allowing them to vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—I am in favor of submitting such a question to the people.

Mr. BELL—I think the gentleman does not fully and directly answer me. My inquiry was to know if he was in favor of allowing the women in this State to vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—When that question comes up, I will meet it at the polls, as I will all other questions, voting on it by ballot.

Mr. BELL—But at the present time the gentleman is disposed to evade the question?

Mr. CASSIDY—At present I propose to answer the question in that way. I think the measure of the acceptability of a particular element to a constituency is the measure of its fitness therefor. If the black race in this country have so won upon the good opinion of the governing race here that they would incorporate them into the constituency itself, I am willing that should be done. I consider that the test for their fitness, and I consider that the proper tribunal to pass upon it. I can see nothing more fit, nothing more proper, than that those who now carry on the business of the State, and who for a century almost have carried it on, should have this question in their own hands substantially, and that if the whole of the colored population are fitted to vote without any further requirements, or any further limitation, that they should so pronounce it; and when they so pronounce it I will accept it, and accept it cheerfully, with all its consequences. I maintain the same ground as to women. If the present existing constituency think the difficulties which apparently stand in the way of women voting are surmountable, then I would say admit them also. It is a question of high expediency; it is a question of great seriousness, and I acknowledge it is a revolution, a great social revolution, and it is to be approached with a great deal of thought, and a great deal of deliberation, and slowly and by degrees, and therefore I would decide it by submission to the people. I hardly believe that the admission of women into the constituency would be carried if submitted now. I do not know but what it might be carried at some future day, and I am willing that the advocates of such a measure should have a chance to make the test of its strength before the people, and to make the approach to its final consummation by an appeal to test.

Mr. BELL—Should the proposition be submitted to the people, how will the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] vote on it?

Mr. CASSIDY—When the time comes I shall decide how to vote then, and I shall vote by ballot, as I told the gentleman.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I wish to ask the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], one question, respectfully.

Mr. RATHBUN—I think we have a rule which prevents a gentleman from making more than one speech upon a pending amendment.

Mr. CASSIDY—It will hardly prevent gentlemen from asking questions, and I believe I have the floor.

Mr. RATHBUN—I call the gentleman to order, and I think I have a right to do it under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair decides that if the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] insists upon his point of order, if there are any other gentlemen on the floor who desire to speak, the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] and the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] must give way.

Mr. KINNEY—I do not suppose this question of negro suffrage is now legitimately before the committee. I do not desire to discuss that question, but as I understand it the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], and upon that I desire very briefly to say a few words, namely, upon the right of women to vote. In my anxiety to have the work of this Convention progress and culminate in a perfected Constitution within such reasonable period of time as will not bring odium and contempt upon it and upon its labors, I have foreborne thus far to offer any extended remarks upon any question that has been before it. The question of removing the restrictions that have heretofore been placed on woman, and of allowing her the free exercise of her self-governing powers in common with man, seems to require something more than has yet been offered upon that subject. The world has long been accustomed to regard woman as the mere appendage, instead of the counterpart and co-equal of man. Constitutions and laws have been framed upon the hypothesis that she is inferior in capacity, and designed by the Creator to occupy a subordinate, if not a slavish condition in life. And it was not until the American Revolution developed the idea that all men are created with equal rights that the other idea was suggested that possibly woman might be included in that formula. Hitherto her person and her property had been so completely and absolutely sunk upon entering the marriage relation that the law scarcely knew of the existence of such being. She had few rights which the laws, or the men who made the laws, were bound to respect. But under the civilization of the age, and its wonderful discoveries in all the departments of science and philosophy, she has been discovered and brought to light, since which period she has been gradually emerging and arising to the stand point of perfect equality with her former lord and master. But her natural rights have never been, to any great extent, restored to her without a desperate struggle on the part of those who had usurped them. Some twenty years ago, when it was proposed in this State to recognize her personal existence while a feme covert, and also her rights of property, there were not more than a half dozen senators who dared vote to relinquish to her those rights; and soon after men turned pale everywhere when they saw the scepter of rule over woman and her property departing from them. Now but few can be found in the State who will own that they ever hesitated to grant her those rights, and not more than two or three in this Convention have the ungallantry to cast doubt upon the propriety of those eminently just and humane measures. Now that she asks the right of self-government upon terms of equality with man, so long and so unjustly withheld, gentlemen hold up their hands in utter amazement at the demand. Probably her request will receive in this Convention, about the same support her plea for the right of property did in the Legislature twenty years ago; but I predict that twenty years hence few men will be found to acknowledge they even so much as questioned the propriety of doing this act of simple justice. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] protested against any relinquishment of power on the part of those who now enjoy a monopoly of it. He said the sovereign power of the State is vested in the present voting population, and he denounced the proposition for a surrender of any percentage of it to those who do not now enjoy it. This has been the plea of crowned heads and privileged classes in all ages of the world. It is the argument of the aristocracy of England to-day against a surrender of a percentage of their power to the seven or eight millions of disfranchised men in that kingdom. His speech would have been extremely pertinent, though not perhaps proportionately powerful, as a speech in the English parliament against the franchise bill. The money changers of this State gave up the blessed privilege of sending their debtors to jail, only after a long and arduous struggle. The ballot was given the poor man under protests not unlike those heard in this Convention, by the parties who believed the power of the State should be wielded by the property holders of the State. That branch of the democratic party which had ruled this country so long and with such an iron hand, when they saw the scepter of political power departing from them, sought to retain it by thrusting their country into the most terrible civil war the world ever saw, and they gave up the right to enslave their fellow man only at the cannon's mouth. In keeping with this death-like grasp on political power, is the refusal of gentlemen to-day to part with any percentage of it by permitting other classes to exercise those natural rights of self-government on equal terms with themselves. Sir, we are parting with a percentage of our political power every day. Foreigners who land upon our shores are continually demanding political power and it is granted. The young men, as they arrive at the age of manhood, demand a voice in the work of self-government and they have it; but if the argument of the gentlemen from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is worth anything it would shut from out the pale of State sovereignty, the boys that are waiting upon us in this house when they too shall arrive at manhood; for the sovereignty of the State, when it is conferred upon them, will be withdrawn from us to that extent. But, sir, I dissent from the whole theory that society confers rights upon anybody. The right of self government, upon which our whole superstructure is based, is in the man. It has been written by the finger of God himself upon the mental constitution of every human being, and in such unmistakable characters that it is impossible for us to misunderstand, misinterpret or mistranslate them. We need not go back to Aristotle or other heathen authorities upon this subject. We have but to read man himself and there we find the law strong as Holy Writ. If I were disposed to quote authority, I would give that of the ablest legal commentator that has yet written upon the subject, who says that "political or civil liberty, which is that of a member of society, is no other than natural liberty so far restrained by human laws (and no farther) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public." In addition to which I would say that, civil or political rights are man's natural rights so far restrained (and no farther) as shall be necessary for the good of the whole. If this be not true then our immortal Declaration of Independence is a myth, and our political fabric built upon the sand, and we had better, therefore, hasten back to the divine right of kings to rule the people instead of depending upon that subterfuge—the divine right of the people to rule themselves. I repeat, sir, the right of self-government exists in the man, and all that society can do in its corporate capacity is to regulate the exercise of that right; or, for certain prudential reasons to restrict it altogether. Society cannot confer the right; but it may regulate it, and for its own safety it may in certain cases refuse its exercise. This right of self-government does not inhere in the child, for the laws of its very being clearly demonstrates that it is dependent for support and government upon the natural parent, and has not yet attained to the condition of self-support, self-dependence and self-government. But when it is developed to that condition, then I insist that all the rights of self-government which pertain to any other member of society attach to him; and if society refuses him the exercise of them, except for certain prudential reasons, then it is an usurper and violator of God's immutable law. Foreigners may properly be refused the ballot until they shall have become so familiar with our system of free government, and become so purged of their prejudices in favor of their own, that they can vote intelligently and with safety to our form of society. It is refused to idiots, the insane and felons for those prudential reasons which readily suggest themselves to every mind. I now desire to apply these principles to the question before us, the right of women to vote. It is readily seen that the foundation is laid for woman suffrage. Woman is but the counterpart of man—the two constitute the genius of the race. Man possesses no faculty or power of mind whatever which woman does not also possess, and in a mental point of view they are in truth the counterpart of each other. If mind votes and rules and governs, and not wealth or physical structure, then the right of woman to vote, rule and govern is no less than that of man, and therefore the onus lies on those who refuse her that right to show the sufficient reason for the refusal.

No one has yet shouldered the inevitable task of showing her destitute of any of the essential elements of government which inhere in man. Any attempt of the kind would be met by the fact so familiar to every mind that she is already intrusted with the most complicated and arduous tasks of government, such as the government of the family and the school; and it is needless for me to say that she performs those difficult governing duties with a degree of success which has never yet characterized the opposite sex. Why should she not vote? Gentlemen say it is not her legitimate sphere. Any sphere is her legitimate sphere which she can fill with credit to herself, and without detriment to society. A few years since owning and managing property was not her sphere; school teaching was not her sphere; the store, and the counting room, and the post-office, and the printing office, and the apothecary shop, and the medical office, and the lecture room, etc. etc., were not her sphere. All these, and many other like situations which have heretofore been filled by men exclusively, she has filled with so much propriety and ability that the question as to her sphere in these directions has become almost obsolete. Other gentlemen fear the disruption of the family. The most intense and violent feuds which have ever disturbed society have grown up from religious and sectarian differences. Would gentlemen, therefore, say that none but the men shall have anything to say or do with matters of religion? One gentleman has held up before our frightened visions the horrible idea of allowing the vile women of our large cities to vote. Would that gentleman point to them as representative women of the State of New York; as a proper index of his wife and my wife; of his daughters and my daughters? What would the gentlemen of this Convention say if I should, as a reason why men should not vote, present before them those vile masculine wretches who pollute certain portions of the city of New York? And how would my democratic friends regard me should I hold up to view the voting population of Mackerellville and Five Points as representative democratic voters of the State? If these women were not introduced as representative characters, then why were they introduced at all? Sir, I believe the women of those localities are better than the men—I never saw a locality in which they were not better than the men. And notwithstanding all the efforts of the gentleman to disparage them as a voting element of society, by showing that they had become so demoralized as to be nearly one-fourth as bad as the men, I find by the prison statistics before me that the native-born women are but one-twentieth as bad as the men; that is, there were twenty men in the prisons of the State in 1866 to one woman, and of foreign birth there were ten men to one woman. In examining the pauper statistics I find the male paupers largely in excess of the females. With such ratio of criminality and pauperism in favor of the woman, I think we need not fear that our elections will be brought into disgrace by allowing this better element of society to vote. Those who have attended political meetings where the women were present know that they are conducted with decency and propriety, and are free from the obscenity, profanity and drunkenness which too frequently characterize those composed exclusively of men. Their presence at the polls would have the same humanizing and refining effect. Our elections would be held in more comfortable and respectable places, and much of the vulgarity, rowdiness and blasphemy which now pollute their atmosphere would be banished. Instead of dragging woman down it would bring the men up to a better political standard. Those who visited California in the early history of that State can call to mind the condition of a purely masculine society. Violence, terror and crime ruled with a high hand, but woman has civilized that beautiful land and made it, socially, a civilized State. Those who complain so bitterly and no doubt reasonably of the corrupt condition of our politics, should not be at loss for one of the best remedies which the elements of society afford; it is woman voting. A State under purely masculine rule must be characterized by those cold, stern, severe elements of government which characterize masculine society. The State and all her institutions necessarily partake of the nature of her voting population, and we never can infuse into it those purer, warmer, more generous and more humane elements until those elements of society are felt at the ballot box. This State will never become our idea of a perfect State until it is made to impersonate all the elements of a perfect society and a perfect humanity.

Mr. BECKWITH—Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to address to this Convention any remarks on this subject, nor do I now rise for the mere purpose of inflicting a speech upon the committee. I do, however, desire to submit a few remarks for its consideration. When this debate opened on the report of the committee, my mind was not settled as to any rule that should govern in determining who should be or were, on principle, entitled to the elective franchise. While listening to the debate I have endeavored to discover some rule, to be founded on principle and of general application, that would solve all the difficulties that surround the subject. Some such rule, that would place the right to the elective franchise on a solid basis, resting on those principles of justice, truth and right, that would bear the severest scrutiny and criticism. I am opposed to arbitrary rules to define and govern so great a right as that of the elective franchise. The people of this State are a thinking people, and they will never be satisfied with arbitrary rules in a matter of so great importance. But give them a rule founded on the true principles of right, and they will be satisfied and adopt it. The subject, who is entitled to that right, seems to be occupying the public mind in this State and nation, and seems to be struggling for the development of some such rule as will determine and settle on sound principles, to whom the right should be given as a matter of right—a rule that shall rest on a firm basis. It may, it seems to me, be justly termed a great thought agitating and struggling in the public mind to assume form and develop itself into the embodiment of some rule that shall securely establish the right to all who should of right enjoy it. Such has been the case in all ages of the world, in relation to great ideas. All who are familiar with history, know that great thoughts have struggled often for ages in the human mind for the full and clear development and expression of great principles of morals and especially of government, and they have gradually assumed form and in the process of time received a name or such a brief expression of them so clearly defining them, that they have become common truths, and the common property of mankind, and great land-marks for the guidance of all. Such was the case in respect to the great principles enunciated in the immortal Declaration of Independence; and yet some of those truths are still struggling for a more distinct and definite form of expression. Such, it seems to me, is the glorious idea suggested by the expression, that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. That great thought is now struggling in the public mind, not only of this State but of this nation, for a more definite form of expression, so that the exact truth shall be exhibited to the mind of all. This, some say, is manhood suffrage—others that it is manhood and womanhood suffrage. I think the time is not far distant before some rule for the guidance of all will find an expression, founded on the principles of eternal justice, truth and right, in such form as to make it clear to all minds, and make it the common property of all men, like that other great truth of the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created free and equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Who doubts that this expression of the great principles of human rights has not so deeply burned itself, if I may be allowed to use the expression, into the hearts, thoughts and conscience of this nation, as to have been the principal cause that has led to the abolition of slavery in this nation and to the aspirations of people in many other lands for freedom. I have been an attentive listener to the debates on this floor, to see if I could discover the true rule, to be founded on principle and of general application, which should be adopted in regard to the elective franchise, so clear and distinct as to carry with it, in its form and expression, a conviction of its truth, and so far I have not heard any gentleman lay down, or attempt to lay down any definite rule, except the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], and I am very much obliged to him for what he has said on that subject. It does not satisfy my mind to say that manhood suffrage, or manhood and womanhood suffrage should be the rule. They are too uncertain to be the expression of principle. They do not define the matter so as to be a clear and distinct rule of action, and they do not suggest to my mind any definite rule. I wish to avoid all arbitrary rules. The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] stated to us very clearly the legal rights of the different members of society—such as their civil and political rights—and in respect to his statements of them till he came to the one called the elective franchise, I discovered no ground of dissent, nor do I dissent from his definition of that franchise—nor do I intend to express any dissent to his statement, if I understand him correctly, that the governmental power of this State is, in fact, vested in those, and those only, who under the Constitution and laws of this State are authorized to exercise the elective franchise. But when he says that they, and they only, possess the right, if he means anything more than the legal right, then I am forced to dissent. It is only the old exploded doctrine that might gives right. If he had said they, and they only, possess the power, then he would have spoken correctly. Nor do I agree with him that they only, who under the Constitution and laws of this State are authorized to vote, are the only persons who are entitled as a matter of right to the privilege of voting, and that all other persons are only entitled to that privilege as a right, when the authorized voters shall grant it to them. I do not believe the extension of the elective franchise to persons not now authorized by the laws of this State to vote, is a mere matter of favor or grace, on the contrary I insist that if they are qualified by their intelligence, virtue and love of country, and the exercise of that right by them in no way impairs or impedes the rightful progress of society, and the just and more full development of its moral, intellectual and material improvement, they have, as members of society, the right to insist upon the elective franchise—not simply the right to ask it as a matter of favor or of grace, from those who enjoy the privilege, but as an inalienable right, if you please. For I believe the Supreme author of all things, created man, that is, all men, social beings, and endowed them with a mental constitution or powers of mind that may be greatly developed, and which fit them for society, and which find their greatest and best enlargement and their highest good in society, in meeting all the relations that grow out of organized society, and in discharging the duties that spring from those relations. The Sovereign of the universe has so constituted man that he cannot, or at least will not, rise to that high elevation which his maker intended, outside of society. Hence I insist that every human being who shall possess the before mentioned qualifications, and none of the disqualifications which I have barely hinted at, has the right to demand as a right, and not as a favor or matter of grace, the elective franchise, with perhaps one solitary exception, and that exception is limited in its operation. I refer to minors. There need be and should be in my judgement no arbitrary rules not founded on principle, to exclude any person, not otherwise qualified, from voting. Infants are excluded on the principle of incompetency for their own good and the good of society, and the rule excluding them is not arbitrary. There is nothing in it of that character except fixing the time of exercising it at twenty-one years of age. The proper government of society requires fixed and certain rules, and the one that fixes the time when minors shall arrive at twenty-one has been ascertained by experience to be the best. It fixes it at that age for his good and the good of society, and protects him from all his improvident agreements made while under that age. The only doubt that has arisen in my mind grows out of the fact that he is compelled at the age of eighteen to take up arms in defense of his country in case she needs his aid at that age. It may be said that many young men at eighteen are better qualified in every respect to exercise the right than many voters. True, but the good of society requires certain and fixed rules, so that the one mentioned is not entirely an arbitrary rule. I am constrained to dissent from the position taken by the very learned and able gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], that the elective franchise of right belongs to those only who now enjoy it under the Constitution and laws of the State, and that its extension to others is matter of favor or grace and not one of right. If the principle which he stated, that the legal voters of a country alone have the right to extend or withhold, as a matter of right, the elective franchise from any class of society possessing in other respects the proper qualifications, should prevail, then, as they have the power, they can gradually lessen the classes who vote, and thus in the end establish, instead of a democracy, an aristocracy, or even a monarchy—and his position, it seems to me, would be the strongest safeguard of a monarchy or of an absolute sovereign. An absolute monarch can say to his subjects, the right of suffrage is not vested in any of my subjects, it can rightfully be exercised by none of them unless I grant it as a favor; if I grant it as a favor to some few of my most wealthy and intelligent subjects, it is a matter of grace. Such it seems to me to be the tendency of his argument upon this point, and such is the rule, I think, that now prevails in many governments in Europe. It is contrary, it seems to me, to sound principle and at war with the spirit of our institutions. For one I believe the right of suffrage does not come merely as a favor from the governing power, the present legal voters. The right springs from his constitution as a man designed by his maker for society and so constituted by his creator that in it he can adorn and develop his intellectual and moral powers, and in it, and not out of it, find his highest good, improvement and happiness. Now, sir, what I have desired is, that we might by a full discussion of this subject bring out some rule or proposition that should place the right on principle and be so clear as to carry home conviction to the minds of all. I shall not attempt to lay down any rule. The propositions of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] strike my mind with force, and I have tried to discover, whether there is anything wrong in them as explained by him, or whether they were defective, or whether from the suggestions which they raise, a brief and better rule might not be established. He says, in substance, there are two classes that should be excluded from suffrage: "The first class is those who have personal incapacities, and the second class those who, having no personal incapacities, would, by their action in a particular case, tend to arrest the progress of the government, or perhaps to subvert it." Now that gentleman has shown to my satisfaction that the colored race cannot be justly denied the right of suffrage on the ground of incapacity. But he has not attempted to show that the exercise of the franchise by that race may not in some way retard or injure society in some of its departments or interests. But this has been done by other gentlemen on this floor, and I will not go over the different arguments. They are satisfactory to my mind, and establish satisfactorily to my mind that none of the interests of society would be injured or impaired by granting that privilege to the colored man. The only plausible injury suggested by the opponents to such grant is that it may injure the social relations of society. To that I answer: 1st. That you cannot by law regulate the social relations of society. 2d. The danger of increasing the commingling of the blood of the two races. Sir, do you or I, or any reflecting man believe that if the colored race had not been subjected to that abominable and wicked rule, enunciated by the late Chief Justice of the United States Court, that a colored man has no rights which a white man is bound to respect, one-tenth part of that great and truly alarming evil would have existed. Why, sir, that rule was lived up to at the South. The colored woman had no right to protect or be the keeper of her own chastity, nor could her father or husband or brother, even attempt to protect her against the demands of any brute in the form of a white man, only on peril of his life. Sir, if the civil and political rights had been enjoyed by the colored people of the South, nine-tenths of that evil, in my opinion, would not have happened. It is necessary, to protect the community from that evil, that political rights should be added to the civil rights of the colored people, and then, in my opinion, the community is better protected from that great evil. But I have said enough on that subject. It may be asked, how can you deny the elective franchise to women. To answer that, I will briefly say that, if you grant to women the same right to vote that men enjoy, I am apprehensive that you will, to be consistent, have to give to them the right to hold offices, and I am, at least, apprehensive that it will weaken the true foundations of society. The Good Book says, "evil communications corrupt good manners." Woman's perceptions of right and wrong are far more clear than man's; she is sensible to the approach of vice, and that is her great safeguard. But open, visible and sensible familiarity with vice will corrupt. It first blunts that nice perception and destroys that delicate sensibility. If destroyed or weakened in woman, as they are in men, one of the safeguards of society and of woman is equally impaired. It is a prayer which we all need to make, "Lead us not into temptation." Now, is there not danger in thus throwing open to woman the privilege of voting, of holding offices, and entering into the presence of all the busy scenes of vice and immorality, that voters and office-holders of necessity have to witness, that woman will be lowered from what now constitutes her glory and her power, to the level of man; and by thus impairing her moral power, you weaken the foundations of good society and good government. She now occupies a higher position than man. On the women of the land depends much and the best of the interests of this country. I have listened with great interest and attention to the able, eloquent and thrilling argument of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], but my judgment has not been convinced that evil and even danger would not result from extending the elective franchise to woman—that you would not be doing her as well as society a wrong.

Mr. SMITH—I shall feel compelled to vote against the extension of suffrage to women, and as I have among my immediate constituents persons whom I highly esteem, and for whose judgment I have great respect, it seems to be but just to them, as well as to myself, that I should accompany that vote with the reasons which induce me to give it. I will not undertake in the limited time allowed us here, to discuss elaborately the question, but only state in outline some of the reasons and arguments that induce me to vote against it. We are met, in limine, in this discussion with the question: Is the elective franchise a natural right? Because, if it be a natural right, I do not understand how we can deny it to women, to minors, or to foreigners; and if I believed it to be a natural right, I should at once, in order to be consistent with myself and with principle, vote for its extension to women. But as I understand it, and as I think it has been shown by various gentlemen who have addressed the committee, it is not a natural right. What is a natural right? It is a right that is inherent in humanity; a right given by God; a right that pertains to humanity under all circumstances, to the old and to the young, the black and the white, to minors as well as adults, and to women as well as men. As I suggested the other day, under the Patriarchal government which existed for sixteen or seventeen centuries, and under the Theocracy where God himself was the civil ruler, this right was not given to woman. Why not, if it be a natural right, a right bestowed by the Creator? Is it to be supposed that during the Theocracy God denied to his creatures the exercise of those rights which He had given, and which they had not forfeited? No respectable writer upon the science of civil government can be found who holds that this is a natural right. Even John Stuart Mill, whose argument upon this subject has been laid on our tables, does not pretend that it is a natural right, or an absolute right, but distinctly affirms the contrary, and puts his argument on the ground of expediency. Civil government, as I understand it, is simply the instrument or power by which society governs and regulates the conduct of its members. The right to take part in government is, according to the most approved authorities, a political right. In the very able argument presented by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], he regards it not as a political right, but as a franchise, or privilege. It is not, in my judgment, a matter of much importance, whether it be classed as a right or a privilege; but I find some of the most approved writers upon the science of government who denominate it a political right. They mean a right, or privilege if you please, which society, in the formation of its organic law, leaves with, or grants to, certain portions of its citizens. There is a certain end which society has to secure, to wit: the highest good of the individual as a member of society, and in doing that it may adopt such rules as are necessary and proper. The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] passed some criticisms upon the unstudied remarks which I had the honor to submit a few days ago. He said that if I derived the right of the colored man to participate in the administration of government from the statement in the Declaration of Independence that "all men are created free and equal" I must apply it equally to the women, because women are included in the generic term, "all men." I conceded that women are included in that generic term, but cannot admit the gentleman's inference. This enunciation in our Declaration, implies the same natural rights, and equality before the law. It requires that no unjust or invidious distinction be made in government. It demands the same right and privileges for the colored man that belong to the white man, other things being equal. But, sir, it does not ignore natural distinctions, nor does it involve, necessarily, an identity of sphere or sameness of functions. There may be, and there are reasons why man should participate in government, and woman should not, which do not imply inequality in the sense of the Declaration of Independence. We demand suffrage for colored men because they are men, and exclude women because they are women, and this is not incompatible with equality before the law as enunciated in the Declaration of Independence. Now, if this be a correct position, then it follows that society may exclude persons and classes from participation in the administration of government for good cause, and the question arises, what is good cause? What rule shall we lay down to guide us on this subject? It is difficult, sometimes, to ascertain the correct rule of action in this matter. The best analysis of this question that I have found, is contained in the chapter upon civil government in the Moral Science of President Hopkins, one of the ablest minds in the nation. He lays down, in substance, these rules: First, we may exclude classes and persons from participation in the administration of government, who are hostile to the welfare of society. This would exclude criminals, factions, and races known to be hostile to society.

Mr. RATHBUN—And rebels.

Mr. SMITH—And rebels, as the gentleman suggests. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SMITH—The second ground of exclusion is incompetency to understand and promote the ends of society. Under this rule we exclude minors and foreigners. It is true that there are some minors at the age of eighteen, and perhaps younger, who understand as much of our government as many who have the privilege of voting. But where the right is not absolute, society must fix the best average limit it can. Like all general rules, it is possible that this may, in some cases, operate arbitrarily and unjustly. The third rule laid down is this: Where there are such relations established by God that one portion of the community cannot take part in the administration of government without injury to the ends of society, then that portion may be excluded. It is under this rule that we exclude women. And, it will be perceived, that it is not upon the ground of hostility to government, nor upon the ground of incompetency to understand the interests of society that she is excluded. It is not upon the ground of inferiority, or inequality before the law, but upon the ground that God, in the creation of man, has made certain fundamental distinctions, whereby if one portion of the community is permitted to participate in government, it would not tend to promote the best interests of society, but on the contrary, would necessarily tend to its injury. Sir, that it is proper to exclude women under this rule, appears to me obvious from several considerations. First, it appears from a universal sentiment of humanity. It is universally felt to be improper for women to participate in government. It may be said that this is a mere prejudice, which has come down to us from former generations; but it seems to me, sir, that the sentiment is so general, so common to all ages and all countries, that we must conclude that it is implanted by God; and it is never safe to violate a true instinct of humanity. It appears, secondly, from the constitution of woman, physically, mentally and morally—

Mr. KINNEY—May I be permitted to ask a question? I would like to inquire if there is not a more distinctive and clearly marked prejudice in the public mind against allowing negroes to take part in the government than there is against women?

Mr. SMITH—Not at all. You go to England and the prejudice which exists against color in this country is not found there; it is confined to our country entirely, and grows out of the degradation of that class caused by the wrongs to which it has been subjected here. It is a wicked, unworthy and mean prejudice, which does not prevail in England. Fred. Douglass, whom you would exclude from voting in this State, if in England, would be treated with as much respect as any gentleman who might visit that country.

Mr. KINNEY—I ask if it is not also a contemptible and mean prejudice which we have against women's voting, and equally to be condemned?

Mr. SMITH—I will answer that. I claim that I have as high a respect for woman as any man, and think I have given some evidence of it in my time. It is because I respect her character, because I would keep her where she is in her sphere of power and influence, that I do not wish to give her the privilege of voting, and thus drag her down from her high position. I was about to say, when interrupted, or had said, that another reason for excluding woman is on account of the difference, physical, mental and moral, between man and woman, indicating clearly that they were designed for different spheres. My third reason is found in Revelation, which teaches the headship of man, both in relation to woman and to the family. I know that some of these modern women's-rights men, as they are called, and women's-rights women, have but very little respect, apparently, for the Bible. They talk about it flippantly, and cast aside, as matters of very little consequence, the rules and principles which are clearly enunciated in the sacred oracles. But I trust it will be a long time before we shall cease to regard that book as the foundation of our free government, and the only safe rule of our faith and practice. If man is the divinely appointed head in the family, which is woman's special sphere, why not in the State, for whose broad and rugged duties woman is unfitted? Here, as always, nature and Revelation agree. While woman is physiologically and psychologically unfitted for these duties, she is adapted to the sphere for which God designed her, and which, though different, is not inferior to that of man. It is never wise or safe to disturb the divinely arranged machinery of society. The Bible also clearly indicates the unity of the family; and I believe in the doctrine of the gentleman, who addressed the committee the other night, from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that in society and in the administration of its affairs, the family is a unit, the father and husband being the head and representative. I believe that to be the doctrine of the Bible, the doctrine of common sense, and the only safe rule of action. Again, I infer the propriety of her exclusion, from the consequences that would result from disturbing the divine arrangement. In my judgment, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, the result would be the destruction of the family! The family—the nursery of civilization, of patriotism and of piety; that little sanctuary of domestic bliss where the mother is the presiding angel; the thought of which sweetens the toil of the laborer, sustains the business man in his round of toil, enables the statesman to bear the load of cares that press upon him, comforts the heart of the sailor upon the ocean wave, cheers the soldier on the tented field, and nerves his arm to deeds of valor in the deadly strife. Who can estimate the power of a mother's love as it operates on the man in after life, when he goes out among the temptations, the strifes and cares of the world? That mother's love—its memory echoes through all the chambers of the soul like angel voices; its divine influence is an enduring talisman; its sweet fragrance is a holy charm. We have experienced it, we know it, and feel it—

“My mother's voice, how oft doth creep
Its cadence o'er my lonely hours,
Like healing scent on wings of sleep,
Or dew to the unconscious flowers.
I can't forget her melting prayer,
E'en when my pulses madly fly,
As in the still unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by;
And years, and sin, and manhood flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee.”

Not the brawling, brazen politician, but the gentle, loving, tender, faithful mother, who watched over our childhood in the sanctuary of home. Change her, transfer her to another sphere, and you have no such mother, you have robbed her of her influence, bereft her of her power, and blotted out that home forever! It is said by gentlemen that merely allowing women to vote would not produce such a result, but the advocates of this measure claim that they shall have not only the right to vote, but the right to hold office; that they shall be equal with men and participate in all the affairs of government; that they shall enter the learned professions, go to the field of battle, sit upon juries, and in short, that they shall enjoy all the privileges, and perform all the functions of men in the administration of government. George Washington, and many of the best men that the world has ever seen, have attributed their success in life to the influence of home and a mother's tender care; and if that home were destroyed what could compensate for the loss? There is another matter bearing upon this question, to which I will simply allude in this connection. There is a great and growing evil in American society which has awakened the serious consideration of many amongst us, and attracted the attention of distinguished foreigners who have visited our country. I allude to the growing disinclination on the part of married women to the holy office of maternity. It is true, our population is increasing, but the increase is mainly through the influx of foreigners. If women were permitted to participate in government, and should devote themselves to the duties and functions hitherto exercised by men, it would inevitably result in an aggravation of this serious evil. I insist, sir, that it does not follow because woman's sphere is different from man's, that therefore it is lower. It is a false assumption that woman is degraded by an exclusion from the elective franchise. It is not a degradation unless she is entitled to the right, and excluded upon grounds derogatory to her character. You must first show that she is entitled to the right, before you can predicate degradation upon a deprivation of it. I insist upon it, that in her present high sphere, she has a power and influence that she would not and could not have if transferred to another sphere for which she has no adaptation. It is a mistake to suppose that the most noisy and demonstrative agency is the most powerful. The thunderbolt that goes crashing through the sky, followed by deafening peals, is powerful, but no more so than the silent forces of nature that unlock the fetters of winter, liberate the juices of the plants and send them through every vein, vivifying the whole, and causing leaf, and bud, and blossom to come forth, and clothe the earth with beauty, the fields with verdure, and fill the husbandman's barn with plenty. But it is said that woman is taxed and therefore she should have representation, that taxation and representation cannot be rightfully severed. This position is specious, but not sound. To every general rule adopted by society for its government, there will always be some exceptions, and the few widows and unmarried ladies who are taxed are exceptional cases. If the rule admits of no limitations or exceptions, then we must apply it to foreigners and minors. Their property is taxed, and they have no direct representation, but they have the protection of government for which their tax may be regarded as an equivalent. But, sir, if the rule is inflexible, admitting of no departure from it, then I would say give up the taxation. If it is not right to tax women when they have not the privilege of voting, then refrain from taxing them. Better by far lose the little revenue derived from that source, than to turn society into chaos. I object also to this measure, and the mode in which its claims are urged, because it assumes that there is an antagonism between the sexes. Mrs. Stanton, who addressed the Convention the other evening, said that if women had had the exclusive right of legislation as long as men, they would have legislated man into a nut shell before this time. Antagonism between the sexes? What! Man opposed to the right of woman! Who are the women? They are, sir, our mothers, our sisters, our wives and our daughters. The idea is preposterous that there is any antagonism between their interests and ours, or that we could wish to deny them any rights to which they are entitled. This is a mischievous assumption, because it tends to produce the very state of affairs which is falsely assumed to exist, and greatly to be deprecated. Again, sir, there seems to be a disposition on the part of the advocates of this measure, and also of those who are opposed to colored suffrage, to link the two things together. This I hold to be illogical, disingenuous, and injurious to the colored race. It is illogical because the questions have no connection with each other; the distinction depends upon sex and not upon color. We claim the right of suffrage for colored men because they are men, the same measure of political rights for black as for white, under the principles of our government and the Declaration of Independence; but we object to women, both white and black, participating in government because they are women. The assumption is disingenuous on the part of its advocates, because they consciously place the claim on a false basis, and selfishly make use of the prejudices against color to advance their own interests; and besides, it invites partisanship into this field from which it should be entirely excluded. It is unjust to the colored race because it embarrasses the question of their enfranchisement with another foreign to it, and prejudicial to its success. It is said that there are many evils existing in society that would be corrected by giving woman the ballot. It is claimed that woman at present does not enjoy the rights and privileges to which she is entitled—that she has not the same privileges in schools, that she does not receive proper compensation for her labor, and that in many other respects she is subject to disabilities and invidious distinctions. Now, sir, it may be true that all these evils exist, but it is simply a bald assumption that the ballot in the hands of woman would cure them. It is a convenient mode of argument, to state the evils, and then quietly assume that female suffrage is a remedy, but not very satisfactory or conclusive. I take issue upon this assumption, and deny that the proposed remedy would cure, or even mitigate the evils complained of. On the contrary, it would rather aggravate them, and introduce others of a more serious character. The change would tend to degrade woman rather than to elevate her. Now, the fact that we have given woman the right to hold property, that we have changed our laws for her benefit; that she has had everything which she has demanded, shows conclusively that there is no desire on the part of man to deprive woman of her rights. Said an intelligent lady of this city not long since, "I do not wish to possess this privilege; because, if it is given to women I shall be compelled to go to the polls to vote, in order to protect myself and society from the influence and vote of that abandoned class of women who infest our cities."

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think the ballot would equalize the rates of wages between males and females; if conferring the ballot upon females would not tend to equalize the wages of the two classes.

Mr. SMITH—Mr. Chairman, I do not see how; if there is an inequality, go to the Legislature; show that inequality, and if it is in the power of the Legislature they will grant relief. They never have refused relief when it was demanded.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—I ask do they have the same amount for their labor as males.

Mr. SMITH—Whether they do, sir, or do not, I cannot see how it affects this question; but it is suggested by some gentlemen around me, and it may be true, that they get as much for their services in proportion to the value as men. I do not pretend to say how that may be, but I do say that if there is any injustice in this respect, that it may be remedied under the present order of things. There will be no disposition on the part of the husbands, and brothers, and sons, to deny to the women their rights in this regard.

Mr. BICKFORD—Does the gentleman deem it right to remedy by act of the Legislature the wages for labor? He would seem to be understood as saying that he deems it right for the Legislature to pass an act fixing the wages of labor. It cannot be regulated in any such way, it seems to me.

Mr. SMITH—Mr. Chairman, I made that suggestion in answer to the argument which is made by the friends of this measure. They complain that there is an inequality in wages, and say the ballot in the hands of woman would afford a remedy. Now I say, if the ballot is a remedy, it must operate through legislation. It was upon that assumption I made the suggestion to which the gentleman takes exception. I do not undertake to say whether or not the Legislature has power to regulate wages. If they have not, in what way are you going to remedy that difficulty by the use of the ballot?

Mr. BICKFORD—The only way is for women to take hold and do a man's work.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. MILLER—I do not wish to raise the point of order here, but I think we are acting upon a resolution that limits the speeches to twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that no such resolution has passed.

SEVERAL MEMBERS—Yes, there has.

The CHAIRMAN—Does the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller], raise the point of order?

Mr. MILLER—I do not, against the gentleman now speaking, but I object to his being interrupted, and thus prolonging his speech.

Mr. SMITH—I am about through, but I gave time to allow questions to be asked, and suppose that is not to be taken out of my time. I was about to say, that these degraded women of New York, and other cities, would invariably go to the polls, every one of them; and could the refined and virtuous women of our cities be induced to mingle with them? If not, then the vicious and degraded element would be introduced into our politics, with no counteracting influence to control it. Now, sir, I deny that woman is not represented, and insist that she has more influence now upon the formation of our laws, than she would have if permitted a vote. It is a mistake to suppose that voting, or rather participating in government, consists merely in taking a piece of paper in your fingers and dropping it into the ballot-box. The person who influences the vote, who gives tone and character to society, does more toward controlling our elections, and fixing the character of our laws, than does the person who simply drops his ballot into the ballot-box.

Mr. FOLGER—Does the gentleman contend that clergymen and teachers, who are also engaged in influencing minds and fixing the character of our laws, should for that reason not have a vote?

Mr. SMITH—Certainly they form character, but their right to vote rests on another ground. The reason I would not deny clergymen and teachers that right, is because they are men. The other distinction does not come in there.

Mr. FOLGER—You have put it on the distinction that women were forming character.

Mr. SMITH—The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. WALES—Does the gentleman propose to go back—

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Sullivan [Mr. Wales] is out of order.

Mr. SMITH—The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], misunderstood me. I was answering the argument that they are not represented. Women claim that they are excluded from all participation in the government. I answer that they do, by the influence they exercise upon the voter, upon the youth committed to their care, their influence upon their brothers, fathers, husbands, and generally, by the influence they exercise upon society, exert a greater influence than they would if dragged down to the lower sphere of direct participation in politics, and permitted to drop their ballot into the box. The gentleman [Mr. Folger] suggests that we might upon the same principle deny the franchise to clergyman and teachers. I say not, because they belong to the other class, they are men.

Mr. FOLGER—Does it not all come back to the distinction that one is a man and the other is a woman? Is not that the sole distinction you make?

Mr. SMITH—That is the distinction; and it is a distinction that is very difficult to get over. [Laughter].

Mr. FOLGER—It is not a distinction that I wish to get over. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH—Until the gentleman can obliterate that distinction, and reverse the laws which God has made and impressed upon humanity, he never can get over that distinction. Women are adapted to one sphere and man to another.

Mr. KINNEY—May I ask if the distinction between the sexes creates any difference in their natural rights?

Mr. SMITH—Not in natural rights.

Mr. KINNEY—I ask if the right of self-government is not a natural right?

Mr. SMITH—I will answer the gentleman by saying that the right of voting is not a natural right. If it were, I would be in favor of giving it to women. I understand it to be a political right. You must draw a line somewhere. Would the gentleman allow every one to vote? I have attempted to show, briefly, where the line should be drawn. As I said in the outset, I did not intend to make an elaborate argument, but simply to present a few points. If there were time, I should be glad to elaborate them, and perhaps I might be able to elucidate the matter more clearly than I have been able to do in this hurried and desultory discussion. With these remarks I yield the floor.

Mr. HAND—I expect to vote against the pending amendment. As the gentleman from Filton [Mr. Smith] has said, I desire within my twenty minutes to give some of my reasons. But first, my reason is not because woman has not the natural capacity to judge of the fitness of the form of government under which she lives, and to which she is subjected; my objection is not that she has not all the natural rights that man has—the right of protection—that she has not every interest in society that man has. I do not regard her as an inferior. The question has very often come up in society, and has been discussed very learnedly among men, as to whether she is inferior to man. I think she is; and I think also that man is inferior to woman. Each sex has the qualities pertaining to that sex, and in the qualities pertaining to woman, she is vastly the superior of man, while in those qualities pertaining to man, he is vastly her superior. Nature in creation, among the lower animals as well as with man has pointed out the governing power in man; and no created female except woman has ever attempted to assume that power. The male sex exercises that power throughout creation. What is the ballot? There is a great deal of sophistry connected with that question. It is asked "will the mother neglect the solemn duties belonging to her just by going to the poll and dropping in the ballot?" Now any gentleman of sense who uses that argument knows it is sophistry.

Mr. FOLGER—I would call the attention of the gentleman [Mr. Hand], to the queen bee as forming an exception to the rule he states, and ask him if he supposes that the male bee rules the hive?

Mr. HAND—I do not know any thing about that—it is down so low in the scale of creation. I have never looked into their polity and cannot say what office the queen bee has. It is a matter of conjecture. But where the animals are large enough for us to watch them and understand their relations, there is no doubt. Even in the case of the domestic fowl, where there is, perhaps, twenty or thirty of one sex to one of the other, the females flee to the male for protection when danger comes around, and they then when under his protection never talk about being oppressed or assuming the rights that belong to the male. If the simple dropping of a ballot were all that is claimed for woman, that would be a very simple thing. A woman could perform that duty without neglecting her domestic duties, and without neglecting her children or husband. But when we object to her assuming political power because it is incompatible with domestic duties, we are met with a sneer, never with an argument. They say "does not a mother's love force her to care for those to whom she is bound by such ties?" Do you suppose she has, by simply becoming a voter, lost her womanhood? Has she ceased to be a mother? Now this is all sophistical. Merely dropping the piece of paper in the box is not all that is implied in voting; that is simply the expression of power, but the ultimatum of power is the sword—it is the shedding of blood, and therefore I very properly asked the question in my seat, as an outsider was discussing this question, whether women would assume that duty, whether she would submit to the draft, whether she would go to the tented field and risk her life in the time of her country's peril. The speaker saw the logic of the suggestion, and said she would.

"There is a power comes down as still
As snow flakes fall upon the sod,
Yet executes a freeman's will
As lightning does the will of God;
And from its power no bars nor locks
Can shield us—'Tis the ballot-box."

There is a mighty power in the ballot, and the ultimatum of that power is in the sword, and all the intermediate steps are so many steps to power. The woman, in dropping the ballot, assumes to exercise all the conditions belonging to government, to fill all the places of power. She has no right to drop that ballot, which is the expression of the freeman's power, and gives her the right to vote except on the ground that these other relations belong to her, that she has the right to sit on the judgment-seat and on juries, and the right to assume all the responsibilities and action belonging to men.

Mr. KINNEY — I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If he thinks the performance of military duties should necessarily go with the right to vote?

Mr. HAND — Yes.

Mr. KINNEY — Then why do you compel persons under the age of twenty-one to go to the tented field, and do not give them the right to vote; and yet you allow gentlemen to vote who are over forty-five years of age, but do not compel them to go to the field.

Mr. HAND — We have to fix the time of holding political office and exercising political rights, by some authority, and at some period of time, and we simply sometimes begin a little sooner by putting responsibility upon the young men, and this, like all other arrangements of government, depends upon the great interests of society. But some gentlemen want to know if there is not a foolish prejudice against women? A prejudice against women! Only think of it, when you can hardly keep the two sexes apart after they get to be fifteen years old. Talk about a prejudice against women! That is most delightful! I would like to find the man who ever felt prejudice against women, or who was ever actuated by it for one single hour of his life. But the reason why the negro is denied the right of suffrage, is because of a foolish and mean prejudice; we say he is as mean and disagreeable and personally disgusting as a skunk and therefore we do not want him in our midst. That is the feeling against him; that is the feeling that the democrats nurse and cherish for the purpose of excluding him from the franchise. It is nothing but a foolish and personal prejudice. But there is no such reason for the exclusion of women. I wish to exclude woman by law from exercising political power, and from exercising all those duties and responsibilities belonging to the bustle of political life; because I esteem her so highly; because my remembrances of her are so tender; because all my relations with her in life leave in my memory the recollections of her as one who is dear to me; because of the remembrances of my mother, a mother, not as a political power, but a mother who knew her place in the family circle, a mother who trained her children so carefully, who so patiently watched all their earliest expressions of unfolding character, who so carefully prepared the bed every night, warmly protecting us from the inclemency of the season, who saw that we were fitted for the school-house and were found in our places there, and watched us so tenderly—who can forget such a mother; not sitting in the judicial seat, not in the army fighting, with the arms of men; a mother not coarsely exercising those duties that belong only to man, in his coarse nature and organization, attending around the polls as an electioneerer and canvasser for votes. Not it; but a mother in the family circle, in the place where we claim she belongs, where alone she has the power and where she exerts such an influence over every one. Another memory of that mother, although a quarter of a century has hid her from my sight, comes back to me in my dreams, and she presses her hand once more upon my head.

Mr. KINNEY — I would like to ask the gentleman a question: if she would have been any the less a mother to him if she had had the right to vote?

Mr. HAND — Yes, sir.

Mr. KINNEY — Show wherein.

Mr. HAND — I will in due time. I want to be understood, that is not the only thing that is included in this theory of woman's rights. I say it is incompatible with the nature of her sex to perform these duties. I am going to treat this subject thoroughly—it may seem indelicate; it has been dragged in here and I cannot help it. Would it not be delightful suppose that Mrs. Such-a-one was a judge, and the time has come for the court to open; the witnesses are all present, the crier is anxiously waiting to give the proper and usual notice, lawyers are assembled from far and near with their cases, from perhaps twenty, fifty or an hundred miles around, but no judge appears. What is the matter? Mrs. Judge is not quite well, and the doctor says she must be kept very quiet for the next three months! [Laughter.] She is a pretty judge! She has assumed to sit upon the bench. She is also to sit upon juries—I suppose between these men—a lady, then a gentleman and then a lady. It is possible they might forget the duties they were called upon to perform, in those essential sympathies that a great many men feel (unless they are prejudiced against women) when they come into too close contiguity. But there they sit trying a case. In the midst of a case that has been going on perhaps a week or ten days consecutively—suddenly one of the jurors is absent; Mrs. Such-a-one is not there. Certain causes which occur to her sex occasionally have brought on a fit of hysteria, and she is not able to leave her bed. I do not wish to pursue this subject further, but I will leave your imaginations to follow it out through all the cases that may occur. I claim that these duties and responsibilities that belong to political government, are fit for and belong to man only, and woman's sexual peculiarities unfit her to perform them? I make that point. It is a substantive point, and one which no argument can get over.

Mr. KINNEY—I would like—

Mr. HALE—I rise to a point of order. We have passed a rule to limit gentlemen in debate to twenty minutes, and I protest against this continued interruption; its operation is to entirely defeat the operation of the rule, and the Chair cannot tell when a gentleman has occupied his twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN—The point of order is perfectly proper as a matter of taste. The Chair will endeavor to make the time of the interruption by the clock, so the gentleman who has the floor will have his proper time.

Mr. MERRITT—I think it would be well to insist, that when a gentleman permits himself to be interrupted in this way, it should be taken out of his time.

Mr. HAND—I don't wish to be discourteous to gentlemen who wish to propose questions, and if it is not to be counted in my time I am perfectly willing to reply to questions. My principal objection to their assuming this responsibility and going to the ballot-box and giving expression to authority, is, it is the commencement of power, the ultimatum of which is the tented field and the sword. There is where the law and there is where the government claims the fulfillment of the behest; there is where she authoritatively finishes up the work of government.

Mr. KINNEY—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question? What becomes of the court in case the judge himself becomes sick?

Mr. HAND—Those cases do not occur with men one time where they do a thousand times with the other sex.

Mr. KINNEY—I have known judges to be sick for months at a time.

Mr. HAND—I never knew such a case as I supposed to occur with a man. [Laughter.] The great interests involved in this case demand, although it may seem indelicate, that I should search this thing thoroughly, and I intend to do it. I respect the ladies very highly. I love them. I love to look upon the sweet face of a virtuous woman. I love to see her standing at her place in the family circle, with a new, clean gingham dress on, baking warm biscuits for tea. [Laughter.] It is the most delightful sight I ever looked upon in my life. [Renewed laughter.] Again, sir, the nature of the marriage relation, and the sacred obligations of that relation, are such, in my opinion, as to preclude women from the right of suffrage. Sir, the laws of that relation are old as history, although most of the persons who advocate woman suffrage, sneer at the Bible. We had sneers at it here the other night, from the place now occupied by the honorable Chairman. It was said that the rule "obey the King," and "servants obey you masters," was outlawed to-day and outgrown, and in time we should outgrow the law "wives obey your husbands." The law, "obey the King," is just as binding as it ever was. St. Paul elaborates that, and makes it plainer; it varies the terms, whether Kings or governors—it is obedience to the powers that be. "Servants obey you masters," while there were masters, was perfectly legitimate. If slavery existed to-day I would say to a discontented negro, "while you are a slave, and with this condition of bondage upon you, you should yield obedience to your master, it is better for you and for your master." This doctrine of "wives obey your husbands" is not and never will be outlawed. It is according to the institution of marriage as it was first established on the threshold of creation. God found it was not good for man to be alone, and he said I will make a help-meet for him. As long as woman holds that relation as a help-meet for man, all the blessings of married life, to herself, to her husband, and to her children, will flow out from that relation. It is only in a vicious state of society that we have all these evils, or at least nine-tenths of all the evils of which women complain. They come from that state of society which places women above labor, above care, above looking for anything except to be dressed up like a doll for every man to look at, and every woman, too, who may happen to come into her parlor, or associate with her at the fashionable party. It is that vicious state of society which takes away from women who do not act in their legitimate sphere all the blessings of married life.

Mr. MILLER—I must insist, Mr. Chairman, upon the enforcement of the rule, without any disrespect to the gentleman who is speaking.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] that, excluding interruptions, the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] has not yet spoken his full time.

Mr. MILLER—I think it is a mistake, that the interruptions are not to be taken out of the gentleman's time—

Mr. HAND—That is delightful for gentlemen to make speeches here and have it taken out of my time—

Mr. BARTO—I move, sir, that the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] be allowed to proceed. The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barto, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. HAND—In the beginning God saw it was not good for man to be alone and God said he would make a help-meet for him, and then the Bible goes on to tell how He made her. And Adam when he saw this woman felt very much as I do when I see a beautiful woman. He looked at her and said, "she is bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh." Let us look at the conditions of married life. Whenever these conditions are carried out in their purity, it has resulted only in blessings. The desire of the woman shall be to her husband. That is she shall look up to him as the great source, of her happiness, and he shall rule over her. There is the condition of marriage, as it was organized as a sacred institution. I know I shall be met with sneers from some gentlemen and some ladies who sneer at the Scriptures, and say it is all old-foggyism. But the marriage relation was instituted in this way, and with these conditions it has come down to us. It was so adopted by our New England fathers; and the object of these conditions is to preserve the purity, honor and independence of the sex, and to work effectively the machinery by which men can be raised and educated for citizenship and fitted for the duties of manhood. Our New England fathers probably lived up to this strict rule of the marriage relation, as it was originally instituted, as closely as any people have ever done in the world. And if a better race has ever come up from any training than has come from those New England fathers, I have yet to read its history. All the elements of character that ennoble our race, all the strength of character, all its purity and every quality that is desirable in man, we find in the descendants of that race, and yet they have sometimes been ridiculed because they so closely followed the letter of the scripture. In the marriage relation they followed it particularly closely. The husband may be a tyrant, but, if properly carried out, the institution will be a blessing to the woman. Any institution is subject to abuses whenever you allow one person to rule over another or over humanity. You will readily perceive that every institution must be subject to rules, and there is no other way in which to govern humanity. We all have to submit to order. They rule us here in the city of Albany. When we walk the streets we are subject to the police regulations. We meet a man with a star on his breast, and in a manner he is ruler over us. There is no such thing as having a civil organization without having rules. We are not even allowed to deliberate in this chamber without having a chairman who, for the time being, rules over us. And do we think these features are severe upon us? Do we murmur because a chairman rules over us? You cannot collect a dozen persons at a neighborhood meeting without electing a chairman. It is necessary for the order and arrangement of the meeting. This rule is limited, to be sure, according to the necessities of the case. Three or four hundred years ago, had I lived, I could pass through the county of Albany and shoot game at my pleasure, and could take fish in her streams without hindrance. But now, sir, on this ground we find a magnificent city. I am met everywhere by the law. I am told that I cannot shoot a bird out of season, even on my own farm, and in my own woods I cannot shoot a woodcock to-day, because the laws forbid it, on the ground that the public interest requires it should not be done. Is this rule oppression? If I walk through the streets of Albany, or ride in my carriage, the law says I must turn to the right, and I must obey this rule. If I should presume to put on my wife's dress and take a walk through the city, I should be arrested by a policeman, because I am disobeying the rule. The law presumes to control me in a matter of taste. I may not dress as I choose. I am saying this to illustrate how the rule operates upon us. On the Sabbath, the law provides that any unusual noise shall be restrained, and my business must be closed if it be noisy, so that men may go to the sanctuary and worship God in quiet. We do not chafe at this, and we do not complain of it. Why not? Because Albany gives us back more than she takes from us. I am safe in my person and in my property, and I have the liberty to worship God according to the dictates of my conscience quietly, and I am protected. So with the wife, the husband rules over her, and with this rule she receives the protection that belongs to the marriage relation, and all those interests dear to her; the protection of the honor of her children and her security while rearing them. She could not have it but for manhood—womanhood is protected, and she gets back more than she yields, in yielding to this rule of the husband. The city of Albany has no special tenderness towards us, it is simply an inflexible rule which is over us all alike; but the husband and wife are bound together by a tie so tender, and this rule sits so lightly on the women, it is no burden and the women do not feel it so, at least they never did feel it so until these perambulating women went about the country telling them how much they were abused.

Mr. BARTO—I understood the gentleman to state, in the opening of his speech, that he was superior to any women that ever lived.

Mr. HAND—Oh no, no, you misunderstood me and if I am put down so I wish to have it changed.

Mr. KINNEY—I think the gentleman stated substantially that—I so understood him.

SEVERAL MEMBERS—Oh, no.

Mr. HAND—Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. I am so much interrupted that I am thrown off the course of my argument. I was going on to say, sir, that the peculiar characteristics of woman fit her for her place. The one who made woman made also the marriage relation, and He knew what He was constructing. It is exactly the place for her; she is gentle, kind, affectionate, patient and sympathizing. she understands children, she loves them with a love of which no father can have any conception. Oh! how often has the mother of every one of us shielded us when the sternness of the father has seemed to eventuate in tyranny towards us; how often has the unbidden tear dropped for us; although she did not interfere by words, yet she would show where her heart was, and what was the nature of her sympathy. That is the office of woman—kindly, considerably, patiently and laboriously to carry out the sweet influences of home, and to produce an influence on her children, as long as those children live; an influence that never dies, though everything else may pass away. A man may be exposed to temptation, and may fall into sin, but whatever his condition in life, the memory of that mother, watching over his childhood slumbers comes back to him, with its influence and power, long after the man has entered into the relations of citizenship. Not only is the influence of the mother upon the child to be affected, by thus unsexing woman, and taking her out of the family circle and making her mingle in the coarser affairs of life, sitting in the jury box, upon the bench, and going into the battle-field, but it also interferes with the influence she exerts upon her husband himself. We were told by the gentleman who delivered that beautiful poem [Mr. Curtis], the melody of which still rings in my ears—that poem so rich in its cadences—that the power of women in our late national struggle was at least equal to that of man, which remark I will consider in due time. I had noticed for a number of days that in the corner around that gentleman's seat, there was a great fluttering of silks, laces and feathers, and it rather surprised me that they should all be found around there, to the cruel neglect of the more substantial personages in and about the regions of "Sleepy Hollow." But at length the whole thing was revealed, when that poem was delivered here. I have no doubt but that delightful poem will be bound in green and gold, and will be found on the center-tables of all his fair clients and will be regarded by this age, and by coming ages, as one of the most magnificent works of fiction of the day. There is another quality about the organization of the marriage relation: "Therefore the twain shall be one flesh." The great beauty and power and usefulness of the marriage relation consists in its oneness; it is a circle where there is but one interest. We go out into the world and meet with competition; hard-hearted men have designs upon us; there are competitors to us everywhere. There is nobody we can trust, we are fearfully suspicious of everybody in this hurly-burly of life; but there is a circle in which there is but one interest; established by the marriage relation. In that family circle, the husband with all his cares and expectations can come and pour into the willing ear of his partner everything that concerns him. If he have political aspirations he can confide them to her; if he hope to make successful operations in a pecuniary point of view, he can come there and confide them to her and she sympathizes with him. He does not find there a competitor, one who has her money and who keeps her property by itself, who demands from him pay for her labor, and if she sews a button on his coat, charges him three cents for it. [Laughter.] He does not come there and find a person who has property, and he has property, and they have separate interests, and make entries every night one against the other, and who can sue and be sued, one by the other. But where there is the pure marriage relation then the wife has the same interest with the husband; there is the beauty of it and its power over the husband and the children. There is no contention there, it is a place of peace. It is the only part of Paradise that has survived the fall. If he has political aspirations, if he is a candidate for office, he can give all the details of his preparations to his wife, she sympathizes with him, and she goes about among her neighbors and finds out what the public opinion may be in a manner that he could not do; for it is one of their peculiarities that they know what is going on, and keep an account of the doings outside, although they do live in the house. She is a great help to him, in the matter of ascertaining public opinion

—she is not a competitor, mind you! She is not a candidate for the same office herself; she does not belong to another party from him, and every word that he whispers to her go and convey it to the leaders of her own party. Do you not see how these two interests would break up the unity of that family relation, and break up all those sympathizing feelings and all that kindness and everything pertaining to that relation, and which now gives it its power? If gentlemen cannot see that, I see it very clearly. The great power of this family relation consists in its unity, and the relations existing between its members; in its evenness of purpose and oneness of interest, making it an impossibility for two interests to exist. But the moment this idea of separate interests comes to the domestic hearth, its influences are destroyed. I know it is claimed that a great deal has been done for woman within the last twenty years. I think not. I think that woman has been deteriorating ever since this question of their rights has been agitated. The statistics brought forward by my friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould], show that the number of female criminals has very much increased; that the numbers in all our jails have been largely increased within the last twenty years, since this thing has been agitated. I pledge myself, that if you pursue this investigation, you will find that the applications for divorces have increased ten-fold within the last twenty years. You have loosened the bonds of matrimonial life and thrown all this family influence away; you have broken up the family and made it to consist of two interests; and when you get them sufficiently divided, it will be like any other partnership, to be entered into and dissolved at pleasure; and then what will become of all our family relations? Who will then bring up the children, under all those precious influences of home, until they come up to manhood? You will have thrown two interests into the family, the man one and the woman the other, with all their interests divided one from the other, they will not have a single bond of unity, not a single thing in common, not a single matter upon which they can sympathize. I dwell upon these things, to show you that the whole marriage relation is destroyed and sacrificed and the marriage tie will be destroyed forever. It will be simply a partnership. The man and woman will live together as long as it will suit their convenience; and then when the woman charges a little more for her labor than he likes, he says: I can go down street and get another woman who will work cheaper; and so he will go and take in the other woman. That is precisely the practical working of the thing.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — Will the gentleman give way for one moment.

Mr. HAND — Certainly, if I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. M. I. Townsend, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the President pro tem. resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALWORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and to ask leave to sit again.

The question was put upon granting leave to sit again, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL moved that the Convention do now adjourn.

Which was lost.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I move that the Convention take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention took a recess until half-past seven.

— — — EVENING SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. KINNEY asked leave of absence for himself for two days.

There being no objection thereto, leave was granted.

Mr. GOULD asked leave of absence for Mr. Huntington until Thursday next.

There being no objection thereto, leave was granted.

Mr. MERRITT asked leave of absence for Mr. L. W. Russell, until Saturday evening, on account of sickness in his family.

There being no objection, leave of absence was granted.

Mr. GOULD asked leave of absence for Mr. Cochran, until Wednesday morning.

Mr. BICKFORD — I shall object, Mr. President, to the granting of leave of absence, unless some reasons are given.

Mr. GOULD — The reason why I ask for leave of absence for Mr. Cochran is that he has not been absent from the Convention a day since our session commenced, and it is absolutely necessary for the transaction of some private business that he should be absent until Wednesday morning.

The objection being withdrawn, leave of absence was granted.

The Convention resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

The CHAIR announced the pending question to be on the amendment of Mr. Curtis to the amendment offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight to the report of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN — The gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] is entitled to the floor, but as he is not present, what is the further pleasure of the committee?

Mr. BICKFORD — The question of suffrage for the women of the State is regarded by some in a ludicrous light, it seeming to them too absurd to be seriously entertained. I look upon it as a serious question. It is seriously proposed, and has been gravely and ably advocated in this Convention. It is advocated elsewhere with great persistence, to say the least. It must be met in some way; and, in my opinion, it should be met, not by ridicule, but by fair and legitimate argument. And as I am opposed to female suffrage, both on principle and for reasons of expediency, I would hope that the arguments against it might be of such force, and so convincing, as to set the question at rest, not only now but for all the future. And I purpose, according to my limited ability, to meet the question in the manner I have suggested. For one, Mr. Chairman, I believe in the christian religion. I believe that the Bible contains the word of God. I hope this avowal will not be considered out of place in a dignified Convention of the people of this State. In that apostolic doctrine which is pre-eminently the standard of the christian faith, and which furnishes the principles by which the christian should order his life, I find duties enjoined for persons in all circumstances and relations. I find that the marriage relation, as instituted by the Creator himself in the garden of Eden, is recognized and enforced by the Redeemer of mankind and by his apostles. That a man should leave father and mother and cleave to his wife (by which I understand that he should himself become the head of a family) and that the twain should be one flesh, having united and identical interests, is a part of the christian religion, though in force from the beginning of the race. While children are enjoined to obey their parents, the husband is expressly declared to be the "head of the wife" and the wife is expressly required to obey and reverence her husband. To every reflecting mind it is apparent that there must be subordination in the family, and that one or the other of the parents must be at its head. There are cases where the wife rules the husband, but every man who is thus ruled is an object of just contempt, and the wife who thus rules is justly regarded as an odious anomaly. The teachings of nature and of revelation are in harmony on this point. Adam was first formed, then Eve as a suitable help. While Adam took the lead in their joint affairs, the law of God was kept, and the pair maintained their primeval innocence and happiness. But when Eve took the lead, then came disobedience, sin, death and ruin. "Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression."

It has pained me to hear this cause of female suffrage advocated on principles hostile to the word of God. A talented lady, speaking in behalf of the cause she has so much at heart, saw fit to say in this hall, not long since, in substance, that as we, in this day, had got the better of "servants obey your masters," so she hoped we might soon get the better of "wives obey your husbands." When we do get the better of that salutary commandment, we shall probably, also, get the better of another commandment, which says, "husbands, love your wives." The abrogation of the last will quite likely follow the disregard of the first. It is as much the duty of servants to obey their masters now as it ever was. There is no living in civilized society, unless servants are taught to obey their masters, and feel it their duty to do so. But that a servant is necessarily a slave I deny. So I deny that it makes a wife a slave to obey her husband.

When the husband loves his wife, as he is likely to do if she behaves herself amiably in the spirit in which Sarah obeyed her lord, her obedience is not servitude. It becomes a cheerful and ready compliance with what is for the mutual honor and benefit of both husband and wife. At present it may be convenient to ignore the commands, "servants obey your masters," and "wives obey your husbands." How soon it may be convenient to do away "children obey your parents" and "husbands love your wives," I do not know. But I feel warranted in saying that the cause which cannot be advocated without putting aside the word of God is a cause which should not commend itself to christian men and women. I sincerely believe that to confer the elective franchise on all the women of the State, will sap the very foundations of civil society, and cause more evil than even our republican institutions have caused good, much as I value them. We might admit a few, for instance, such unmarried women and widows as are taxed to any considerable extent. But where there is no property qualification and the suffrage is nearly universal, except as to those deemed too young, the evils that would ensue are palpable and appalling. The unerring instinct of both sexes is against it, reason is against it, and the experience of mankind is against it. The advocates of female suffrage rely much upon the statement in the Declaration of Independence, that "governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed." But this really affords them no aid. The fathers, in adopting the declaration, had no reference to the question of suffrage whatever. "The governed," according to their intent and meaning, were governed States, nationalities, countries, colonies or provinces, not individuals. Their point was, that the king of Great Britain had no longer a right to rule in these colonies, because the colonies no longer consented to be governed by him. They were justifying their action in changing their form of government and forsaking their former allegiance to the British crown. Hence they recounted the tyrannous acts of their former king, and formally withdrew the assent of the colonies they represented to be any longer under his government. But they said not a word in the declaration about the proper distribution of political power among the people — not a word as to the proper persons to be intrusted with the elective franchise. But they and their contemporaries did act on the question of the franchise, and how? They were very far, indeed, from making it universal. In general they confided it only to adult, property-holding male citizens. In general it was denied to females, to minors, to colored men, to men destitute of property, and to aliens. If a State contained say 400,000 inhabitants, and if of these twenty thousand enjoyed the elective franchise, and eleven of the twenty thousand united in the choice of rulers, or in the form of the government, they considered their condition as to the "consent of the governed" as amply fulfilled. It was the consent of the governed state, given by a majority of its ruling class, that they were after, and were talking about. It was the public will, expressed according to the usual forms, and by the persons empowered to express that will, that satisfied all their conditions. The advocates of female suffrage, therefore, derive no real aid from the Declaration of Independence. It is a false application of the statement, a total misapprehension of its real import, which makes it give any seeming support to their claim. They also quote the often expressed sentiment of our Revolutionary fathers, that "taxation without representation is tyranny," and their argument is this: The women are not represented because they do not vote; but they are taxed; and, therefore, they say, a government which does not allow them to vote is a tyrannous one, and consequently wrongful. But neither in this matter had the fathers any reference to the question of suffrage. Their point was, that any province, district, colony or State not represented in the British Parliament could not be rightfully taxed by the Parliament. The colonies, said they, are not thus represented, and, therefore, for the British Parliament to tax them is tyranny. They illustrated their idea by a picture, in which John Bull, looking at his sovereign, King George, and pointing at the same time to a Yankee representing the colonies, says: "I gave you that man's money for my use." And to this the Yankee replies, "I'll not be robbed." They called it robbery for the British Parliament to give to the king, for the use of Englishmen, the money of the colonists who had no voice whatever in Parliament. But they did not consider it tyranny for Parliament to lay a tax on Yorkshire or on the city of London, though none of the women voted in either place, and not a fifth of the adult men. These places, as places, were represented, and so were the people who inhabited them, according to the meaning of the fathers, although the voting portion of the population was very small. Reference is made by the advocates of female suffrage to female rulers, particularly to Queen Victoria and to Queen Elizabeth. There have been four female sovereigns who have ruled England — Mary, Elizabeth, Anne and Victoria. Mary's reign was chiefly distinguished by a cruel religious persecution, which gave her the well-earned title of "Bloody Mary." Elizabeth was a woman of vigorous mind, which enabled her to rule with great success, though she was much aided by the many wise and virtuous statesmen who flourished in her court. Nevertheless she was a most merciless, capricious and unjust tyrant. Witness her conduct towards her cousin, the Queen of Scots. Is Elizabeth's conduct on that occasion calculated to exhibit in a favorable light her sense of justice, her hospitality, or her mercy? Besides being unjust and unmerciful as a sovereign, she was odious as a woman, as incorrigible old maids intrusted with property and power generally are. [Laughter.] Queen Anne's reign was distinguished by brilliant national success. Yet she was a stupid, self-willed and bigoted woman. The great Duke of Marlborough, who ruled the weak-minded queen through his wife, who had a strange control over her, threw a halo of resplendent glory over her reign; for it was he who, combining his efforts with wise statesmen on the continent, at length humbled the pride of Louis XIV. Victoria, the present queen, is an amiable and excellent woman. But it has never been claimed that she was a woman of superior intellect or capacity. Her influence on public affairs is almost nothing. Great Britain is really governed, as everybody knows, by the talented statesmen who, by their combinations, are able to command a majority in the House of Commons. If the Queen were totally insane and imbecile, as was her grandfather in the latter years of his life, the government of her kingdom would proceed very much as it does now. There have been other female sovereigns, and some of them, as Smiramis and Catherine II, of great administrative talent. But these women were a scandal to their sex, and tyrants of the most odious description. Spain has now a reigning queen. I believe it is not claimed that her reign reflects any honor upon herself or on her country. Certainly it is about as bad as any possible reign for her people. It is contemplated by the advocates of female suffrage, that if women vote, they are to hold office and sit on juries. They will aspire also to the bench of justice. And in this view it becomes proper to inquire whether women are likely to be good legislators, judges and jurymen. I will not speak of their mingling indiscriminately with men in the halls of legislation; nor of six married ladies being shut up as jurors "in some private and convenient place," with six men who are not their husbands, and of the constable's key being turned on them until they shall be able to agree. [Laughter].

At this point in the remarks of Mr. Bickford, the gavel fell, twenty minutes having expired.

Mr. SILVESTER—I hope that unanimous consent will be given for the gentleman [Mr. Bickford] to finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair does not see how it can contravene a rule of the Convention.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I understand that the same rule prevails in the Committee of the Whole, that prevails in the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair so understands it.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose that the rule might be extended in committee by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is not of that opinion. The rule can only be extended by authority of the Convention.

Mr. BICKFORD—May I not proceed with my remarks, by unanimous consent of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN—If there is no other gentleman that desires to speak, the Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman may proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOLGER—I do not object to the gentleman from Jefferson proceeding, provided it would not form a precedent for every gentleman to overstep the limits of the time fixed.

Mr. HAND—I suppose that the ruling will not interfere with my continuing my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] having given way for a recess, and not being here on the re-assembling of the Convention, and when it again went into the Committee of the Whole, the Chair holds that the same rule must apply to that gentleman as to others.

Mr. KINNEY—Will it be in order to move to allow the gentleman [Mr. Bickford] to have the remainder of his speech printed?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that no such rule obtains in the Convention.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that if I have the floor, I can have the privilege of according a portion of my twenty minutes to the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford]?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman cannot occupy his time except by his own remarks, and that he cannot transfer his rights to another.

Mr. SPENCER—I desire, for a few moments, to address the committee on the subject now before it—

Mr. HAND—I would like to ask the Chair whether I can make a second speech on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman [Mr. Hand] cannot, under the rule.

Mr. HAND—Can I not by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN—If there is unanimous consent given, and no other gentleman desires to speak. The gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer], has the floor.

Mr. SPENCER—I am not among the number of those, sir, who believe that this subject is by any means yet exhausted, and I have observed with great pleasure, that during the more recent parts of the discussion upon this subject, there has evidently been given to it a much greater degree of study, and the opinions of gentlemen have been expressed with a far greater degree of care than appeared to have been bestowed during the earlier part of the discussion. I do not know, indeed, that I shall be able myself to submit to the committee any new idea upon the subject, but it is perhaps possible that I may present my ideas in such a light as shall enable some members of the committee to come to a more just conclusion, if these ideas shall receive a due consideration. This subject, sir, is one of the most important that can come before the Convention, if not the most important. The question of suffrage is one which lies at the very foundation of the government, and, as that shall be determined, may depend the permanency and the stability of the government of this State during a long period of time, if not during all time, and may depend also the happiness of those whose fortune it may be to live under it. There have been several theories advanced here as to the true ground upon which suffrage may be exercised. Among these it has been alleged, in the first place, that the right of suffrage is a natural right which belongs inherently to every person under all circumstances. Another theory is that although it may not be among the inherent natural rights which attach to a person as an existent being, it nevertheless attaches to every person when he becomes a member of civil society. and that, as a member of civil society, he has the right, independently of any power which may be conferred upon him, to vote. There is another theory still: that civil society, when organized, has the power arbitrarily to confer upon any member of the State, the right to the exercise of suffrage, or to withhold the same at pleasure. Now, sir, among these conflicting views, all of which have been advanced here, which is the true and correct one? And perhaps it may be said that it is neither, but that the true ground and theory upon which the right of suffrage may be exercised lies in some medium between all three of these. And to determine what is the true rule and true principle upon which suffrage should be exercised, or upon which the right of it should be conferred, it is perhaps proper to consider for a moment the nature of the government under which we live. Sir, it is a representative government. It is not a democracy where the people in their original right exercise the power of making the laws and of administering the government. Neither is its character such that the people delegate to mere agents and mere servants the power of making the laws; but the true principle of the government is that the people confer upon certain instruments the power to exercise the functions of government precisely in the same manner as the absolute monarchies of the old world, and these instruments, whenever they are selected, perform the functions of the government with an absolute power, as any other government; but the instruments who are to exercise the supreme power of the State are selected from time to time, and the period of their exercise of power is limited, under our form of government, and, therefore, it is that, from time to time, the electors of the State, those who may be invested with that power, select from among their number those who shall, during specified periods, perform all the functions of government. Now, then, the question is upon what members of the political community is it proper, is it right, is it just to confer this power? And by what rule is it to be conferred? One gentleman, to-day, has undertaken to say that during the whole of this discussion no rule and no principle has been laid down or defined by which it may be determined who ought and who ought not to exercise this power. I listened in vain during the whole of his argument upon that question to see whether he himself would lay down any rule or any principle to which we could refer in determining upon whom the right of suffrage should be conferred, and who should be deprived of that right. I listened also with great care to another gentleman who spoke on the same subject, and apparently with the same view, but I did not learn from him any such unbending rule, or any rule to which we could refer for the determination of this question. Now, sir, upon whom should this right be conferred? Upon those and those only whose exercise of the power will tend to promote the great end and the great object of government, and that is the security of person and property and the security of every person in the pursuit and enjoyment of happiness. And how shall we determine who these persons are, for that is the real question before the committee. How shall we determine who are fitted and who are not for the exercise of this great privilege? And let me here say that to exercise the functions of government, requires a degree of capacity; that it requires a degree of intelligence; that it requires a degree of experience which is not required in the person who merely exercises the elective franchise. Let me say again, that the exercise of the right of suffrage requires a far less degree of intelligence, a far less degree of experience, a far less degree, if you please, of a knowledge of our political institutions than the exercise of the functions of government; that it requires different qualities; that it requires a less degree of intelligence and a less degree of understanding to enable a person to determine who is the proper person to exercise the functions of government, than to exercise the function of government itself. Now, sir, looking upon the various classes who are proposed for the exercise of the right of suffrage, how many or how few of them, indeed, have the intelligence and the capacity, if you please, to select from among themselves those who are to exercise the functions of government. It may be said that there are almost none, or if any, they are so few, that they constitute no appreciable number of the members of the State. Now there have been several classes proposed here for disfranchisement, of those who are not supposed to be fitted for the exercise of that duty and of that privilege. Among these, first, are idiots, lunatics and persons of unsound mind, and it will be apparent at the very statement of the question, that these are not fitted for the exercise of suffrage; that they do not possess the necessary qualifications of mind or intelligence. Now, not only should the elector possess intelligence, but he should be possessed of the will to exercise his right, properly to perform his duty suitably. I find there is another class which it is proposed to exclude from this right, and that class is composed of criminals, persons who are guilty of offenses against the laws, and here again, the safety of the State requires that those who are ill disposed toward it, who do not yield obedience to the laws, should have no part in the framing or making of those laws. Again, it has been proposed to disfranchise another class on account of its color. The question here is, does this class as a class possess the necessary intelligence to exercise suitably the duty of suffrage, and do they possess the will to exercise that privilege properly. No one has had the boldness to assert upon this floor that they did not possess these requisites. Now, it was stated by the gentleman [Mr. Murphy] who moved the amendment to the report of the committee upon this subject that as a matter of opinion he did not think the admission of this class, excluded by the present Constitution, would add any strength to the government of the State. Why, sir, what constitutes the strength of a State? What is essential to the permanency of the government? What is it that makes it what it is? It is the affection and the love of its constituents; and whence comes this love and affection? It arises from the fact that those who constitute the State have a share, or have a right at some time to have a share in the administration of its government, and in the same degree that any class of the citizens of equal number adds strength to the State, the black citizen of the State may add to its strength, and to its permanency. Now, sir, these are the principal classes whose case has been under discussion before this committee, and the exercise of suffrage by all these classes may be referred to this rule that I have laid down. In the first place, the right of suffrage should be exercised by those whose exercise of it will contribute to the great ends and aims of government; that it is to be exercised by those who have the intelligence in the first place, and the will in the second place to perform that duty properly. Now, in regard to most others than the classes I have mentioned, it is impossible to define by any practical rule or upon any practical principle any distinction in the degrees of intelligence which may be required for the exercise of suffrage, or any degree of good disposition towards the government; therefore it is that, I say, that all members of the community, with the exceptions I have named, may, at some time, become possessed of this right. Perhaps it will be said, and I doubt not that it will, the rule which I have laid down will admit to the right of suffrage women, and indeed, sir, they do come within the principles that I have mentioned, except, perhaps, that their exercise of the right of suffrage may not, as I have said in regard to other classes, necessarily contribute any to the strength of the State. But I am opposed to the amendment which has been introduced in that regard, and for this reason, that during the whole existence of the human race, it has never been known that women have been admitted to this right, and it has never been known, and it is not known now, that they as a class have to any considerable extent asked to be admitted to this privilege; and it has never been known, nor is it known now, that the other sex, in any considerable numbers, have required that they be admitted to this privilege, and, therefore, it seems to me at this time to be inexpedient to extend the right of the elective franchise to them. And here I may be allowed to protest against any inference which is attempted to be drawn from the examples of some illustrious women of the world who have exercised political power wisely and well, and to call the attention of the committee to examples of another character, as has been done to some extent by the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], where the political power when exercised by women was of the most disastrous character—

At this point the gavel fell, the twenty minutes having expired.

Mr. SILVESTER — Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BICKFORD — Mr. Chairman, I was about to make a request of the committee to be allowed to continue my remarks on the assumption that no one else desired to speak.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] is out of order. The gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] has the floor.

Mr. SILVESTER — Were it not that as a bachelor, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I have a personal interest in the question before the committee, and that it is necessary for me to give a reason for the vote which I shall cast in the negative upon this question, I do not know that I should occupy the attention of the committee after the indulgence that was extended to me the other evening. No person is more desirous than I am that every right shall be accorded to woman which her position entitles her to claim, and which it is necessary for her protection that she should possess. I yield to no individual in sincerity and determination of purpose to extend to her every courtesy and privilege which the most refined and even the most extremely chivalric gallantry can demand. But I have not been convinced by the arguments which have been advanced in the pamphlets which have been circulated among the members of the Convention by the friends of female suffrage, that the conferring of the elective franchise is necessary for her protection, is required for the enforcement of any of her rights, or will add to the dignity of the position which she now occupies. Neither have the views which I entertain in respect to this subject been altered by the able, eloquent and elegant address of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. Probably there is no member of this body who has not, in the past, derived delight from perusing the fascinating, instructive and finished productions of that gentleman, or been charmed with his public addresses in the literary lecture-room, or before political assemblies. And none of us can have failed to feel the influence of his polished, elaborate, classic and eloquent remarks upon the subject now under discussion. And though, since then, day has faded into twilight, though the shades of evening have once and again come and departed, though dawn has repeatedly brightened into perfect day, I still linger entranced by the spell of his fascinating and bewitching oratory. But yet I am constrained to differ from him in many of the views which he has expressed, and to oppose the amendment which he has introduced, and has so ably advocated. It is not my intention however to attempt any formal refutation of the argument adduced by him, but simply to state very briefly some of the suggestions which have occurred to me in reflecting upon this subject. And in considering "an innovation which," in the language of the report of the committee, is "so revolutionary and sweeping, so openly at war with a distribution of duties and functions between the sexes as venerable and pervading as government itself, and involving transformations so radical in social and domestic life," I propose to refer to the Bible as authority and my first objection is founded upon the doctrine therein contained that the wife must be in subjection to her husband, and that in public assemblies females should keep silence and should be keepers at home. The first of these rules must be violated unless the wife votes precisely as her husband does and in accordance with his commands and instructions, which would destroy all independence of action on her part, and for this the advocates of female suffrage certainly will not contend.

Mr. LAPHAM — Will the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] allow me to ask him a question? Does not the same authority require that servants should obey their masters?

Mr. SILVESTER — That suggestion has been already answered by the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] and I do not propose to answer it again at this time. The second injunction, that woman should keep silence in public assemblies must be violated because she invariably will be led into talking at public gatherings. It is proverbial that women love to speak. It seems to be a natural quality with them. All of us have experienced the pleasure which flows therefrom in the charmed circle of domestic and social life. Once introduce them within the range of politics and they will be constantly exercising their peculiar gift, and will be enlightening the electors of the State from every political platform to which they can have access. But again, the third injunction will be violated, which requires that they should be keepers at home. We can see how it is violated now. We have only to refer to the reported proceedings of the meeting of the American Equal Rights Association, held this year, to learn the extent to which they will be kept from home by engaging in politics. This report states that Lucy Stone is already in Kansas, "speaking in all her towns, and cities—in churches, school-houses, barns and the open air; traveling night and day, by railroad, stage and ox cart; scaling the rocky divides or fording the swollen rivers; greeted everywhere by crowded audiences of brave men and women." Give to females the right to exercise the elective franchise, and they will be everywhere else but at home; and although in this day of apologies for bonnets, the scripture rule that women should have the head covered, is daily violated. [Laughter.] Voluntary disobedience of one precept is no argument for our permitting her to transgress others. We have already gone almost as far as possible in dividing those who have been joined together in the most solemn manner, by according to the wife nearly the same rights of holding and acquiring property and conducting business on her own account, as if she were a feme sole; and such an advanced stage of progress has already been reached in this respect, that instead of the wife being, as one gentleman has stated, merely an appendage to the husband, the husband in very many instances is now hardly anything more than an ornament to the wife. The very arguments of the advocates of female suffrage contain some of the strongest reasons against it. Samuel J. May, one of the shining lights of the Equal Rights Association makes use of the following language:

"The true family is the type of the true State."

And again,

"What should the government of a nation be? Ought it not to be as much as possible like the government of a well-ordered family? Can you think of any model so good as the divine model set before us in the family? What would the family be with a father and without a mother?"

Now, what is the true structure of a family? In the old Saxon idiom, the husband is the "house-band"—he is the center around which the family clusters. He is its head and main dependence and the happiness and prosperity of the whole family, are promoted by obedience to the head, not an enforced and an unwilling obedience but a cheerful and prompt compliance. There are certain peculiar duties pertaining to each member of the family, and no one can discharge those which are within the appropriate province of another without violating the beauty and harmony of the domestic relations. What is beautiful in the boy may not be in the man; what is beautiful in the wife may not be in the husband, and the converse of the proposition is equally true. The father of one of the most active advocates of female suffrage recognized the fact that woman was transgressing her appropriate sphere in entering upon public life, by addressing her after she had commenced her career as an orator as "my dear sir" and subscribing himself "I am, dear sir, very respectfully yours." And so, too, the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], when acting as chairman of the meeting in favor of female suffrage in this hall a few evenings since, in introducing the speaker of the evening, instinctively spoke of her as "Mr." Lucy Stone. [Laughter.] But, sir, in addition to what I have already submitted, the right to vote is not demanded by the majority of the females themselves or by any considerable number of them. When I make this assertion I judge from my own neighborhood, and I know of hardly any of the ladies of the town in which I have the honor to reside, who desire to exercise the elective franchise, or who would go to the polls if permitted so to do, and I am not willing to admit that any section of the State, has more accomplished, more patriotic, more public-spirited, more high-souled, more active females than the old town of Kinderhook. I feel assured that if the question should be submitted to them for their decision, it would receive an almost unanimous vote in the negative. I came here uninstructed as to the course I should pursue upon this floor as a delegate except upon this one subject. The ladies of my acquaintance gave me as a parting instruction a direction to vote against female suffrage, and knowing that I am a very modest and diffident man [laughter], they enjoined upon me, if I should dare to speak at all in this body, to raise my voice and utter my protest against the measure. Page 1 of the pamphlet of the Equal Rights Association which has been laid upon our tables shows that it is only about a half dozen "live women" in the words of Miss Anthony, who are creating this sensation throughout the country, who are canvassing the State of New York and besieging the Legislature and the delegates to the Constitutional Convention with tracts and petitions. One week we see them in Kansas, agitating the question of female suffrage there, and the next week they are in this hall advocating their views or publishing private appeals. But in order to magnify their numbers, they are active in traveling from one quarter of the land to another. They make their forces in this manner appear very numerous and powerful, so as to induce men who always yield in the end to the demand of woman, to believe that it is her desire to claim this privilege. They resort to the artifice of the Dodge Club, when in its journeyings in Italy it was attacked by brigands and captured. One of their number had in his possession a revolver and by ingeniously passing it in the shades of the evening from one to the other, the brigands supposed that all were armed with that terrible weapon. But it is said there is no representation for females, and that as she is taxed, she should have the right to vote. For-eignors and minors hold property and pay taxes, but cannot exercise the elective franchise. I deny, however, that women are unrepresented. The husband represents the wife; her influence operates powerfully in controlling his conduct, even in political matters, and with respect to the ladies who are yet unmarried, those of us who are bachelors are only too happy to consider ourselves as representing them and casting a ballot for them at the polls. But with the right to vote will follow the right to hold office, and if female suffrage is accorded, we shall soon see posted up in every public place the announcements such as "Mrs. Amelia Wilhelmina Squiggs, a candidate for Congress, will address the citizens of Booneville on the exciting and important issues involved in the next election." [Laughter.] And as they cannot ask to have the privileges without sharing the burdens, they must be liable to jury and militia duty. If they shall be allowed or required to serve upon juries, it will be necessary to enlarge the jury-box of every court-house to provide for their admission, on account of their expansive crinoline. [Laughter.] And could any woman be expected, if sitting on a grand jury, to observe that part of the oath which enjoins that the counsel of the people and their fellows, they shall safely keep; it would be only another instance that a woman cannot keep a secret. [Laughter.] And, sir, suppose we consider them as enrolled in the militia, what uniform are they to support? Are they to don the regulation pattern of the national guard of the State of New York, or are they to appear in expansive crinoline, in flowing train, in head-dress and waterfall? [Laughter.] Doubtless in the latter. How difficult then, the task of the inspecting officer would be on a field day. Here is a regiment composed of male and female; here is a rank, at the right extremity of which is located private William Brown, next to him appears private Mary Smith, next to her private John Jones, and next to him private Jane Noakes, and so alternately to the extreme left. The inspector stations himself next to private William Brown, and ranges his eye along the line of warriors to test its straightness, but the poor masculine soldiers are completely hidden by the crinoline of the feminine warriors, and the inspector, completely baffled, is obliged to relinquish his task. And when this valiant company shall start to march, with what marvelous rapidity, regularity, and precision would their movements be conducted. [Laughter.] But it is said by the advocates of female suffrage that woman is degraded, and will not be elevated till the ballot has been conferred upon her. I have not been so taught to regard her. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], very fittingly and pertinently inquired: Did any Englishman who rode into the jaws of death at Balaklava, serve England better than Florence Nightingale? And I would beg leave to amend the inquiry by asking: Is Florence Nightingale degraded because she is not entitled to vote? And does not the general verdict of humanity pronounce her career to have been more truly glorious amid the hospitals of Scutari than it could have possibly been if she had attempted to wield the sword and contend on the field of battle for the cross of St. George. It is a slander upon the wives, mothers and daughters of our land to say that they are degraded; it is a slander upon their noble characters, upon the self-denying patriotism which they have so often exhibited, upon the many virtues which they have illustrated, and upon the many works of genius which they have produced. Are the thousands of females in the land, who, like the Spartan mother as their sons departed from their warm embrace to join the ranks of the defenders of their country, enjoined them to return with their shield or upon it degraded because they are not invested with the right or privilege of suffrage? But if woman is degraded, will her admission to the position of an elector immediately elevate her? Intrigues figure to a great extent in politics and feminine acuteness of intellect is peculiarly adapted to the field of intrigue. Introduce the female element into politics and intrigues therein will be largely increased, and woman, in place of being elevated will be lowered, and instead of occupying the eminence which she now adorns and graces, might in many instances sink to the level of a petty village politician. But there is another objection, and that is, that the granting of the elective franchise to females would tend to obstruct the way to the polls. It is now frequently difficult to approach the ballot box and at times it is a matter of complaint that all the votes cannot be polled; if, in addition to the other obstacles, the path to the ballot-box is to be rendered additionally inaccessible by the presence of expanding crinoline and flowing waterfalls, we, poor unfortunate masculine specimens of humanity, would be placed on those occasions decidedly in the vocative. [Laughter.] And again, sir, the admission of woman to the elective franchise would interfere with those beautiful dreams in which we all love to wander, and dissipate all the charm which lingers around the ideals of song, romance and poetry. Who could endure to think of Ellen, the bright and graceful Lady of the Lake, leaving her highland home to wrangle around the polling booth? or who would wish to picture Rebecca, the fair Jewess, pressing her way to the polls to enforce her rights, instead of calling upon her faithful Ivanhoe to redress her wrongs? The many tears which have been shed over the sorrowful fate of Lucy, the gentle and unfortunate bride of Lammermoor, would long since have ceased to flow had she been sufficiently advanced to be in sympathy with the doctrines of the strong-minded females of the present age, that all her injuries could have been alleviated or removed by the right to exercise the elective franchise. And though Di Vernon, that peculiarly fascinating creation of Scott, which even at this distance of time can hardly fail to elicit a chivalric love, has somewhat of the character of a hoyden, as fearless and free she gallops over moor and heather on her proud black charger, or appears in almost inaccessible fastnesses in the north of Scotland, yet I feel warranted in saying that a great part of the charm of her character would be lost had she been an advocate for female suffrage. And then, not to speak of the influence which the conferring of the elective franchise upon women would exercise in the domestic circle! What a dismal prospect would be opened up before those of us who are bachelors. Even now it is necessary if any one of us shall happen to be so fortunate or unfortunate as to become interested in any fair charmer, to neglect all business, to learn poetry, to quote poetry, to recite poetry, to sing poetry, to walk through shady groves and by rippling streams, to make the woods vocal with the name of the adored "Dulcinea." But bestow the right to vote upon the enchantress, and in addition it will be necessary to adopt her political code, to embrace her political views, to swear by her political principles, to support her political candidates, or else our most abject suit may be denied, our most importunate prayer disregarded, our most fervent entreaty unheeded, and we be compelled to remain in a solitary and deplorable state of bachelordom all the rest of our mortal lives. [Laughter.] For one, I take up this night my mournful lamentation and boldly declare that our condition would then be utterly miserable and deplorable. The picture drawn by Solomon corresponds with my ideal of a model woman, and I cannot discover that he enumerates the capacity rightly to exercise the elective franchise as among her desirable or essential qualities.

"She seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

"She layeth her hands to the spindle and her hands hold the distaff.

"She stretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

"She is not afraid of the snow for her household, for all her household are clothed with scarlet.

"Her husband is known in the gates when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

"She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

"Strength and honor are her clothing, and she shall rejoice in time to come.

"She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

"She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness."

I have always considered a perfect woman, nobly discharging every duty of her station, as a spirit pure and bright, warning, comforting and commanding with something of an angel voice, and moving in an ethereal region elevated above this earthly sphere. I am unwilling to have this charm dissipated; to have woman dethroned from her truly exalted position; to have her sublime mission degraded; and am, therefore, opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond.

Mr. BICKFORD—I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester], who has just taken his seat, has stated that at the woman's rights meeting in this chamber, at which I was unexpectedly called upon to preside, and which I did very reluctantly, I introduced the speaker, on that occasion as "Mr. Lucy Stone." [Laughter.] I wish to explain in relation to that matter. I did not intend to make such an announcement, and I do not wish the statement to go forth in the reports of our proceedings that I did make such a remark without some explanation. And I take occasion to say here that I did not so introduce the lady; or, if I did, I did not intend to, for I do not think I am capable of such an intentional insult.

Mr. SILVESTER — If the gentleman states that he did not so introduce the lady I will correct my statement, and make a most humble apology to him.

Mr. BICKFORD — I will say, certainly, that I did not intend to.

Mr. GRAVES — Is it in order to call up a resolution offered by me on the 10th of July as an amendment to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order, because there are two amendments now pending.

Mr. GRAVES—My proposition is to give to women the elective franchise, provided they desire it. I offered it then as an amendment, and I desire to speak upon that proposition when it is in order. If it is not in order of course I will not rise to it to-night.

The CHAIR—It is not now in order.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the Convention that the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] may be allowed to finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Jefferson can proceed with his remarks if there be no objection.

Mr. BICKFORD—I was saying, Mr. Chairman, when my time had expired that, I would not attempt to dwell upon the scene which will be exhibited in this hall, when the Speaker recognizes "the lady from Westchester." [Laughter.] Small chance then will gentlemen have to "catch the Speaker's eye," especially if the Speaker be a ladies' man, as he will be if any man at all. [Laughter.] But the inquiry I make, and it must be made, is as to the average sense of justice and the quality of mercy in the female mind. I feel constrained to say, because the truth demands it, that the female mind is by no means as just or as merciful as the average male mind. Especially towards women, women are notoriously unjust and unmerciful. It will be hard for women when they are tried by women—"by their peers," as has been demanded. May the Lord have mercy on their souls, for the judge and jury will not. [Laughter.] I am not slandering the sex. God did not design them to be judges, nor jurymen, and therefore He has not given them the necessary qualities to fill those stations properly. He has designed woman for a most important and honorable class of duties; and for those He has admirably fitted her. But He has not bestowed on her the judicial mind, for He never designed her to be a judge. We may well pity the women, when women make and administer the laws. Nor will it be much better with men. The laws, as made by men and administered by them, have ever been tender of the rights of women, and especially merciful and forbearing. I was once in my life on a grand jury. A woman complained of a man for striking her. An indictment was found at once, and unanimously. Soon after a man complained of another man for striking him. The case was full as aggravated as the case where the woman was struck. I voted to find a bill, but I voted alone. If a complaint had been made by a man against a woman for striking him, I do not believe even I would have voted for the bill. [Laughter.] My observation is that crimes are committed by women are as thoroughly as men. But women, as a class, are merely punished criminally. But if, instead of occupying their present position as the victims and companions of men, who labor and toil for their support, they are to become the rivals of men in all the rough and public trials of life, they must expect to be treated with no more consideration than their merits deserve. Nothing will be conceded to them more than to men. They must enjoy no more than they earn, and they must stand or fall according to their own conduct. Men who want office must be allowed to jostle the women out if they can. Women who become politicians must expect to be treated like other politicians. Their conduct will be arraigned, questioned, tried, censured, condemned. Newspapers will speak disparagingly of them. Stump speeches will be made expressly to discredit them. They will be slandered, vilified, abused. All their short-comings and peccadillos will be brought to light, and frightful additions made. Let it not be said that men will be too polite and just to act in this manner towards the ladies. Men may be, for very shame. But men will not be the only politicians. The women will be in the field. And then! and will it be for women candidates. They will be slandered without mercy and without stint. Men slander women? No sir; it will not be necessary. The women will most gladly save them the trouble. And many a lady, who at present is an ornament to society, and the glory of her sex, it may be feared will become a brawling, slandering, unscrupulous, political virago. It will be a sad time indeed for women who aspire to office when women become voters. Nor less sad will it be for society when women shall have forsaken their proper sphere, and when their energies shall be called forth to publicly slander and traduce those of their own sex. In conclusion, I thank the committee for the courtesy extended to me in allowing me to conclude my remarks.

Mr. HAND—Can I have the opportunity of concluding my remarks if there be no objection?

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I move, Mr. Chairman, that we now adjourn, or rather that—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Hardenburgh] that a motion to adjourn cannot be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I correct myself by moving that the committee do now rise and report progress.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Hardenburgh, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HAND—I would like the unanimous consent of the committee to conclude what I have to say on the question pending.

Mr. MILLER—I would like to have the rule read under which we are acting, and by which speeches are limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. HAND—We admit the existence of the rule. It is only by courtesy and unanimous consent that I ask to be permitted to continue.

Mr. BARTO—I hope the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], will be allowed to proceed. I would like to have my district well represented in the debates.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution adopted Thursday, July 18th, by which after that date speakers on the pending question were limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. MILLER—I called for the reading of the rule that I might learn whether it applied to the discussion of the whole report of the committee or only to the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. If it only applied to that amendment, I would not object, but it seems to me that we must enforce the rule or we will never have a decision on the report of the committee.

Mr. HAND—I would like to state the reason—

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] having objected, the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] cannot be allowed the floor.

Mr. GREELEY—If we could take a vote on the pending amendment, the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] could then introduce his amendment which would give the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] a further opportunity to address the committee.

Mr. HAND—I gave way for the recess on the express condition that I should be allowed to finish my argument.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Curtis, and it was declared lost, on a division, by a vote of 19 to 43.

Mr. CASSIDY—I call the attention of the Convention to the fact that there is no quorum present and voting.

Mr. RATHBUN—A large number of gentlemen present did not rise and vote.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will again announce the question.

The question was again put on the amendment of Mr. Curtis, and it was declared lost on a division, by a vote of 20 to 51.

Mr. RATHBUN—I ask that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun], that the roll cannot be called in Committee of the Whole. The Chair, however, is of the opinion from the numbers exhibited in taking the vote, that there is not a quorum present, and it will, therefore, ask the President to resume his seat.

Thé PRESIDENT resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, and that on a division being had in committee, it was ascertained there was no quorum present.

Mr. GREELEY—I move a call of the roll.

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Folger, and it was declared lost, on a division, by a vote of 26 to 41.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll of the Convention, and the following delegates were found to be present:

Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Baker, Barto, Beala, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cas-

TUESDAY, July 23, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. BICKFORD—If it is in order I would now ask leave of absence for Mr. Clinton, of Erie, for to-day and to-morrow. He is under the necessity of being absent to attend a meeting of the State Teachers' Association at Auburn for the purpose of delivering an address before the association.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I present a petition of the first Directress of the Nursery and Child's Hospital, asking that in regulating the charities of the State, the claims of a foundling hospital may be considered. As this petition presents some information of rather uncommon importance, both to the Convention and State, I ask the consent of the Convention that it be referred to the Committee on Charities and Charitable Institutions, and be printed.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Charitable Institutions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. REYNOLDS asked a leave of absence for Mr. Clark, until Thursday, on account of sickness.

Which was granted.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adult-erated Liquors.

Mr. STRATTON also presented eighteen petitions in favor of regulating and against prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adult-erated Liquors.

Mr. E. BROOKS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Corporations, other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance, be directed to inquire into the expediency of making the following amendment to the Constitution:

"All corporations in this State shall be governed by directors to be elected once in each year by the stockholders thereof; and no stockholder shall vote at any election who has not been such for ninety days continuously, next preceding the election."

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Brooks, and it was declared to be adopted.

Which was referred to the Committee on Counties, Towns and Villages.

Mr. SHERMAN, also offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following article be adopted as a part of a proposed Constitution to be submitted to the people, pursuant to chapter 194 of the Laws of 1867.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide by general laws for the following specified objects, and they shall not be made in any case the subjects of special legislation.

3. The laying out and opening of public and private roads except in cities and incorporated villages.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GREELEY called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Convention will proceed on Wednesday, at one P. M., to act upon the article reported by the Committee on the right of Suffrage, as it shall have been reported from the Committee of the Whole; every amendment that shall have been or which may be proposed shall be separately presented, and five minutes allowed the mover to explain and commend it, with a like opportunity for one reply, when the vote shall be taken thereon. All amendments having thus been disposed of, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays on the article itself.

Mr. AXTELL—I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. The resolution was laid on the table by a vote yesterday; therefore it requires a vote of the Convention to bring it up.

Mr. GREELEY—It was simply laid on the table because it gave rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that the Secretary informs it that the gentleman is mistaken.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be upon the motion of Mr. Axtell to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. GREELEY called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I want to ask the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] a question. Does he intend by his resolution to prevent amendments in the Convention not offered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREELEY—It expressly says not. The words are clear.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Axtell, and it was declared to be lost, by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Axtell, Baker, Barnard, Cassidy, Chesebro, Comstock, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Daly, C. C. Dwight, Gerry, Hale, Hitchcock, Lapham, Lowrey, McDonald, Roy, Wickham and Young—20.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Champlain, Cheritree, Church, Cochran, Duganue, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hiscok, Hitchman, Houston, Hutchins, Krum, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Ludington, Magee, Masten, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rogers, Root, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schumaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, S. Townsend, Van Cott, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, and Williams—101.

Mr. MURPHY—I think the resolution is defective in form. It does not provide for this report being made by the Committee of the Whole to the Convention. I think it would be advisable to amend this resolution, to provide that a report be made at one o'clock. The object of my rising was to ask the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] to make his resolution for Thursday instead of Wednesday. Nothing will be lost by putting it off a day, or two days. We can take the vote upon any time fixed, and go on with the other business. By adjourning it for one day or two days it will accommodate very much the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], who desires to be present on taking the vote in order to present some amendment. I hope the gentleman will consent. The great object of the gentleman, I suppose, is that he may have as full a house as possible.

Mr. GREELEY—When I proposed last week to close this discussion, the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], appealed to me not to make it Tuesday, because he could not be here Tuesday, and as he then suggested, he thought he might be here Wednesday. I prepared this resolution with express reference to his convenience as stated to me at the time. Now, it seems to me if we should commence now voting upon amendments—there will probably be thirty or forty—it will take us all day Wednesday to get through, so on Thursday, we may get to a vote on the main question. I submit to the Convention, if the Convention desires it put off another day, I propose Wednesday one o'clock as the time. I apprehend the Committee of the Whole will adapt its action in accordance with the vote of the Convention. I have no doubt it will do so. If we desire to have this vote taken at one o'clock. I am quite sure the Committee of the Whole will adapt its action to that fact. I shall submit to the Convention and I desire that the Convention should decide and not me.

Mr. MURPHY—The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] is one of the Board of Trustees of Union College which holds its exercises to-day and to-morrow. It is very necessary that he should be there, and I suppose when he intimated to the gentleman from Westchester that he would require to be absent on Tuesday and hoped to be here on Wednesday, it did not occur to him that those exercises would occupy two days. I submit that matter, however, to the Convention and move, in order to take its sense, to amend the resolution by striking out the word "Wednesday" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Thursday."

Mr. E. A. BROWN—There are other gentle-

Mr. SHERMAN, also offered the following resolution:

up other business upon the table. I do not think the whole Convention is called upon to yield its convenience to the convenience of members, or to suit the convenience of these two who choose to go away at this time; and, as it is suggested to me, they are only an hour's ride from here, and they can come down to attend to any particular vote, or to offer any particular amendment they may wish to offer; and it does seem to me that we should press forward in this matter and take the earliest day, consistent with fairness and with getting before the Convention all the amendments proposed to be offered to this article.

Mr. OPDYKE — It seems to me that the honorable gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], overlooks the real objection to inserting the word "Wednesday." I have already said that we are in Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the right of suffrage; we have been engaged almost a week on a single amendment or two amendments excluding all others that members may desire to offer; we may be engaged on those until the time arrives for the committee to report to the Convention, and the offer of an amendment, however important it may be, is confined to five minutes, while a week has been given to probably less important amendments than others that may be offered. It seems to me that it would deprive the Convention of the power of giving that consideration to the amendments that are hereafter to be offered to which they are entitled. If the Convention decides that this debate shall close in committee on Wednesday, and go to the Convention, I shall then move to extend the time from five minutes to twenty minutes for the mover of the amendment, and to give equal time to the replies.

Mr. LEE — I suppose it is accepted that the work of this Convention is to be submitted for the action of the electors of this State next November; but at the rate of progress we have made hitherto we shall not be one-half through the work assigned to us. I have sat here in my place, attentively listening to the remarks of gentlemen, interested and I hope instructed, but I confess, sir, that I am not quite as well prepared to vote to-day on many of the propositions which have been discussed here as I was when they were first announced, and I think, sir, unless some limit is made to our action on the preliminary questions that challenge investigation here, we shall not complete our work in time to submit it to the action of the people next Fall. We have already been some fifty days in consultation, in deliberation and debate, and I would inquire what questions have been settled here. I notice, sir, in looking over my files of papers, that come from different parts of the State, that the people of the State, our constituents, are beginning to inquire whether this Convention has assembled for the purpose of indulging in the exercise simply of debate. My impression is, the idea is gaining ground in the minds of the people that the Convention fails to comprehend the momentous issue to be considered and settled here. If we delay this until Thursday, the probability is it will be Friday or Saturday before the preliminary question, in the first report made by any committee will be finally settled. I hope sir, this Convention will not consent to be a tail to the kite of the trustees of Union College or any other college. I myself should be very much pleased to attend the commencement exercises, but I shall deny myself that privilege. I think it is the duty of each member to bring his business in subordination to the business of the Convention and I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] will prevail.

Mr. RATHBUN — While I would be willing to accommodate any gentleman as far as can be, without inconvenience, I desire to call the attention of the Convention to a few facts which have occurred lately, and they will be able to judge how far a further time should be given to those who are absent or propose to be absent to-morrow. On Saturday this Convention met and we had about fifty-five or seventy members present. And we were here endeavoring to do our duty and yet incompetent to the performance of any duty because so many of the delegates had left the Convention. We were compelled simply to adjourn and that brought us to a meeting yesterday, on Monday, at one o'clock, and we assembled, and reached the number seventy-one again, and the greater part of another day was lost, for the reason that we had an insufficient number of the members of the Convention present here to perform any duty. Now, sir, here are two days and there are sixty-one or seventy men here voting during the two days, ready and anxious to perform their duty and proceed with the business of this Convention, and they were unable to do it, because it was inconvenient for gentlemen to be present, their business having called them away. Now, these sixty-one or seventy members are here to-day and are ready again to proceed with business, and anxious to proceed with it. Now, sir, as their convenience was not consulted on Saturday, and they have been here and compelled to remain here, because they felt their duty demanded their presence, they remained, and there was not a man sat here but what desired to go home, and had occasion to go home, but the convenience and pleasure of going home was held subordinate to the duty which was owing to the people of the State. Sir, shall we forget that these persons who remained and were faithfully in their places, that their comfort, that their desire to progress with the public business, ought to be consulted to some extent, and that it ought not to be postponed, and those held over again another day to accommodate a couple of gentlemen who desire to be at different places. I submit, sir, that it is not the business of one hundred and twenty-five men, appearing here in a public capacity, to postpone the business for which they are assembled to accommodate any one or two men. I submit that we should proceed with this business. We have done nothing, virtually nothing; and there will be nothing done until we can point our finger to some section of the Constitution which we can say has passed, and our labor in regard to it has ended. Sir, I have no desire to take up the time of the Convention, but I desire to ask gentlemen not to forget, that while they are willing to accommodate a few, that the comfort of those who remained at their post, and are ready and willing men, Mr. President, who are absent. Judge Harris is one of the trustees of that college and is now absent attending the meeting of the trustees, and I understood from Judge Paige that they desired to be present to-morrow. I know there are other gentlemen absent who are desirous of being present when these votes are taken. I, therefore, hope Thursday will be inserted instead of Wednesday.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will prevail. I understand there are other amendments yet to be offered to the report of the Committee on Suffrage, and it may be they will not be reached under the rules, and they will come before the Convention. I think all will agree with me that the important amendments should have more than five minutes allowed to them. I desire that this amendment should have time to go to the committee and there to be discussed. I think if we postpone the time until Thursday it will be better and our work will be better done.

Mr. GREELEY—I will accept the amendment.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I wish to offer an amendment to the resolution which now provides for a discussion of only five minutes on each side to every amendment that shall be offered to an amendment. I do not think that is sufficient to enable the Convention to understand properly the amendment that may be offered. I propose, therefore, that other persons may discuss an amendment on being restricted to five minutes as is the case in regard to persons moving amendments. I propose to amend by inserting after the word "reply" the words, "And any member of the Convention who desires to speak may be heard under a like limitation of five minutes."

Mr. GREELEY—I hope not. That opens an unlimited field of discussion. We may have one hundred speeches on one amendment.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. A. J. Parker, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to inquire of my associate from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], who proposed this resolution, whether he means that the amendments that are or may be proposed are to be proposed in the Committee of the Whole, or whether he means that they may also be proposed in Convention, though not offered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREELEY—Certainly. It has been decided by the Convention that amendments may be offered in the Convention which have not been offered in the Committee of the Whole. That is settled by the Convention.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to inquire when that was so settled.

The PRESIDENT—On Friday last.

Mr. CONGER—Then it is so definitely settled.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the rule that any amendment may be proposed in the Convention whether proposed in the Committee of the Whole or not.

Mr. LEE—I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT—The amendment has been accepted by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley].

Mr. LEE—Is it competent after the action by the Convention for the gentleman to accept the amendment?

The PRESIDENT—If no business has intervened and no action taken on the amendment, the gentleman is at liberty to accept it.

Mr. FOLGER—I move to strike out Thursday and insert Wednesday. The reasons why I offer this amendment are these: the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has stated that it would accommodate certain gentlemen who are absent from the Convention. The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], and the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], are absent and expect to be absent until Wednesday. If we commence this voting on Thursday next, the yeas and nays will be called on very many amendments, and it is doubtful whether it will be concluded until Friday or Saturday. I know of several members who will be called away on business on Friday next, and I think their convenience should also be consulted. I do not think it is the convenience of a few gentlemen, but I think it is a question of the convenience of the whole Convention which is to be considered. Therefore I move to strike out Thursday and insert Wednesday.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CHURCH—I understood the President to declare the motion to be carried; as I understood it, it was the other way.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair was in error; the motion was lost.

Mr. FOLGER—I call for the yeas and noes on that question.

Mr. CONGER—I rise to a question of order—that the President of the Convention having declared the motion to be lost, it is not competent for the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to move a call for the yeas and noes.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent for the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to challenge the correctness of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FOLGER—The reasons given by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] for preferring Thursday are that two gentlemen of the Convention are to be absent on Wednesday, and that is the only reason as I understand it. That two gentlemen, the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], and the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], are both absent attending at the commencement of Union College. There is no doubt but all of us would be glad to accommodate ourselves to the personal convenience of those gentlemen; but there is also the personal convenience of other gentlemen to be considered. I know of three gentlemen who are to be called away by an important reference, which they cannot control, one the referee and two others the counsel. They are obliged to be absent, and to leave here on Friday to reach the place of trial on Saturday, so here is a majority certainly whose convenience is to be consulted, not to speak of the rest of the Convention who have been staying here listening, not to debates, but to the reading of essays for the last six or ten days; and now we desire to come to an immediate or very speedy determination of this question, that we may take consideration of the last vote, and upon that I ayes and noes.

PRESIDENT—What vote does the gentleman refer to?

MERRITT—The one proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

GREELEY—I would inquire whether that must throw the subject over until to-morrow? I must object to it.

BARKER—I move that the committee take on the subject to-morrow, and that Wednesday 1 o'clock be inserted in place of 12 o'clock Thursday.

MERRITT—Do I understand there was motion made to my motion?

PRESIDENT—The Chair understood was objection made.

GRANT—I hope this amendment will not fail. As I understand, there are proposed a number of amendments to this report here, no one of which has had an opportunity of being heard at the Convention, and to-morrow at one o'clock is short a time for that purpose. I am content gentlemen should consider this report any number of hours on either day. I am content I shall have a morning session, a session at 9 o'clock, and another session at half-seven o'clock, and that we shall so agree, and I hope that gentleman will not shut the consideration of amendments that I deem important than any that have yet been considered, and if we adopt to-morrow at twelve o'clock or one o'clock, we must recollect that we but little more than a single day to consider up four times the number of amendments have already been considered during the past in this Convention. If the time fixed should Thursday at one o'clock, then we will have but days, and if we finish the consideration of report earlier than that, there is another resolution which may be considered in this Convention, therefore, to give the movers of all amendments a fair opportunity within the short time of twenty minutes to advocate either of these amendments. I hope gentlemen of the Convention will not support this amendment, but allow vote to be taken on Thursday, in accordance with the original motion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], as amended by the motion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks].

MR. BELL—It is somewhat amusing to those who have been here on either day of the session the last three weeks, to hear gentlemen who have absented themselves nearly the whole time, to come up here and say we have not given consideration enough to this subject. I was hardly able to locate the gentleman, not having seen him for a long time before he arose; why he complains we should give more time to the discussion of this subject. If the gentleman will look back his files, if he has not heard it personally, he will see that this report was introduced the latter part of June, and it has been before the Convention constantly ever since, to the exclusion of nearly every other business. Now, sir, it is time it should arrive at something. I have been, as an individual, in favor of the largest liberty and the largest latitude possible in debate, and have moved for extra sessions, and arose in my place day after day to obtain a session of this Convention on the evening of each day, that we might have an opportunity to hear the subject fully discussed, giving gentlemen an opportunity to display their oratory here to their fullest extent. But the time has arrived when we must take some action on these propositions, and I think we should now take the earliest opportunity possible to do so, and I am entirely in favor of to-morrow at 12 o'clock as proposed by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker]. Should we pass this matter over until Tuesday, these gentlemen will leave us without a quorum in all probability on Friday and Saturday, and it will go over till next week, and so on till the next week, and there is no knowing, unless we fix sometime now, when a vote may be had on this proposition. The resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is sufficiently liberal to afford any gentleman who chooses to get up here and talk five minutes on this question, and certainly the time has arrived when we do not want any more of these two hours or even twenty minute speeches. The time for long speaking in my opinion has passed, and the time for work has arrived, and I hope the Convention are disposed now to take hold of this question and go at it manfully and fairly, and pass on some propositions to submit to the people and finish their labors as soon as they can conveniently.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—I understand that the proposition now before the Convention looks to hastening the time of our action. It must be perfectly evident to every gentleman in the Convention who desires progress, that it is impossible to hasten action in this way. We have no previous question, and this question may be discussed indefinitely for at least three weeks: this very question before the Convention, just as long as gentlemen shall see fit to discuss it, it will last. I concur with the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] in the object he desires to accomplish, that it is to save time; but we have spent the regular session of two entire days, last week, in the discussion of the way how to do it. It resulted in the ascertainment of the way how not to do it, and this discussion this morning has nothing in the world in its results but the attempt to discover a way how not to do it. In the regular action of our Convention, as I wish to explain my action, I hope to-morrow, we shall reach a point at which we can obtain the previous question, and when a resolution of this kind comes before us, we can act upon it in some way with some limitation, and for the purpose of saving to-day for the discussion upon the subject that we are discussing in Committee of the Whole, I move to lay this resolution on the table.

MR. GREELEY called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

MR. FOLGER—Does that take the whole question with it?

THE PRESIDENT—The Chair so decided.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. M. I. Townsend, to lay on the table, and was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Baker, Barnard, Cassidy, Comstock, Conger, Hale, Lapham, Masten, Seymour, Smith, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Young—13.

and anxious to do business, ought not to be overlooked and delayed, and postponement had at their expense.

Mr. VERPLANCK — I do not quite understand the decision of the Chair. The Chair, in the first place, announced that the resolution was lost, and then that the resolution was carried, and then the gentleman called for the ayes and noes.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair rules it is competent for any gentleman to challenge the decision of the Chair by calling for the ayes and noes.

Mr. VERPLANCK — Then I suppose a motion can always be made after the count is taken.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair so ruled.

Mr. CONGER — If I had understood that to be the ruling of the Chair, I should not have risen to present the point of order which I did, but I understood the Chair to say the motion was carried.

Mr. CORBETT — I rise to a point of order, that it is not proper to discuss this question now, unless an appeal be taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CONGER — I do not wish to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but for the purpose of establishing no bad precedent I wish to communicate to the Chair the ground on which I raised the point of order, that he had decided and declared that the motion was lost. That being a decision the subsequent call for the ayes and noes is not a challenge of the count. It is an impeachment of the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair was erroneous in making the decision. The error arose from the fact of the noise in the chamber and at the left of the Chair, so that the Chair could not understand even the Secretary. The Chair understands it is the province of any member of the Convention to challenge the count without saying directly he challenges the count. He understands that the moving of the ayes and noes is in effect a challenge of the count, no other business having intervened.

Mr. CONGER — Unquestionably. Does the Chair rule that after the President says a motion is lost or carried, that then the call for the yeas and nays is a challenge of the count.

Mr. BROOKS — If the President will allow me. I suppose any man has a right to call for the yeas and nays before.

Mr. AXTELL — No question of order is before the Convention.

Mr. BROOKS — Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair, in order that I may speak to my point of order. I suppose the gentlemen of this Convention may call for the ayes and noes before the Chair announces the result, even after the count has been called, any time up to the announcement of the result. I suppose a call for the ayes and noes is in order, but I suppose it is against the parliamentary practice, after the President of the Convention has announced his decision, for any gentleman after that time to make a call for the ayes and noes. Having stated this much, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. FOLGER — I understand the President first announced the motion carried and then lost and then I immediately called for the ayes and noes, inasmuch as it appeared there was doubt in regard to the count, and it was uncertain and the proper mode of settling that was by recording the names as they were called. That was why I called for the ayes and noes and which I suppose were in order. It may be that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] is technically correct in his position that when an announcement is made by the Chair and the time has passed, it is too late to call for the ayes and noes, but there was evidently an uncertainty in the mind of the Chair as to the result. First he decided one way and then another, and then the appeal was made for the ayes and noes.

Mr. WEED — It seems to me there was no uncertainty in the result. The Chair simply misunderstood the Secretary —

Mr. AXTELL — I rise to a point of order. There is no appeal from the decision of the Chair, and discussing the decision of the Chair is out of order.

Mr. WEED — I simply suggest this. If this is to be the ruling, as I understand it, that after a vote has been declared, any one may call for the ayes and noes, I have no objection to it, but it seems to me it comes in the nature of a challenge of the count of the Secretary. The only way to arrive at the question whether the Secretary is right or not, is to call for tellers and appoint them and upon that no one should vote except those voting upon the first vote. The vote was declared by the Secretary, distinctly, 56 noes to 55 ayes. The President misunderstood it. The Secretary announced it right, but the President misunderstood it, and then the President announced the motion was lost, and after that announcement I admit the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], may challenge the count of the Secretary, but if he does it he must do it in a parliamentary way, and then tellers must be appointed, and none can vote but those who voted before.

Mr. CHURCH — I hope the Convention will acquiesce in the call for the ayes and noes in this case, but for the future government of the Convention the proper way is, we should have a correct rule at this time. I understand the parliamentary rule to be that, after the President has declared upon the count, and the question is carried or lost, it is too late then either to challenge the count or call for the ayes and noes. The count that is to be challenged and which is allowed to be challenged, is the count as announced by the Secretary of the Convention. It is too late to challenge that count after the President has adjudged upon it and declared it one way or the other, as I understand the parliamentary rule. But as there was some misapprehension about it, I trust the Convention will acquiesce in it and take the ayes and noes.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair supposes that statement of the rule to be correct.

Mr. DUGANNE — Will a motion now be in order?

The PRESIDENT — The Chair will determine that when he hears it.

Mr. DUGANNE — I move now that, in order to save time, a second count be had.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Duganne, and it was declared lost.

Mr. MERRITT — In order to test the sense of the Convention as to the time of making this report and commencing action upon it, I move a reconsideration of the last vote, and upon that I call the ayes and noes.

The PRESIDENT—What vote does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MERRITT—The one proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. GREELEY—I would inquire whether that would not throw the subject over until to-morrow? If so, I must object to it.

Mr. BARKER—I move that the committee take a vote on the subject to-morrow, and that Wednesday at 1 o'clock be inserted in place of 12 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. MERRITT—Do I understand there was objection made to my motion?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understood there was objection made.

Mr. GRANT—I hope this amendment will not prevail. As I understand, there are proposed a number of amendments to this report here, no one of which has had an opportunity of being heard in this Convention, and to-morrow at one o'clock is too short a time for that purpose. I am content that gentlemen should consider this report any number of hours on either day. I am content we shall have a morning session, a session at four o'clock, and another session at half-past seven o'clock, and that we shall so continue, and I hope that gentleman will not shut out the consideration of amendments that I deem more important than any that have yet been considered, and if we adopt to-morrow at twelve o'clock or one o'clock, we must recollect that we have but little more than a single day to consider perhaps four times the number of amendments that have already been considered during the past week in this Convention. If the time fixed should be Thursday at one o'clock, then we will have but two days, and if we finish the consideration of this report earlier than that, there is another report which may be considered in this Convention, and therefore, to give the movers of all amendments a fair opportunity within the short time of twenty minutes to advocate either of these amendments. I hope gentlemen of the Convention will not support this amendment, but allow the vote to be taken on Thursday, in accordance with the original motion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], as amended by the motion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks].

Mr. BELL—It is somewhat amusing to those who have been here on either day of the session for the last three weeks, to hear gentlemen who have absented themselves nearly the whole time, come up here and say we have not given consideration enough to this subject. I was hardly able to locate the gentleman, not having seen his face for a long time before he arose; why he complains we should give more time to the discussion of this subject. If the gentleman will look back at his files, if he has not heard it personally, he will see that this report was introduced the latter part of June, and it has been before the Convention constantly ever since, to the exclusion of nearly every other business. Now, sir, it is time we should arrive at something. I have been, as an individual, in favor of the largest liberty and the largest latitude possible in debate, and have moved for extra sessions, and arose in my place day after day to obtain a session of this Convention on the evening of each day, that we might have an opportunity to hear the subject fully discussed, giving gentlemen an opportunity to display their oratory here to their fullest extent. But the time has arrived when we must take some action on these propositions, and I think we should now take the earliest opportunity possible to do so, and I am entirely in favor of to-morrow at 12 o'clock as proposed by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker]. Should we pass this matter over until Tuesday, these gentlemen will leave us without a quorum in all probability on Friday and Saturday, and it will go over till next week, and so on till the next week, and there is no knowing, unless we fix sometime now, when a vote may be had on this proposition. The resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is sufficiently liberal to afford any gentleman who chooses to get up here and talk five minutes on this question, and certainly the time has arrived when we do not want any more of these two hours or even twenty minute speeches. The time for long speaking in my opinion has passed, and the time for work has arrived, and I hope the Convention are disposed now to take hold of this question and go at it manfully and fairly, and pass on some propositions to submit to the people and finish their labors as soon as they can conveniently.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I understand that the proposition now before the Convention looks to hastening the time of our action. It must be perfectly evident to every gentleman in the Convention who desires progress, that it is impossible to hasten action in this way. We have no previous question, and this question may be discussed indefinitely for at least three weeks; this very question before the Convention, just as long as gentlemen shall see fit to discuss it, it will last. I concur with the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] in the object he desires to accomplish, that it is to save time; but we have spent the regular session of two entire days, last week, in the discussion of the way how to do it. It resulted in the ascertainment of the way how not to do it, and this discussion this morning has nothing in the world in its results but the attempt to discover a way how not to do it. In the regular action of our Convention, as I wish to explain my action, I hope to-morrow, we shall reach a point at which we can obtain the previous question, and when a resolution of this kind comes before us, we can act upon it in some way with some limitation, and for the purpose of saving to-day for the discussion upon the subject that we are discussing in Committee of the Whole, I move to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. GREELEY called for the ayes and noes. A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. FOLGER—Does that take the whole question with it?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair so decided.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. M. I. Townsend, to lay on the table, and was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Baker, Barnard, Cassidy, Comstock, Conger, Hale, Lapham, Masten, Seymour, Smith, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Young—13.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Champlain, Cheritree, Chase-bro, Church, Cochran, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Daly, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eday, Ely, Eudress, Evans, Farnum, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Garvin, Gerry, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hiscock, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Hutchins, Krum, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, Maltice, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Root, Roy, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schunaker, Seaver, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, Van Cott, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Williams—114.

Mr. CHESBRO—I would like to inquire whether the motion made by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker], is an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley].

The PRESIDENT—It is.

Mr. SKYMOUR—A good deal of time has been occupied to day which would otherwise have been spent profitably in the committee, and there is a disposition to discuss some further proposition upon amendments which may be proposed, and I think that the time limited to twelve o'clock, will not give the time which is desirable. I therefore move three o'clock, for the purpose of giving the whole day to-morrow, that the committee may be in session, to this subject, and then when the committee shall rise and report to the Convention the report with the amendments which will be ready for consideration on Thursday.

Mr. LOEW—I think that it is about time that an end was put to this discussion. For more than two weeks we have listened to lengthy speeches on the suffrage question, and if the debate be continued for two weeks more, I do not think we will be any better able to decide the matter than we are at present. Every member of this Convention has doubtless made up his mind how he is going to vote, and I do not think that anything that can be said by any one will cause him to change it. Nor do I believe that any one who yet proposes to speak, has the remotest idea that any speech he may make, however able or eloquent it may be, will in the slightest degree affect the final result. Sir, the people are beginning to find fault. They have sent us here to do a great work, that of revising the fundamental law of the State, and, although we have been in session some six or seven weeks, we have not yet agreed on the first section. If we keep on at this rate, we will not get through during the present year. Sir, I for one am in favor of bringing this discussion to a close as speedily as possible; but inasmuch as several members desire to offer some very important amendments, I move as an amendment that we take final action on the report, to-morrow evening at 7 1-2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT—The chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Loew], that two amendments are pending.

Mr. LOEW—That has been accepted.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not understand the gentleman to accept the amendment.

Mr. BARKER—I do accept the amendment of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend].

Mr. LOEW—I move to-morrow evening at half-past seven, in place of three o'clock.

Mr. BARKER—I accept that.

Mr. WEED—Do I understand now that the latter portion of the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is still in this resolution?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands it makes one resolution.

The question was put on the amendment offered by Mr. Barker, and was declared carried.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—The time is now short during which these questions will be discussed in Committee of the Whole. The objection that was made to my amendment before, was that there might be an indefinite number of members that would avail themselves of the opportunity of speaking five minutes on each amendment. I propose, therefore, to limit it to two, inasmuch as all the amendments cannot now properly be discussed in the Committee of the Whole; there will not be time enough; it will be necessary that there should be some discussion of the questions, on the report being made when these amendments are offered, and I think it too much restriction to say one shall be heard for and one against each amendment, and he be limited to five minutes. I propose, therefore, to insert after the word "reply:" "And two members may be heard for and against each amendment, but no member shall be heard more than five minutes in such debate."

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Parker, which was declared carried.

The question then recurred upon the original resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. McDONALD called for the consideration of the resolution amending the rules, offered by him on Saturday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention will go each day into Committee of the Whole on any general or special order pending, one hour after it convenes, unless that order of business is reached before that time.

Mr. McDONALD—The object, I think, is very easily seen, simply to get at the real business of the Convention within an hour after we meet, and not spend more than an hour in discussion with regard to the order of other matters. It is a rule adopted in both Houses of Congress. They have what they call a morning hour, and then they proceed, if there is any special order pending, and immediately go into Committee of the Whole one hour after the hour of meeting.

Mr. DUGANNE—I offer a resolution as an amendment to that.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after Tuesday, July 30, the Convention will meet at 10 o'clock, A. M., and that it shall be its regular order of business to resolve into Committee of the Whole on any pending subject at 11 o'clock A. M., each day.

Mr. VERPLANCK—We have so little time left for the discussion of the important report of the Committee on Suffrage, that I ask whether it is best to take up and discuss these matters, which can be heard just as well any other day. We have agreed to come out of committee to-morrow at half-past seven. Therefore, not knowing the course I should take on this resolution, without intending any disrespect to the mover of it, I move that this whole subject do lie on the table.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Verplanck.

Which was declared carried.

Mr. HALE called for the consideration of the resolution heretofore offered by him providing for the appointment of a committee of seven to consider upon and report upon the mode of submission to the people, of the amendments to the Constitution that may be prepared by the Convention.

Mr. VERPLANCK—This is a resolution which will give rise to debate and I hope the Convention will be allowed to go into Committee of the Whole, and I move that this resolution lie on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Verplanck, which was declared carried.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN moved to recommit the report of the Committee on Suffrage, with instructions to amend by striking out section three and inserting the following:

"SECTION 3. Laws shall be made for ascertaining, when the citizen offers his vote at the election, by proper proofs, whether he is entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established."

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not deem this motion admissible at this time.

Mr. GREENEY—I move that this resolution do lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN—I rise to a point of order, that the subject of the report of the Committee on Suffrage is not now before the Convention, and this resolution is not in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair decides the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I move, sir, that the resolution lie on the table.

The resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. HADLEY—I move that all unfinished orders lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that motion is not admissible.

Mr. HADLEY—Then I move to lay the present order of business—being resolutions—on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hadley, and it was declared carried.

The Convention again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Oneida, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

Mr. SMITH—May I ask of the Chair if that amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr.

Curtis], was not acted on and disposed of last evening.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], that it having appeared there was no quorum, that vote goes for nothing.

Mr. FRANCIS—The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], in this discussion yesterday, announced himself in favor of submitting to the people as a separate constitutional proposition, the question of female suffrage. But he declined to say whether he was in favor of or opposed to the measure—he would simply submit the question to the people, and no farther did he or would he commit himself. But upon the question of abolishing the property qualification upon the suffrage of colored citizens, the gentleman urges a separate submission, and as I understand him, sustains the "Constitution as it is"—in other words, he would make the possession of property to the value of two hundred and fifty dollars, the test of a black man's manhood. Now, I disagree with my friend from Albany in both his positions. I would, sir, put nothing in the Constitution that I am not willing to support here and elsewhere, nor would I submit propositions to the people separately that I am opposed to directly. We came here, sir, to make such amendments of the Constitution as, in our opinion, will improve the fundamental law, promote substantial reform, and advance the best interests of the State. Why go beyond this line of duty, or, rather, outside of it, and make separate submission of questions that embody principles we are unwilling to support distinctly and unequivocally here? This, sir, it seems to me, would be a shirking of duty and responsibility. We were not sent here to ask the opinion of others, but to submit our own—not in fragments either, but as a symmetrical whole. Why submit the female suffrage question to the people separately? "To obtain the popular expression distinctly upon it," I am answered. Then why not make a separate submission of other questions as well—all other questions of proposed constitutional amendment? There is the question already suggested here of investing with the right of suffrage male citizens who have attained the age of eighteen years. At that age military duty is exacted of them, and it is claimed that they should have the right to vote. Why not have this question also separately submitted to the popular vote? Then, again, numbers of citizens—quite as many I think (though they may not be so outspoken) as favor female suffrage—believe that the property qualification, such as is now imposed upon colored voters, ought to be made general. I do not, sir, sanction the principle as applied to any class of voters; yet, as it has its supporters, why not submit the property test to the people for a distinct vote thereon? Why thus submit female suffrage when opposed to it, or non-committal on the question as the gentleman from Albany is, and refuse a like submission of property qualification for white voters as well as black? The advantage of this latter proposition would be uniformity and equality. It would be the consistent carrying out of the rule—"What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." For myself, sir, I do not accept the sauce at all, nor do I propose to offer it to others, either as a dish by itself or commingled with the rest as one. That is to say, I cannot for one consent to present constitutional propositions to the people to be voted on by them either separately or otherwise, that are opposed to my own conscientious convictions, and which my judgment condemns as wrong. No one here would think of submitting to the popular vote the question whether the Legislature should or should not be required to pass laws restoring imprisonment for debt, establishing the stocks and whipping-post, and requiring the flogging of the person with cat-o-nine-tails for even small crimes, as in the "good old days" of which some gentlemen speak so reverently, and which are so often referred to as furnishing infallible precedents for our guide in governmental affairs for ever more. And why not submit this question to the people as well as the twin relic of barbarism born of African slavery, and a disgrace to our day and age,—namely, the property qualification for colored voters?—a class proscription, a recognition of the doctrine that, not worth in manhood, but $250 worth of property makes the colored man fit to vote, and the want of it the fellow of an inferior race whom it would be dangerous to incorporate in our body politic, as introducing an element of political demoralization in our system of government, and as menacing society with the evils of miscegenation and all the horrors of social equality of blacks with whites! When my friend and colleague from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] suggested this idea of social equality as the possible if not probable result of manhood suffrage, the thought occurred to me whether the little barrier of two hundred and fifty dollars was all that now protects the integrity of our social system, and whether we had not reason to fear and tremble from the increasing number of black men who are acquiring the requisite freehold that enables them to vote, and so advance to social equality among us? Why, sir, a full score or more of these $250 black men cast their ballots for the gentleman himself in our city [Troy] to increase his flattering home vote as candidate for delegate at large to this Convention; and in view of the fact, I asked myself, is it possible my friend recognized these colored constituents as his social equals, or is he concerned lest their presence and vote at the polls may have contaminated society? No, no, Mr. Chairman, all the fine discourses we have listened to here on this subject—all the historical precedents and existing policies of other nations set forth in language so polished, and with adroitness so keen, by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], does not change or modify the practical question before us. We have black men among us, and we know what they are. We know they are just as well qualified to vote as other classes who enjoy that inestimable privilege; we know that $250 worth of property adds to their qualifications no more than it adds to the qualifications of white citizens; that it is no more a certificate of manhood for the one class than for the other. The just rule which the enlightenment of the age, the logic of events, the spirit of our regenerated republic, and the teachings of the best minds of the world enforce, is this: Equality before the law; equal privileges to all citizens at the ballot-box—or, as Jefferson expresses it: "Equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political." Then the question may be asked, Mr. Chairman, why withhold the right of suffrage from women? I answer, because woman has her duties, her sphere of life—wonderful it is and potent in its influences—and man has his in the rougher wrestling with the world and its grosser materialities. Let woman work out her mission in the beauty of holiness, at the sacred family altar and in the refinements of a purified society, and she will then most effectually wield the power that imparts virtue to manhood, integrity to political action, and justice to the administration of government. As I respect woman, as I appreciate her matchless graces, her loving, condescending, beautiful life, so would I protect her from the hurly-burly, the antagonisms and angry turmoils of political contests. We know what these contests are—how much of bitter passion they develop, how ambition moves in ways of trickery, and often downright fraud; how the freedom of speech is abused in the utterance of language we would not have our wives and daughters hear and become familiar with. We know, moreover, that a vast majority of the true and lovable women of the State—the refined, the intelligent and the good—do most earnestly reject this whole theory of so-called "women's rights," and their wish to be let alone should most certainly be respected. Polished in diction, compact and methodical in construction, powerful in logic, beautiful in imagery, keen in satire, and wonderful in oratorical effect, the great speech of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] in favor of extending the right of suffrage to women, still failed to convince me of the desirability or justice of the measure. The ready intuition and quick perceptions of the women themselves discover its impropriety, and their private verdict at home, where their power is, and where their love reigns supreme, is overwhelming against the proposed change that would expose them to the buffetings of the roughest partisanship and contact with the vilest elements of community. I yield to that verdict as in accordance with the laws of nature and the decrees of God, rather than to the powerful persuasions and captivating eloquence of my friend from Richmond. So upon the amendment proposed by him I shall vote No.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—In speaking on this question, sir, I have not the advantages of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. I have had no time to prepare myself with a written argument, and my few and imperfect words must compare but feebly with the beautiful oration which the gentleman delivered before us. But, sir, I hope, subject as I am to this very great disadvantage, that the remarks I may make may not wholly be without truth, that I may be able to say something on this subject which may commend itself to the minds of the gentlemen who may hear me. Now, sir, as I understand the disposition of the majority of the members of this Convention, they are determined on the one hand to concede to negroes the exercise of the elective franchise, and I believe that on the other hand they are of the opinion that the exercise of that franchise should not be conceded to women. They have, therefore, to travel a narrow, but yet, I believe, well-defined path, and it is their duty to show some reason why on the one hand the elective franchise should be conceded to the one and why it should be denied to the other. Now, sir, before going farther on this question, it seems to me proper to restate what I believe to be the true grounds on which the whole theory of the elective franchise rests. I believe it can be shown, as I stated before in another connection, that it rests first on the nature of society, and that society itself is given to us by the will of God; and that, therefore, we have the right to perpetuate the existence of society. But we must not exercise this power or right arbitrarily. It is the duty of statesmanship to exercise the power given to us in some reasonable manner. There are two reasonable grounds upon which we can refuse the elective franchise, one that of personal incapacity, and the other on the ground that the exercise of it—admitting personal capacity—will tend to the injury of the State. Now, sir, I do not choose to rest the refusal of this right to women on the ground of personal incapacity. I believe there are several requisites which on a former occasion I mentioned, and which are, in my judgment, necessary. Intelligence, independence, integrity, interest, and membership or identification with the mass of society. It has been said on this floor that woman does not have the interest that she ought to have in this class of questions. But it does not seem to me that is a serious objection. I believe that interest will come if she is permitted to vote. I believe that many women who would repudiate the franchise and desire not to exercise it will, if it is given to them, feel that they must exercise it. If they are driven to that, if it is given to them by society, it must be exercised. Therefore, I do not feel the pressure of that argument, but what I do feel the pressure of is, I believe it would be injurious to society. Before I go further, I wish to say a word in reference to the position of the honorable gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. He said that as each person in society had the right to life, liberty, and the other conceded rights, such person had a natural right to the means of defense of those conceded rights. Therefore, he argued, that such person should have the elective franchise. But, sir, on that point I cannot agree with him. While I would concede that any person may have the right to exercise those means of defense which nature gives him, I do not concede that he has the inherent right to exercise those means of defense that society gives him. Society gives him the elective franchise, but at the same time it gives it to him, it dictates the terms on which it shall be exercised, dictates them reasonably, I admit, but still dictates them by saying they must be exercised in such a way as not to injure the State. We may, for illustration, state in regard to other departments the same thing. We say, for example, when a man exercises intellectual powers—than which none are more clearly his own—and produces a book, he has no right to publish that book or ask the aid of society in protecting him from infringement upon that publication, except upon the terms which society imposes. These, in our own country, are that after publishing it for a time exclusively he shall ultimately give up the work to the public. So we might show the same thing by means of other illustrations; but the point which I wish to make is simply this, that man has an inherent right only to the means of defense which nature gives him, but when he calls forth powers and the rights, which society provides, he must take these on the terms upon which society chooses to furnish them, and regulated, as I said, by reason. I now recur to my original position, that if one claims the elective franchise it must be claimed subject to those two great principles, that the person is not incapacitated personally for its exercise, and that such exercise would not cause any public danger. It seems to me that the great champion of this subject, John Stuart Mill, has thrown much unnecessary discredit on those who oppose the concession of the elective franchise to women, by saying that we class them with idiots and lunatics, and, therefore, that our action is derogatory to women. That argument seems to be fallacious, because I do not class them with idiots and lunatics on the ground of incapacity. I take two positions: on the first I exclude persons from the elective franchise on the ground of incapacity, and on the other I exclude them on the ground that the exercise of the franchise might endanger the State. I would place the exclusion of idiots and lunatics in the first class as being personally incapacitated, while I would place a refusal of the exercise of the elective franchise by women on entirely another ground—that of injury to the State. Therefore it is only confusing the mind to say that we place them in the same category, for I put them on entirely different grounds and reasons. What is this whole question of the elective franchise to women? If it were only the vote, if it were only, as the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] said, the dropping of a little piece of paper into a box it would be a very harmless thing, but that is not the whole of it. Those who act with the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], claim, sir, as we were told on this floor, by Mrs. Stanton and Miss Anthony, that when the elective franchise is given to women they will have other rights; they will have the right to hold office, they will have the right to go into all the employments of life. One of the ladies said here the other day, that if woman had the elective franchise she would force her way into a law school that she named, so that young ladies should be entitled to attend that institution. That is not altogether a new idea, for in the old law school of Bologna there was a certain female professor, and I believe more than one, who lectured to crowds of males, but she took the precaution before lecturing to place a curtain before her face for fear the "benefit of her teachings would be impaired by that more subtle doctrine which Shakespeare tells us is drawn from woman's eyes. I respect that ancient lady, sir, whose modest figure is somewhat veiled by the dimness of antiquity. Why, sir, if we admit this exercise of the franchise we are substantially told that the ladies shall wrangle at the bar, shout in the auction room, speculate at the Bourse, and be present at the bickerings of the gold room. It is to such an entertainment as this, sir, that we are invited. There will be no door to office so concealed or so jealously guarded upon which there will not be the gentle but peremptory knock of woman, and if there is any demur or hesitation in opening it, we shall hear the quiet but decisive "why not?" so effectively urged by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. We are asked who is to judge in regard to this, who is to say that woman is to be excluded from the franchise? It is this Convention which is to determine. We are here acting under the delegated power of the people of the State of New York who have the elective franchise. They have conceded the power to us to decide this question, and we are now authorized to pass upon it, not arbitrarily, as I have said, but in the exercise of reason. Now, sir, I come to the true objections to the exercise of the elective franchise by women. I make only two of them: the first one is, that I fear its exercise will cause deterioration of the individual woman; and the second one is, that I fear that it will cause injury to the family. On these points I hesitate, and to hesitate is to refuse. In regard to the deterioration of individual women I have this to say: I am one of those who believe that the Creator has made a distinction, a clear and marked distinction, between the duties of man and woman, and has assigned public duties to the man, and private duties to the woman. I believe in the distinction between the sexes, because I see it in nature, because I have studied it in the child. The distinction between the sexes are more marked as the child advances in years, until full manhood and womanhood are reached, when I seek to study such differences in their perfection. No person has marked this more clearly than the German poet Schiller, and I wish I had the literary ability of the gentleman from Richmond, so that I could turn the verses of Schiller into the melodies of English verse. He describes the distinctions in question by alternate verses. These differ in construction. When he is speaking of woman the verse is all melody; when he is speaking of man the stanzas change, and become rough and harsh, and thus he alternates from one verse to the other. He says, in the translation of another, which but inadequately expresses the vigor and beauty of the original:

Honored be woman, to her it is given
To twine with our life the bright roses of heaven;
"Tis her's to be weaving affection's sweet bond;
Beneath the chaste veil she loves to retire,
And nourish in silence the holy fire
That burns in a bosom faithful and fond.

Far beyond truth's simple dwelling
Man's wild spirit loves to sweep;
And his heart is ever swelling,
Tossed on passion's stormy deep.
To the distant good aspiring,
There is still no place for him;
Through the very scare, untiring,
He pursues his dazzling dream.

But woman's mild glance, like a charm, overtakes him,
And from his visions of wandering wakes him,
Warning him back to the present, to flee.
In the mother's still cot her enjoyment
Finds she in modest & quiet employment;
Faithful daughter of nature is she.

Fierce is man's unending strife;—
He, beneath ambition's goad,
Madly rushes on through life
Without rest or fixed abode.
Now creating—now undoing—
No repose his wishes know;
Like the Hydra's heads renewing,
Still they wither, still they grow.

But woman, contented, enjoys every hour;
She plucks from each moment that passes, the flower,
And fondly guards it with tender care;
Her bounden duties are all her pleasures;
Richer than man in memory's treasures
Roves she through Poesy's endless sphere.

Under man's despotic sway,
"Might makes right," is still the word;
Persia's monarch must obey,
Silenced by the Scythian sword.
Self-conflicting passion wages
In his breast a hateful war;
While hoarse discord rages and rages,
Modesty is seen no more.

But woman, with soft, persuasive power,
When in her turn, she rules the hour,
Quenches the fires that burn to destroy;
Teaches the powers, forever contending,
In peace and harmony now to be blending—
Old foes to be mingling in love and joy.

Thus he marks in his verse the inherent and peculiar distinction between man and the woman, as no one could have done but a poet, with the true insight of Schiller. What I fear is, that if the elective franchise is conceded to woman, as well as the ability to hold office and fill all the employments of life, this natural and clear distinction of duties will, in a measure, be overborne. In time, woman might deteriorate, be less perfect, and the progress of civilization be in a measure arrested. I do not exclude woman from the franchise for any reason except my earnest and deep regard for her, and my strong desire to do nothing which will tend to her injury. The fears which I have expressed may not be justified; it is impossible to decide in advance. The experiment may prove successful in some state of society different from our own. The State of New York is, in my opinion, not the place to make the trial of so dangerous an experiment. Rather let it be tried, if it must be, in some remote State of the Union, where there is more simplicity of manner, less luxury, and where a failure would not prove so completely disastrous. Whenever I shall clearly see that the exercise of the franchise does not injuriously affect female character, I shall no longer oppose it on this ground. But at present my better judgment is adverse to the concession. I would like to dwell upon this question more at length, but I am admonished that my time is rapidly passing, and I must proceed to the next point, injury to the family. I wish to say a word in regard to the original institution of the family, and in its relation to society. That subject has been very thoroughly studied and examined by a recent writer, Dr. Maine, who has written a well-known work which has placed him high among the philosophers and students of ancient law. He has shown us in that masterly work the origin of society. He has treated the subject historically, and shows that the origin of society depends upon the aggregations of families; that the family was the unit in ancient society, as the individual is the unit in society to-day, that from families the aggregation finally came to tribes and from tribes to nations. That each one of those families was a corporation in itself. So that the intercourse between ancient families was like the intercourse between corporations and little sovereignties. As society was in that condition the father had absolute power over the children, the husband had absolute power over the wife, for the reason that the wife was considered, under the ancient law, as a daughter of the family and therefore the father [paterfamilias] had control not only over the children but over the wife. But by a fiction of the Roman law it came to be established that the wife was not to be regarded truly as a wife, she was simply "deposited" by or as we say there was a bailment by the relatives of the wife to the husband, the consequence of which was that the husband lost his control over the wife and it remained with her relatives, who practically did not exercise it. Under the later Roman laws she thus became absolutely independent. While affairs were in that condition and the wife had thus become emancipated from the husband by a fiction of the Roman law, christianity came. What did christianity seek to do? Paying no attention to the mere physical control which the husband anciently had over the wife, it sought to reinstate the moral control of the marriage relation. We find therefore the teachings of christianity in direct opposition to the independence which the wife gained by the Roman law prevailing at the time in which christianity came into the earth, and therefore it would be, this author tells us, in direct opposition to this spirit of christianity that we should give the woman absolute personal freedom. Let me read a passage from this author, and I have but to say that no writer stands higher as authority on this subject than he, for no man has studied ancient law more thoroughly and more in the spirit of philosophy.

"No society which preserves any tincture of christian institution is likely to restore to married women the personal liberty conferred on them by the middle Roman law."

After christianity had thus laid down its principles, the canon law came. In the course of the progress of the church, canon law took up this subject of the rights of married women. What did it do? It established the disabilities of married women to hold property. That is derived from the church law, from the canon law. The advocates of the rights of married women endeavor to confuse these two points and say that because you gave married women proprietary rights, therefore you must necessarily make them absolutely free. But there is a clear difference between the two cases. This author goes on to say:

"But the proprietary disabilities of married females stand on quite a different basis from their personal incapacities, and it is by the tendency of their doctrines to keep alive and consolidate the former, that the expositors of the canon law have deeply injured civilization."

We may remove these proprietary disabilities, as has been done in New York and elsewhere; we may heal the wound which civilization has sustained by reason of the denial to married women of the rights to hold their property separate and apart from that of their husbands, and yet inflexibly maintain the public official incapacities of woman. It is the family as organized by christianity which I seek to uphold. I have no low idea of the inferiority of woman to man. I assert her equality, and, in some respects her superiority. I must insist, however, that she is inherently and essentially different. Her part in the family is allotted to her by reason of an irreversible law. The old society has gone with its artificial arrangements, its family sovereignties, its corporate fictions, but in the modern family lies hidden, as truly as in the ancient, the germ of the State. By it are trained the citizens who sustain society; without its reproductive power social life would be feeble, if not extinct. The part which woman sustains in it is vital; the functions which she fulfills cannot be carried on by man. I have no time to argue this point; scarcely a moment in which to state it. I fear that the suffrage and its accompaniments would take away woman from her noble and necessary duties in the family; if it would not do that, that her interest would be divided or lessened, her power as the great educator in the family would be diminished if not gone. Such a result would be deprecated not only by the philanthropists, but by the statesmen. It may be that this result would not follow; to a certain extent the effect of suffrage is a matter of conjecture. The consequences which I have depicted are, however, possible and natural; they would be expected in the ordinary course of events. It would be of no advantage to open to woman the avenues to office and general employments unless she sought to use them; and in that case experience teaches us that her refinement, delicacy and modesty would suffer, and an undivided attention to family affairs could not be maintained. I am aware that many women of intellect murmur at the monotony of life in the family. Its sameness begets weariness and perhaps inspires disgust. They, as well as we, long for the excitements of the rostrum and for a place in the public councils. They regard their life as worthless, because it is unpretending and quiet; they cannot bear to sustain "the sacred primal sorrow of their sex." To such as these I commend the beautiful fable of Jean Paul, who tells us that the leaves once boasted over the blossoms, because while the latter fell in the early spring time, they remained growing thicker and stronger, till at the end of the summer they were swept away by the storm. But the answer of the blossoms was we remained till our work was done; without us there had been no fruits, which it was only your functions to shade and support. As the leaves have no cause to boast over the blossoms, so man has no cause to boast over the woman; each has a distinct and glorious work to do, and in the name of society and christianity let them do it, with gladness and singleness of heart. I have spoken in this connection only of married women. The argument, however, includes unmarried, as it would be impossible in practice to draw a distinction between them, as nearly all are destined at some time to have control or influence in the family. It may be said that after all, woman, though she has the suffrage, may not hold office and fill general employments, and that all these fears are unfounded. The answer is that they probably will, and that the tendency of the suffrage is in that direction. There would be no call for it except on that ground, and all its advocates in this country, as far as I know, connect with the demand for suffrage the claim to hold office and the like. The friends of female suffrage claim it on these grounds: that the denial of it is degrading; that its possession would educate women in political duties and thus make them more worthy companions of intelligent men; that the ballot would protect woman in her person and property; that taxation and representation should go together, and that she would thus be secured better wages, as well as opportunities for employment. They also insist that her presence at the elections would be of use to the State in the improvement of the laws. In regard to the first of these claims, I have already made some remarks. There is no degradation because the objects for which the exclusion is made is protection to woman and the State. In respect to the second, I admit that it has force. It were well that women were acquainted with political affairs. In this way she could exercise a most effective influence without the ballot. It may, perhaps, be doubted whether the mere gift of the suffrage has much effect in that direction. Political education depends on other causes. But giving its fullest force to the argument, I would not sacrifice other and more positive advantages to gain this single good. I would not produce an evil effect upon society in order to educate women in political affairs. To the claim that the ballot would protect woman in her person and property, I reply that it is not needed here for that purpose. I marvel when I read John Stuart Mill's argument in the House of Commons to perceive that he advocates the ballots to protect women from the personal abuse of brutal husbands. I unhesitatingly assert that it cannot be asked for here on any such ground. I know not how, if woman made all the laws, she could protect herself any more fully than she is guarded at present. The Legislature are swift to grant her proprietary rights in the most full and ample manner. Not a year passes without some advance in that direction. I shrewdly suspect that if the women had the power, they would relieve us from some of the "disabilities" under which we now labor. But the women want a guaranty that these privileges shall continue. They can have no better guaranty than the advancing civilization of the day, which makes a retrograde step impossible. Without this with a society returning toward barbarism, the ballot in woman's hands would be no protection. But it is said that taxation and representation should go together, and if a woman is taxed she ought to vote. This is but a futile argument. It is instantly refuted by asking, Why? All the passive persons in society may own property, but that does not give them the right to vote. The question still recurs, is there any good reason for the exclusion from the suffrage, and the question of property has nothing to do with the exercise of the franchise. If it depended upon that, life would be subordinate "to meat, and the body to raiment." No person who claims the suffrage need ever rest his claims on the ground of the payment of taxes. Such payment may tend to show that he has one or more of the qualifications of a voter, such as interest in society, or identification with it, but nothing more. He may be taxed, and still be properly excluded, if the other grounds of suffrage are absent. This notion of the connection between taxation and representation is a bequest of the middle ages, and does not belong to the American system, which puts the suffrage upon permanent grounds of reason, and not on those which are fluctuating and arbitrary. Finally, woman wants the ballot to give her occupation and remunerative wages. I mourn that her avenues to employment are so few, and the wages are so unremunerative. But can this evil be remedied by legislation? Will not wages and employment follow the great law of supply and demand? The true friends of woman are those who invite her to a larger and broader style of education; who ask her to submit to the training and self-sacrifice necessary to fit her for high employment. The way to eminence is a thorny road, alike for men and women, and although it is unjust and illiberal to exclude her from many employments which she might worthily fill, yet it is true that remunerative occupations are quite abundant for those who possess a high degree of skill. The great difficulty at the present moment is the superabundance of unskilled labor, which of necessity commands a low price. This price does not depend on the fact that the employee is a woman, but rather on the ground that the labor market is overstocked by persons of a low degree of skill. Women who are eminent in song or tragedy, or literary composition, are most liberally paid. Women who are untrained and unskilled, cannot evade the inexorable law, that in the long run a commodity will sell for no more than it is worth. If they are permitted to compete with men in all the employments of life, the laws of trade and commerce would demand that they must submit to the same training as men, and attain the same mechanical excellence to command the same wages. Why not submit to that training now? It may be said that many cannot do that? But would the ballot change the matter. I believe not. We are beginning to expect too much of the suffrage and of legislation, and in time we shall be undeceived. If the disposition could be generally aroused in the female mind to submit to the necessary labor, trade itself would demand that her skill should not remain unemployed. I, however, hope that public opinion will force men to abandon some occupations for which they are unfitted, and to which women are specially adapted. Finally, the suffrage is claimed on the general ground that the participation of women in public affairs would be advantageous to the State. This again is purely matter of conjecture. I should think such a result quite doubtful. It would appear to me that with her more impulsive nature there would be less steadiness of movement in the government, and frequent and violent changes of policy. Politics, I apprehend, would tend to the impracticable, and as it is eminently a practical science, and often depends upon a balancing of probabilities, I fear that it would retrograde rather than advance. All this might happen with the utmost good intention on the part of the female voters. It is possible that there would be more purity of administration, but that is not clear; for, in many instances, the artful, scheming and unprincipled would hold the reins of power. It is said that queens often rule well, but this remark is not quite satisfactory, as in some, if not all, of the instances named, other influences have had a controlling effect on the administration of the government. On the whole, I do not see sufficient reasons why the existing order of things should be disturbed, and women admitted to the elective franchise. I only regret that the brief period allowed to me prevents a more extended discussion of the subject.

Mr. DALY—Mr. Chairmau, I have a few observations to make upon this particular branch of the subject, and my remarks will be chiefly confined to the argument of the eloquent gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], for the reason that I was not present yesterday or yesterday evening during the continuance of the debate. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], as I understood him, did not claim that suffrage was a natural right. But, assuming it to be a political privilege, he insists that women are entitled to the free exercise of it, because upon them are imposed the duties of government. "I deny," he said, "that those who have the suffrage have the right to exclude woman from that power and influence which she would exercise by the use of it for her own protection. "Wheu," he asks, "was it established or ordained that man was to be the representative of woman in government? When was that choice made?" I answer, it was made by her Creator when He established the natural distinction which exists between the two sexes. It was made when that act took place which is recorded in these words in the sacred volume: "And the rib which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman and brought her unto the man;" and if the gentleman should not, like some of the advocates of this doctrine, attach much weight to this passage in Genesis, then I answer it has been ordained, with a few rude exceptions, by the practice hitherto of all mankind, of all nations great or small, of all religions, christian or pagan, of all societies, savage or civilized, which is the highest evidence of an ordained and universal law that can be addressed to the human reason. The gentleman says that because a thing has existed hitherto, that is no reason why it should continue to exist. This may be very true Mr. Chairman, with regard to the peculiar laws, usages, or customs of any one particular people, but when he asks us to change a universal law that has prevailed in all quarters of the globe, and so far as we know, from the beginning of society, the reasons must be irresistible which warrant such a change, and I propose briefly to consider those which he has presented. His first and general reason is that government is maintained over woman without her known or expressed consent, as she has no participation in it; and he refers to the fallacious maxim in the Declaration of Independence, that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." I have one answer to this objection. The gentleman and myself were among those who agreed in the beginning that the government of the United States was justified in putting down the rebellion, and we lent our best efforts to the accomplishment of that work. If this fallacious maxim of the Declaration of Independence is true, in what position does he and I stand? Did not the Southern States, by the exercise of the franchise and through representative conventions, every one of them, vote themselves out of the Union? Relying on this doctrine, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, did they not deliberately repudiate the government of the United States and establish a government for themselves and with a unanimity unexampled in the history of civil war did they not wage a bloody struggle for four years to maintain it. What was our answer to their doctrine? That government when once established is an integral thing, no part of which can be severed unless by successful revolution, and that if they had the right to attempt that, we had an equal right to prevent it. I cite this, the most memorable instance of modern times, to show that government may be rightfully and justly maintained without the consent of those who are governed. The gentleman says that suffrage is necessary for woman's security and protection. I answer that she has a security and protection in the tenderness which the father feels for the daughter, in the affection which the husband bears toward the woman he has selected for his companion in life, and in that deep-seated feeling which every man, who is a man, feels for the mother who bore him. She has in this a security higher than all human laws. Her interests, be she daughter, wife or mother, are so inseparably interwoven with that of man's, that in guarding her interests he but guards his own. The gentleman tells us that it is a mere assumption, that the interest and affection of men in women will lead them to legislate wisely and justly for women. It is, he says, the old appeal in favor of power, this dependence upon the affections of man toward woman. It is old, sir, very old, as old as human nature, and will continue in all future time, unless human nature is changed. The gentleman is a poet, and I will take the liberty of quoting the utterance of the greatest of living poets, Tennyson, on that subject:

"The woman's cause is man's, they rise or sink Together, dwarfed or god-like, bond or free,
Not like to like, but like in difference.
Yet in the long years liker must they grow;
He gains in sweetness and in moral height,
She mental breadth, nor fall in childward care,
Nor lose the child-like in the larger mind,
Till at the last she eat herself to man,
Like perfect music unto noble words."

The gentleman tells us, Mr. Chairman, that men are not pure enough to govern women and that they are not governed rightfully. Of what do they complain? Have they not, at least in this State, as respects property, all that men have? Are they not man's social equal? If to the man is allotted, as more appropriate to his nature, the important duties that are connected with the management of the State, and the defense of it when in peril, to woman is confided the no less important duties that are connected with the development of the family. God has made them co-equal, Mr. Chairman, but he has made them different; different physically and intellectually. I say intellectually, for women have not been prominent in the higher achievements of the human intellect. No great discovery in the natural sciences ever has been made by woman; there have been no female Galileos, Keplers or Newtons. They have reached some distinction in the imitative arts and as musicians, but no woman has been a great musical composer, or a distinguished mathematician, and I am informed by a gentleman of the Convention that no woman's name is found to be recorded in the patent office as an inventor. This does not argue that she is inferior, but that she is different, for in other intellectual qualities and in her high moral purity she is superior to man. She is more acute. Her power lies not in deliberation, but in instantaneous perception. God has given her for her defense an intuitive knowledge of character, and she has a natural talent for intrigue. She is man's master in the knowledge of all the arts by which power and influence are exercised over him, while she is herself, at the same time, the slave of her affections. She differs from man physically because there are many avocations to which man is adapted from his coarser and stronger nature and for which women are unfitted by reason of their more delicate organization. The gentleman speaks of this doctrine of the exclusion of woman as a remnant of the middle ages. It is, sir. And allow me to say that it is to the feudal ages that we are especially indebted for the causes that led to the elevation of woman. To the home feeling engendered in the feudal castle, to the romantic institutions of chivalry, to the sentiments that prevailed in respect to woman's purity and chastity, and to the spiritualizing influence of christianity, we owe it that women were raised in the middle ages to a rank they had never occupied among the most advanced nations of antiquity. If we want to know what the condition of woman was in antiquity, we have only to look at the customs of the refined Athenians, of loaning their wives for short periods to their friends, as an act of friendship, and if, under the Roman Empire, we desire to know the position of woman, we may read it in the prurient pages of Juvenal, which invokes our astonishment that human society could have existed in such a state of festering corruption. The Saxons, a rude and coarse people, admitted women to a full participation in political privileges, and they sat with men in the general national council or wittenagemote. The more refined, and cultivated Normans restored woman to her true position—the real sphere of her influence—which she has since continued to occupy, as the co-worker and companion of man, in the advancement and civilization of the race. The gentleman says: "Should not a refined and cultivated woman be entitled to vote as well as the low political classes that now exercise the suffrage?" I ask, Mr. Chairman, are there no low classes of women? To admit women to vote would widen the area of the suffrage; but it would not change very materially the moral elements of which it is composed. As my time is short, I will hurry to a last observation, which to my mind is conclusive on this subject, and that is that the women of this State do not want this change, and I submit this proof of it. Miss Anthony, in an official report, made recently to a convention assembled at Brooklyn, laments that so little interest was taken in the subject that she could not get "more than six live women and men"—I use her own language—to interest themselves in the movement to influence this Convention. If that is the result of her labors, with her talents and those of her associates, we may infer that the women of this State have too much good sense and too thorough an appreciation of their true position and present influence to desire to plunge into politics with its publicity, passions and corrupting influences. I claim the attention of the committee for one minute longer upon another subject; simply to correct some matters of fact in respect to the pauper vote of New York. It will be remembered that the gentleman from Reusselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] computed the pauper vote of the city of New York to be fifteen thousand annually, including those who are inmates of the almshouse and those who receive out-door relief. These, Mr. Chairman, are the facts. I take them from the last year's report of the Commissioners of Charities and Corrections, I select from the report the monthly statement ending on Oct. 6, 1866, that being the nearest month to the election in that year. There were on that day in the almshouse of the city of New York 554 men, 501 women, 67 girls and 75 boys, making in all 1187, and out-door relief was administered during that month to 811 families. With regard to this out-door relief, which consists of the small pittance of fifty cents a week, it is rarely, if ever, given to men, but almost exclusively to poor widows with small children; and with regard to the 554 men in the almshouse, they are not all citizens and the bulk of them are so infirm and decrepid, that in my judgment, if that be a fair estimate of them in ordinary periods, and it seems to be so for a period of seven years, not more than 100 would be able to leave the almshouse for the purpose of voting. I beg leave to state also, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] was right and I was wrong, in regard to the particular date of the occasion to which he referred, in which paupers were used in a Congressional election—it was in 1846, not in 1842. That, however, was twenty years ago. Nothing of the kind has occurred since, and as evidence of it I beg leave to send up to the Secretary, and to request him to read a communication on this subject from the commissioners of charities and corrections in the city of New York, showing that no pauper has voted in that city for many years. I have only one more statement to make, and that is in answer to a question of the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] in regard to the increase of naturalization in New York at the last election. I do not know that the increase was as great as he states—equal to the three preceding years—but it was very large, and the reason was this: under the law passed by the Legislature, all naturalized citizens were required to produce their papers, and minors who under the act of Congress of 1802 were naturalized by the naturalization of their parents, were required to produce their father's certificates. In a large number of cases this was impossible, and the parties had to be naturalized over again. In addition to this, by an act of Congress, all men who had served one year in the war were entitled to naturalization; and it may be gratifying to this Convention to know, that the number of alien soldiers who were naturalized during that period in my court were very great. I should think the alien soldiers and minors who were thus naturalized were very nearly equal to one half of all who presented themselves. These two causes were the chief ones in making the naturalization so much larger than in any of the years preceding.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the document referred to by Mr. Daly, in words as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC CHARITIES AND CORRECTION,
No. 1 Bond street, near Broadway,
NEW YORK, July 15, 1867.

Wm. Charles P. Daly:

Sir—The undersigned, on behalf and by instruction of the commissioners of public charities, respectfully deny the allegations understood to have been made, that the inmates of the almshouses of the city of New York, by their authority, have been permitted to vote at public elections.

In no instance have paupers voted to the knowledge of the board, nor has it consented to the discharge of paupers from the almshouse for such purpose by them, collectively or individually; but, on the contrary, they have forbidden the warden to dismiss or grant permits for leave on the eve of election.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAS B. NICHOLSON, President.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Mr. Chairman, I had designed to make some remarks on the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] and therefore made some preparations in reference thereto, but under the twenty minute rule of the Convention I have been obliged to change the order in which I desired to present that question. I shall therefore, content myself with merely stating some questions to this Convention. It is very well known that many questions are answered by merely having a clear statement of the case, that many questions, simple enough of solution, are found difficult by many to solve by reason of the manner in which the questions are stated. I, therefore, with the indulgence of the committee, will submit a few ideas in regard to this question. In the first place, the science of government is the highest of all sciences, because it secures the benefit of all other sciences. Its necessity is found in the inherent natural qualities and essential characteristics of man. Growing out of these it becomes an indispensable and imperative necessity to establish governments, employing such agencies, with such adequate and necessary powers, as will provide for the free, secure and peaceful enjoyment of all the rights of man. If society met the highest ideal of perfection, no laws or rules would be necessary. But we are not living in that age of harmony when the lion and lamb shall lie down together and the lion eat straw like an ox, with a little child to lead them, but we, as all our ancestors, are controlled by sterner necessities. The prime or first necessities of government are exceedingly simple: 1. Laws or rules. 2. An executive or power lodged somewhere for their enforcement. 3. Judges or persons to determine as to the true intent and meaning, as well as the application of the laws. This brings us to the point who shall determine as to who shall make the laws, or what they may or shall be, by whom and in what manner enforced. Shall or can the laws be made by the whole body politic—men, women and children? It is impossible. Therefore, it becomes necessary to choose or select out from among the people persons to represent or to be in their place and stead, to make, to adjudge, to execute. The question is, who shall have and exercise that right of choice? By common and oft repeated consent, express and implied, the adult men of the State have exercised this privilege. I ask if there is any reason why this rule should be changed? Does the experience of the past prove that this privilege has been unwisely exercised. I affirm as a whole, the privilege has been wisely used. The laws have been equal and equitable, the adjudication has been wise and just, the execution moderate and salutary. No man, woman or child can stand before us and successfully controvert this affirmation. If such is the fact, is it wise or expedient to make any change in these provisions in regard to woman? The reason and good sense of this Convention answers no. And this decision will have the force and power that all decisions have which are founded in reason, common sense and the highest expediency, which alone gives security, sanction and rest. The demonstrations of experience, the wisdom that grows out of experience, the history of the past—these are our land marks—these are the considerations which should influence us. It may be expedient to notice some of the incidental questions growing out of this question, though not pertinent to the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. I refer to some of the social evils under which women are laboring, and to the evils they propose to remove and remedy. I cannot pass without referring to them, and especially in regard to the inmates of these terrible dens in all the cities. They say that by virtue of the law, by virtue of unfair discriminations by the male population of the State, these women are forced into these dens. The Rev. Mr. May says it is literally impossible for those women to make a living without submitting to prostitution. Mr. Chairman, in the name of the women I protest against such a libel. It is a falsehood. Sir, the voice that is raised here must resound upon all the hills and valleys of the State. I will venture to say that this difficulty is to be overcome in another way. The people of the State ought to recognize this state of society, that if the women were properly educated, if they were taught to be useful and were taught to remember that the place of woman is at home, that the domestic relations, the family relations which God has so wisely ordained for her sphere in which she must walk, if they were taught the duties that grow out of these relations, to be useful, and not to soar too high, but gently to walk in the paths of usefulness, if they were taught lessons in the kitchen, from the cellar to the garret, if they were taught and impressed with the necessity of being useful, then the difficulty would be reached and removed. But, instead of that, they are taught to neglect and overlook these things, and to seek to be appreciated, to be petted and fondled, and not to lead useful lives. In the name of the women of this State, I protest against such an assumption, and I refer the gentleman back to them if the statement I make in regard to the evil and remedy is not true. Therefore we must speak out here, so that the women of the State may not be deceived, that they may not be misled by not understanding this question, so that the influences of this debate shall not be lost upon our constituency, and upon the homes which we represent, and the families whose interests are committed to our care.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Under the rigid rule which has been laid down by the Convention limiting the discussion to twenty minutes, it is impossible either to deliberate with propriety upon the amendment which has been introduced by my colleague from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], or upon the main and material question which is before this Convention in regard to colored suffrage. Sir, we were met here, some six or eight weeks ago, with the intimation from the author of this report, and from other gentlemen (a most unjust intimation I regard it) that there was a disposition on the part of the minority of this Convention to forego all action upon the Constitution itself, or, in other words, they were opposed to any material amendments to the Constitution. Sir, I was one of those who were opposed to calling a Convention for the amendment of the Constitution. I regarded the time as unsuited, and I believed the public mind to be in that disturbed state, that disqualified it to enter into the consideration of the great questions growing out of a new Constitution, or to consider such amendments to the existing Constitution as would enable us to deliberate with becoming judgment upon so important a subject. But the Convention having been called, I wish to say here for myself, and I believe for every member of the minority, that there was, and there is, a disposition so to amend the existing Constitution, as will make it acceptable to the great body of the people—so to amend it as the result will be a great improvement upon the Constitution as it exists. Sir, this is my purpose. And it is for this more perhaps than for anything else, that I have regretted to see on the part of the majority of this body a purpose so to attach a great provision—the provision, perhaps, for which the Convention was convened—to the body of the Constitution—I mean, of course, that which relates to colored suffrage, a purpose so to deliberate, and so to decide upon their action as will probably prevent the people from voting effectively upon other and great amendments in the Constitution itself. Sir, I have been said by two gentlemen of this body, one from Onondaga, and I believe the other a man from Rensselaer [Mr. M. L. Townsend], that this Convention will embody the negro suffrage provision in the body of the Constitution itself. Sir, the word "will" is but another word for "SHALL;" and in a deliberative body like this, although the power is supreme on the part of the majority to do what they will, I hope, sir, upon more mature judgment, they will deem it unwise to carry out that purpose. Sir, I live in one of the smallest counties in the State. My business is in the great commercial emporium of the State. I see, as every gentleman in that great city sees, enormous evils growing out of the administration of the government. I see abuses which have been done there by the Legislature; I see there, indeed, the Legislature itself, in the exercise of excessive legislative power for the city of New York, and desire that such amendments may be submitted to the Constitution as will enable the people here and everywhere, to act in reference to these abuses. I desire to secure their reformation without bringing in any questions connected with colored suffrage. I know that there are thousands—I do not know it of my own knowledge but it is a subject of observation from what I have read, and from what I hear—in the dominant party of this State, who do not mean to vote for colored suffrage, and if you insist upon attaching this provision to the Constitution, you exclude not only it, but all the material improvements and amendments which may be incorporated into the body of the Constitution itself.

Mr. McDONALD—I rise to a point of order, that the question of separate submission is out of order, not being before the Convention, having been passed upon, and on account of the adoption of the resolution proposed by Mr. Graves.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] is proceeding in order.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Sir, I hope when the gentleman has had a little more experience than he now has in regard to legislative bodies, he will know that there is something of permission and something of acquiescence in the discussion of questions in Committee of the Whole, which are not common when the question is before the Convention. Otherwise, no opportunity would be afforded to gentlemen to deliberate upon any of these questions in a proper and becoming manner.

Mr. HUTCHINS—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. E. BROOKS—If it is not to be taken out of my time, certainly; if it is, no. I will answer the questions if the time lost in answering them is not taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it will have to come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Now, Mr. Chairman, the question the gentleman wanted to put to me, is whether I speak for the democratic party. No, sir, I speak for myself, and no one else. I am not assuming as to speak for that party, or any large number connected with it. I say I desire to have this Constitution improved and adopted, and it

stead of being cowardly, as has been suggested by various gentlemen on this floor, I urge that this question be presented upon its own merits; it seems to me that if there is any cowardice in it, it is on the part of those gentlemen who refuse to unfold their banner to the breeze, who in the State are in the majority, who can act independently in this case; who have made it the shibboleth of their faith and who should be ready to stand or fall by it. Let it be presented in that aspect to the people and let them vote yea or nay upon it. That is my judgment as to what is best to be done to secure colored suffrage in this State to the negro. Now, sir, we hope to have improvements in the administration of the canals, and we hope for improvements in the administration of the finances of the State, and when we speak of the administration of the finances of the State of New York, we speak for a great body of the people of the United States, for about one fifth of the entire taxes of this Government are imposed upon the people of the State of New York. Sir, when the Federal government collects in one year five hundred and eighty millions of Federal revenue from the people of the United States—a tax one hundred millions beyond all that is imposed by the government of Great Britain upon the people of Great Britain, and when it imposes a tax of one hundred and ninety millions more than all the taxes imposed upon the people of France by the government of France; and when you, Mr. Chairman, will remember that the property capable of taxation by the government of Great Britain is equal to forty thousand millions of dollars, and in France equal to thirty-six thousand millions of dollars, and that in the United States these means are reduced to the small amount of sixteen thousand millions of dollars, for all real and personal property, you will behold in this extraordinary fact, the oppressive system of taxation imposed upon the people of the United States. With this small comparative property we endure, as I have said, a tax equal in its federal demands to five hundred and eighty millions of dollars, with no corresponding amount in the governments I have named. Sixteen thousand articles are taxed by the federal government, which every man feels in all he eats, and drinks, and wears, and consumes, which is a part of himself, and with but eighty-two articles taxed in Great Britain. And this, sir, is one of the questions which addresses itself to every member of the Convention as well as to those who have charge of our great question of internal improvements. I wish to see the finances of this State improved; I wish to see the city governments improved, and especially that the canals should be wisely regulated, so that there may be a great deal less of stealth, so that there shall be a greater performance of public duty for a smaller amount of money. And it is for these reasons, among a great many others which I have not the time to enumerate, that I desire to see the mind and temper of this Convention concentrated upon these great material questions connected with the happiness and prosperity of the people of the State. This question of franchise to some seven or ten thousand colored persons should not be identified with them nor made to supersede them

I do not wish to see a proposition, like this of colored suffrage, harnessed like Mazeppa, to his horse, for, while you overthrow the horse, you will at the same time do the greatest injury, and inflict terrible suffering upon the rider himself. The question of suffrage is one of great practical importance, I admit. It may be idle here to discuss it. Gentlemen may have made up their minds (as the gentleman who interrupted me did) that the time has come when it is not proper to discuss this question of separate submission. But, sir, in virtue of its importance, and the greater interest of other questions which remain behind, I have presented it for your consideration. I do not propose to discuss the negro question at all, philosophically, physiologically, embryologically, nor in any other way. I have my mind made up upon that question. It differs entirely from the views of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and perhaps from that of the great body of the members of this Convention. My mind is this, in brief, that as you cannot make one hair white or one hair black by any legislative decree, or by any legislation, so you cannot change the relations which exist between the white race and the black. You cannot change them; you may do something for their education, and you may in a measure make them better members of society, and so far as this can be done, I not only bid you "God speed" in the effort, but am willing to co-operate with any gentleman in the Convention or out of it in attaining that most desirable end. So long as the Almighty has made this great difference between the races, so long as he has made the hand of the black man one twelfth of an inch longer, and one tenth broader, and his foot one-tenth longer and one-ninth broader, so long as he has made his forearm shorter, and every muscle and limb different, from the knee to the ankle, so long as he has made that broad difference between the head of the white and black man, as ninety-seven cubic inches to sixty-six cubic inches—so long will these differences remain a fixed law of nature. They are not to be changed by legislation; they are not to be changed in this Convention, and, according to my idea, however great an error it may be, it is, with me at least, an honest conviction, that all such legislation on behalf of the black race, so far as it relates to the question of suffrage, tends rather to injure than to improve them. Sir, every fair man sees that the franchise must be followed by other great privileges. It must be followed by the right to hold office. Black men must fill your jury-boxes; they must become your school teachers; they must be your governors and legislators, if you are honest with them and if you mean in good faith that they are your equals. If you do not mean to do this, and if you do mean to carry out a sort of freedman's slavery by getting their votes, and at the same time denying them all the privileges of office, you are deceiving them. You must take this question of franchise to all its natural results, and say that if these men are equal as citizens, they are as a matter of course entitled to all those privileges of equality which belong to the white race itself. Every colored man feels this. To deny him the rights incident to office, while granting him the privilege of the franchise, is to hold out to him a hope which he, as a sensible man, feels that he never can realize, and hence it is that a great body of the sensible negroes at the North and at the South, have gone to those governments abroad which they established, and it is an example to us, and for us that where they have established a government of their own, they have cast off the white race. Why, sir, look at the government of Liberia to-day. It is a government of black men, by black men, for black men, and no white man is permitted to hold any office of honor or trust in that government. Look to the government of Hayti. It is the same thing there. By a decree, they exclude all white men from holding office there. Now, Mr. Chairman, in these late days, it may not be a proper thing to say, but it is nevertheless true that this government of ours was established by white men for white men. They so created it, and all your quotations from the Declaration of Independence about the equality of races are in truth, what Mr. Choate once called them, so many "glittering generalities," having some truth in them, I grant, but when you analyze that truth, you are entirely unwilling to make the application claimed for it. Why, gentlemen, is this a government created, established or maintained by the consent of the governed? What is the example which has been cited here within the last few minutes? What are the facts? Twelve States of this Union, if they could have had their own way, would have secured their separate independence. By the strong arm of the government they were compelled to remain a part of the Union of the States and to live under the Constitution of the United States. Where was the consent of the governed in that case? Sir, it rested where it ought to rest, in the general government to maintain its own unity. It was by the power of the general government that the rebellion was put down. It was most truly said the other evening by my friend from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that there was one million majority against the late chief magistrate of this nation, Abraham Lincoln, whose words and oath are inscribed above your head. A million of people in the majority, and this majority never consented to be thus governed by Mr. Lincoln; but yet in due obedience to the law, and to that law which I hold in my hands, which is the supreme law of the land, I mean the Constitution of the United States, the majority yielded and the rebellion raised by or through this election was very properly put down, and the union of the States maintained. Albeit, Mr. Chairman, we have witnessed so many innovations from time to time, as to make it almost out of order to speak with reverence and respect of the Constitution of the United States, for, as was said by the great leader of the party, in the House of Representatives, the other day, "Some fragments of the old shattered Constitution had stuck perhaps in the kidneys of some Senators and troubled them at night!" Aye, Mr. Chairman, this is the estimate of the American Constitution in this year of our Lord, 1867. "Some fragments of the Constitution of the United States sticks in the kidneys of Senators and trouble them at night!" Sir, I confess I have great respect for that Constitution, old and shattered as it is, and I have great respect also for the fathers who framed it. I believe that no people will ever pay a proper respect to posterity who do not render a proper respect to their ancestors. I am, if you please, one of that class we sometimes in derision stigmatize as "old fogies." I believe in the fathers; I believe in the government which they established; I do not believe in your modern innovations. I believe in the words of Edmund Burke, that it cannot be too often repeated line upon line, and precept upon precept, until it passes into the currency of a proverb, that "to innovate is not to reform," and it is your constant daily innovations upon the Constitution of the United States, which has endangered and is endangering the government itself. Step by step we have made these advances. My colleague [Mr. Curtiss] called it progress. I call it innovation. I call it departing from the great landmarks of our fathers, and I warn gentlemen that the same fate which has befallen other governments, will befall ours, unless we pay more respect than we have to the teachings of the fathers. The great ocean is made up of drops of water, and we feel from time to time, that as these innovations continue to flow on and swell the tide of despotic power, that our public liberties and our public safety are endangered. Step by step we make those advances upon our dearest rights and privileges—we are by our own hands consigning our government to its grave, and may ere long say with Byron, of his friend Henry Kirk White:

"So the struck eagle stretched along the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
Views his own feather on the fatal dart
And winged the shaft that quivered in his heart.
Keen were his pangs, but keener far to feel,
He nursed the plume that impelled the steel;
And the same plumage which had warmed his nest,
Drank the last life drops from his bleeding breast."

Mr. FULLER—I do not rise to trouble the Convention with any extended remarks. The Convention will bear witness that I have occupied but little of its time. But sir, I too, with the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] have some respect for the fathers of the Republic; and I cannot sit silent and hear their doctrine so often and so foully impugned. Sir, next to my Bible I have been taught by my fathers, in whose veins the blood of the Revolution flowed, to reverence the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence. When the representatives of the people of the colonies assembled in Independence Hall, and put forth those doctrines, they pledged to their support their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor; and upon the battle-fields of the Revolution, they sealed their devotion to them with their blood. But sir, we are told here to-day and we have been told before more than once, that this same charter of our liberties is a fallacy. We have been told here that it is not true that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Sir, I maintain that they do, and I say that unless they do, then the Declaration was put forth and the blood of the Revolution was shed in vain. Gentlemen say it is a fallacy, because we were under the necessity of putting down a rebellion in the southern States against the government. It is no fallacy, and the example cited does not prove it to be a fallacy. It is still true that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; and also true that there must be some way devised by the social compact in which that consent shall be expressed. When the Constitution of the United States was adopted, the people of the Southern States as a part, as an integral portion of the people of the United States, gave their consent to it, and after having given their consent to it in that solemn manner, they had no right to withdraw that consent; and that was the question which was submitted to the arbitrament of the sword. Though they had given their consent in that solemn form, they contended that they had a right to withdraw it under the reserved rights of the States; and we contended they had not; that having given their consent to the great charter of our government, they had no right to withdraw it, and that was the question which was determined in our favor by the war. And now, sir, I protest, standing here, in behalf of my constituents, against this idea that the doctrine contained in the Declaration of Independence is a fallacy. And now, sir, I come to the question pending. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], and in saying this, I do not think that the position I take conflicts with the one I have previously assumed. I contend that the females of the State of New York have given their consent to the government under which they live, and that they have given it in the proper form; and that is really the question before the Convention, how that consent should be given—whether it shall be given in person by their votes, which they shall deposit in the ballot-box, or whether it shall be given through their husbands, in the way God designed it should be given. Sir, my constituents are not in favor of this innovation, and least of all are my lady constituents in favor of it. I believe that there has but one single petition come from the county of Monroe in favor of female suffrage, and that one is from a single individual. It is to the credit of the county I represent that none others have come. They have not been sent, because the ladies of that county are opposed to this innovation. They are opposed to that small minority of strong-minded women whom the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], so ably represents, and they object to having the elective franchise forced upon them by that small minority against their will. The ladies of Monroe county, whom I have the honor to represent, are not inferior in education, refinement, in cultivation, and in all that goes to make up the true woman, to the ladies in any other part of the State; but they have not asked, and do not ask, to have this privilege conferred upon them. And, sir, I protest against it in their name. I am opposed to it for another reason also. I believe the granting of the elective franchise to woman would unsex, would corrupt and degrade her. Sir, there is such a thing as running the elective franchise into the ground; and this proposition to extend it to woman looks very much like it. Sir, I am no prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I will venture to predict that if this innovation should ever be made, the time will not then be far distant when it will end in the destruction of our institutions and our form of government. There is a change, as has been said, which is not progress. It is a change which precedes dissolution, and I believe that if this innovation is made, it will end in the dissolution of society and in the disorganization of our form of government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hitchcock and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the PRESIDENT resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, and had made some progress therein; but not having gone through therewith, had directed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave and it was declared carried.

Mr. BARNARD—I move that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock.

Mr. LEE—I move to amend by making the hour half-past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT—In the opinion of the Chair, the motion is not amendable.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Barnard, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 58 to 26.

So the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock and again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. Curtis to the amendment of Mr. C. C. Dwight to the clause as reported by the committee.

Mr. MERRITT—I regard the admission of females to the right of suffrage as a question of practical expediency. The right is to be granted or withheld as a majority of the electoral body shall at the proper time decide. The change contemplated in the fundamental law is a great one. It is in contravention of the established customs and practices of all organized governments up to the present time, but that fact does not necessarily prove that to confer the right would either degrade woman or endanger the State, as suggested by the gentleman from Onieda [Mr. T. W. Dwight], nor that if the privilege of holding office should accompany and follow its bestowal, women would necessarily be chosen by the great body of the people to fill offices for which they are not fitted, either on account of physical or intellectual incapacity. It is paying altogether too great a compliment to them to assume in discussion that by their superiority as practical business persons they would command and secure such approval as candidates and thereby secure their election. It was admitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] that, so far as the effect of extending the right as contemplated to women, on political parties, results would not be materially changed. If so, no danger to the State could well be apprehended, especially so long as the party now in power shall continue to hold the reins of government. But, it is said that women may aspire to the highest offices, and their ambition be thereby stimulated so as to in some way result in injury to them. I would respectfully ask whether women are now prohibited from holding any office within the gift of the people? I am willing to admit that the commonly accepted idea is, that under our present Constitution males should hold the offices, but it is not so provided in that instrument. The word used is "person," and it applies to all officers, not only to executive and judicial but those more subordinate. There is but one exception, and that is in the case of admission to practice in the courts of justice, this privilege being confined to males who have reached the age of twenty-one years. I would ask gentlemen whether women are not now eligible to legislative offices? And whether, if Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton had been elected to this body by receiving the largest number of votes, and having received proper credentials, there is anything in our Constitution, or in any existing law, by which she could be excluded. If there is, I am not aware of the fact. I am free to admit that none should be permitted to hold office who are not citizen electors. In order to thus provide, the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, have, in the article which has been submitted, explicitly declared that Senators and members of Assembly shall be electors of the State. That provision does not, however, exist in the present Constitution. I hold it to be entirely within the province of the people, in their sovereign capacity as electors (those who are so at the present or at any future time) to say whether they will extend the suffrage or not. Having always exercised the right, it is proper that they should, until it is extended by them to the class who now seek it. I do not believe that a majority of the electoral body are prepared at the present time to grant this right to women, and indeed, I very much doubt whether if it should be immediately submitted to women exclusively they would by a majority claim the right or accept it. That does not, however, change the condition of things. This right of voting is nevertheless claimed by a considerable number of the females of the State, and the right and propriety of such extension of the elective franchise is conceded by a large portion of our male population. It is therefore a proper subject for the consideration of the people and it is proper that the electors of the State should pass upon the question. I would not, however, combine it with other important proposed amendments to the Constitution. I had the honor to introduce a resolution to submit this question to the people to be voted on by them in the year 1869. I am in favor of thus submitting it, but am opposed to submitting it in the body of the Constitution or at the same election. The delay proposed is not unreasonable, and if proper effort shall be made by those specially interested, it can, by that time, be properly brought before the electors for their consideration and action. There has been a good deal said about the incapacity of women; the differences between the sexes in regard to mental constitution and moral characteristics as well as differences of duties in the social relation; but what, I ask, has that got to do with individual rights? I regard the question of female suffrage as a practical one, to be considered in the light of anticipated results. If we are satisfied that its practical effect would be favorable to law and order and good government, then we should favor it without being governed by tradition and past usages. Some stress has been laid on the statement that the extension of the suffrage would necessarily carry with it the duty of office-holding. That does not necessarily follow. I have already shown that females are eligible to office, or at least they are not prohibited by the Constitution. It provides that "no person except a citizen of the United States shall be eligible to the office of Governor," and shall have been a resident of the State a certain length of time. I would ask gentlemen whether in case a woman should be elected to that office, being a citizen of the United States and a resident as provided, could she not, if elected to that position, take possession of the office and hold it? It has been asked in regard to men of color, "Do you intend to make them eligible to the jury-box and to hold office?" They have always had that right. It does not, however, appear that because they have been eligible that they have to any great extent been chosen to such offices. Colored men possessing real estate to the amount of two hundred and fifty dollars have always been eligible to hold any office within the gift of the people of this State, and no man can deprive him of the right of filling the office of Governor if the majority of the people choose to elect him. As there is no prohibition in the existing Constitution against women and colored persons holding offices, the only question which is properly before us is whether we will extend to them the right of suffrage.

Mr. BARNARD—It appears to me that the advocates of female suffrage, not only the eloquent gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], but those who preceded him in the informal meetings that were had in this room, have forgotten one great fact, and that is that there is a religious view of this question that, to my mind at least, is conclusive against the affirmative side of the question. We must concede, whatever may be the theory as to whether voting is a natural right or a right given by society, that the voters in this country are the rulers in this country, and that whoever has the right of voting has the right of ruling. We have a Scripture warrant, at any rate, for showing that at a very early age of the world the right of ruling was taken away from woman by a judgment, which up to this time has remained unreversed. I hold in my hands a book that has sometimes been referred to—the Holy Scriptures. I will refer to the judgment that was rendered upon these individuals, and we must admit that from the time of its rendition to the present time it has remained unreversed. It was rendered at the time when the Almighty called man to judgment for a violation of His first great commandment. I will read:

"And the man said, 'The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat.'

"And the Lord God said unto the woman, 'What is this that thou hast done?' And the woman said 'The serpent beguiled me and I did eat.'"

And here comes the judgment, and first to the serpent:

"Because thou hast done this thou art accursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."

Whatever may be said as to the natural fact of the serpent moving upon his belly and eating of the dust, the other part, the bruising of his head, we all know to be true, and that it has continued up to the present time. There is not one of us in this room that can remember when we were so young that we would not put our foot upon the head of a serpent and kill him if he went by our path. And while you may get up societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, I have never heard of a society for the prevention of cruelty to serpents, and if such a society were to be incorporated, I venture to say that if a law were to be passed against such cruelty to serpents, it would be violated by all, and disregarded by one-half of the justices of the peace in this State—certainly by all the God-fearing ones, and that they would regard this law [pointing to the Bible] as a higher law than that passed by our Legislature. In regard to that, the judgment has remained up to the present time, and is likely to continue for all future time. Now let us look at the judgment against the woman:

"Unto the woman, He said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee."

That law has continued from that time to the present. No sooner does woman pass from girlhood than "the desire" springs up in her breast, and although she may not then discover the object of that Heaven-made match which is afterward to follow, that desire may exist for days, weeks, months, or even years before the promised object is presented. At last she sees the loved one, she hears his voice, she beholds the glance of his eye, and she realizes that "There are looks and tones which dart

An instant sunshine through the heart,
As if the soul that moment caught
Some treasure it through life had sought."

Her desire is to him. In process of time she becomes his wife, and he becomes her husband and rules over her. He takes her to his house. He may issue no command; he may make no order; he leaves her to her appointed sphere, and he enters out into the world to encounter its contests, to meet with its rivalries, and its jealousies, and its various disappointments. He may proceed back to the house with a sorrowful heart, but he there finds all is sunshine; that his wife is looking to the happiness of her partner as the great object of his life. He feels then that there is his home; that without any command except the mere law of love—that law which was implanted in her heart from her earliest infancy, and in the origin almost of the race—she will remain to guide and cheer him on his way through his earthly career. He encounters the storms of the world; she soothes him in his sorrows.

"Yes 'tis to lovely woman given
To soothe our griefs, our woes allay,
To heal the heart by misery riven,
Change earth into an embryo heaven,
And drive life's fiercest cares away."

That is her appointed duty. In behalf of the young men of our age, I would say that that duty will remain; let us not interfere with it. Let us not invest woman with the right of voting and the correlative right of ruling. Imagine what would be the condition of the young men of Brooklyn, where I reside—the "city of churches"—in the event of such a provision as is here proposed being engrafted into our Constitution. I will imagine the case of a young man, who, as we all have done at one time in our lives, starting out to seek his future mate in society. He calls at the house of the one he admires, and is told by the servant that she is out. He inquires where, and the reply is that she has gone down to attend a primary meeting in the ward, convened to nominate an alderman! "Well," the young man says, "I will call to-morrow." "No, you cannot call to-morrow; she has been elected a delegate to the county convention, which she must then attend, to nominate a sheriff, coroner and superintendent of the poor." "Well, if I can't see her to-morrow or on week days I will call on Sunday night." "No, you cannot call next Sunday, because she is going to Plymouth Church to hear a sermon on politics by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher." [Laughter.] What is the poor fellow to do? The order of society is reversed. I do not know but what we will bring about the confusion of society which has been referred to by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. It breaks up the established order of things; and, for one, I think the subject had better be let alone. There is, as he stated, a very wide distinction between the sexes. He has referred to the German poet to show how that distinction exists. But, sir, we have in our own land a poet who shows the distinction between the sexes, in very powerful language, where he says:

"Man is the proud and lofty pine
That frowns on many a wave-beat shore;
Woman's the young and tender vine,
Whose curling tendrils round it twine,
And deck its rough bark sweetly o'er."

Man's the rock, whose towering crest
Nods o'er the mountain's barren side;
Woman's the soft and mossy vest,
That loves to clasp its sterile breast,
And wreath its brow with verdant pride."

Man's the cloud of coming storm,
Dark as the raven's murky plume,
Save where the sunbeam, light and warm,
Of woman's soul and woman's form,
Gleams brightly through the gathering gloom."

Now, sir, that is the distinction which exists between the sexes. And I would see that distinction continued. I would look upon woman as she has always been looked upon—not as the strong-minded woman, going from State to State and from political meeting to political meeting, delivering political speeches—but as that other woman that may be referred to as the mother of Washington, and to that mother to whose funeral the attention of some of us has been recently called. I saw it at a lecture or a sermon by a minister that he recently attended the funeral of a woman. The coffin was borne by four of her sons. One was a justice of the supreme court of the United States; one was a distinguished lawyer of the city of New York, one was a distinguished clergyman, and one was president of the senate of his native State. They marched along bearing the coffin carefully, being unwilling that any other man should assist them in that last solemn duty. The minister might have gone on and said that another one was another distinguished son of America, whose efforts have tended to bring Europe and America closer together by the telegraphic cable. I venture to say that that woman could not have performed the distinguished part she did in life, and could not have raised those sons up to be what they are, if she had been traveling from State to State delivering political lectures. I venture to say that she would never have possessed that bright galaxy of jewels which she has presented to the world. When the Roman mother was called upon to show her jewels she pointed to her children and said, "These are my jewels." So that true American woman in life could point to her children and say, "These are my jewels," and a brighter galaxy no American woman need boast of. This is the true function of woman, and to remain at home, to promote the blessings of home, rear up her children to be useful, and if you please, distinguished members of society. Let us only know her by her love.

"For woman's love's a holy light
That brighter, brighter burns for aye;
Years cannot dim its radiance bright,
Nor even falsehood quench its ray.
But like the Star of Bethlehem
Of old, to Israel's shepherds given,
It marshals with its steady flame
The erring soul of man to heaven."

MR. M. H. LAWRENCE—I had not intended, Mr. Chairman, to say a word before this committee until the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Barnard] had proceeded with his remarks. But it seemed to me, when that gentleman was upon this floor addressing us, with that book in hand, that he supposed he was in some ancient assemblage of men such as that ecclesiastical court which tried the distinguished astronomer, Galileo, with book in hand, pronouncing judgment and anathema because he had the temerity to declare that the earth revolved around the sun; and like that ecclesiastical power, the gentleman seemed to read from that book, and form conclusions that women have no right to vote. It is the same argument that has been used by power and privilege ever since the world began to keep the masses of the world in poverty and bondage. Now I want it understood in this committee that if I do have the temerity to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] I do not do it expecting that it will drive woman into the political arena. I do not do it for the purpose of producing domestic strife, but for the purpose of making more secure domestic happiness and more sacred our household gods. I wish to utter a few words here repelling the idea that we design to make politicians of women. It is no such thing. I vote for the amendment because I think, with the ballot in the hands of every class, we can secure to every class their just rights, and that is the only way by which they can be secured. I believe that with every class possessed of the ballot there would be a more equal distribution of the proceeds of labor throughout the State. I claim that there is no protection for any class without the ballot, and in my opinion it is a God-given right which we have no power to confer. When we allow people to vote we only allow what belongs to the people to do. It is their inherent right to vote. Gentlemen talk as if the body politic was going to be destroyed if the ballot was conferred upon women! I think the county of Columbia seems to be greatly disturbed lest all the ladies in the land shall turn politicians! Certainly that county must be disturbed, if we are to judge from the language of its distinguished representatives [Messrs. Gould and Silvester]. They have made it known to this Convention that the ladies of that county have no sympathy with this idea of woman's voting. The eloquent gentleman from that county who addressed us last evening [Mr. Silvester] stated that just before he left his home the women came swarming around him and said, "Oh, Mr. Silvester, we know you are a modest man [laughter], but when you get to Albany, at the great State Convention, do beseech the Convention not to confer this power upon us. We are afraid we shall go into crooked paths, and become demagogues and go upon the hustings, if the right to vote is given us." [Laughter.] The gentleman even took the opportunity of advertising himself to the great State of New York as a bachelor [laughter], and that his love extended to all womankind, and he turned his hand out in this direction [pointing to the sofa in the rear of the room where ladies were sitting.] [Laughter.] I wish to suggest to my friend from Columbia that such a wide-spread and extended love for all woman-kind may not be acceptable to the ladies of Columbia county. [Laughter.] The ladies out in the western part of the State where I reside, like something a little more definite. [Laughter.] When a gentleman there expresses such a widespread love it is looked upon with some degree of suspicion. [Laughter.] But in all seriousness I believe the ballot to be the great educator and I care but little what effect my vote has upon my constituents. I know they believe that I will cast an honest vote. I know it would be idle for me, after this Convention has listened to the able, statesmanlike and eloquent address of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], to attempt to add anything of interest to what has been said. But, sir, when I vote to extend the right of suffrage to woman, I vote to give to woman an equal chance with man in the race of life. I vote to take away all obstacles in her pathway, that the two sexes may have an equal opportunity for success. I believe, as I said, that the ballot is a great educator of the people. I believe that it will be given to woman, and I believe that when she is possessed of it, we will have a political millennium in comparison with the present order of things. And I believe that we will never have an improved state of civil society until woman does possess the ballot. Why should we disfranchise one-half the adult population of this State? Our mothers, who have been widows from our earliest infancy, have paid taxes, have assisted to build school-houses, and performed all the duties of a male citizen, and yet have had no voice in matters of local government. I know districts where the greater portion of the taxes are paid by women. Why do you deny to women, under such circumstances, the right to be heard and to participate in government, and yet compel them to pay taxes? It is a true doctrine that there should be no taxation without representation. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard], who addressed us, Bible in hand, said she was weaker, that God Almighty ordained her present condition. The gentleman pretends that woman has been doomed by the Almighty to all this misery upon her sex for the last six thousand years, and that it has been with the approbation of the Almighty. I believe in no such doctrine. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that the Almighty ever made a king to rule over a nation? I deny that He ever did except because of their sins. Put weights upon the limbs of a people so that they cannot move hand or foot, cannot help themselves, and then charge them with inferiority! That is the history of woman and of the female mind. But, sir, by permission of the Convention, certain ladies who have been stigmatized as strong-minded women, addressed many members of the Convention in this chamber. I had the pleasure, in common with other gentlemen, to hear them. I do not know that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] did; but I wish to say this, that I believe the time will come when the people of this State will decide whether those ladies are stronger minded than the gentlemen of this Convention who have addressed us. It does seem to me if there was any evidence of strong-mindedness, it was quite as manifest as that which has been exhibited in this Convention.

Mr. CURTIS—I have no wish to delay the question, and certainly not to prolong the debate in which my own share—

Mr. HAND—I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman has spoken once—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] has not spoken since the rule went into operation.

Mr. CURTIS—I have listened with the utmost interest to the melodious debate which has raged upon this floor. I have heard, sir, the rattling volleys of compliments which have been fired over the graves of the equal rights of woman, and it is the same old, hollow and familiar sound. I have felt, sir, during all the flattery and gallantry of this discussion, that the essential reason of the question has been undisturbed. It is not a jest. It is not a point which is to be dismissed with a sneer. It is not to be disposed of by a pleasing couplet of verse, nor is it to be settled by the light theories of gentlemen upon this floor, nor by the thoughtless theories of gentlemen anywhere in the world, of the capacity and function of women. The grounds, sir, upon which this movement rests are two-fold. In the first place, as a participant in the natural right of humanity, and as an heir of all the protection which experience has shown to be essential for the defense of those rights, every woman has precisely the claim to that defense which every other person in society has, subject only to the equitable conditions which are reasonably imposed. I have not heard that position really assailed in this Convention. It seems to me to be absolutely impregnable. And the second position upon which the thoughtful advocates of this reform plant themselves is this: that the function of the sex, upon which gentlemen have been so eloquent and amusing, can never be determined until there is the same absolute liberty of development allowed to women that there is to man. I have heard incessantly from the lips of my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand], and from other gentlemen who have addressed the Convention upon the opposite side, what they call the order of nature and the divine intention in regard to women. Sir, I have heard very much more of the intentions of God and the reasons of divine Providence upon this floor than I myself can presume to know. It is enough for me that in this world we cannot apprehend the divine intentions in humanity except by securing the most absolute liberty for the development of every function with which God has endowed us that is compatible with the equal liberty of every other man. And, sir, speaking as a human being, I claim in behalf of every individual of the other sex, that I cannot know, and you cannot know, and no gentleman in this Convention or in the world can know, what is her true prerogative, what is her true function, or the sphere of her sex, until she enjoys precisely the same liberty of development that we claim for ourselves. And if any gentleman will tell me that he will willingly renounce his share of the government of the country in which he lives, being sure that he and every other man in the same condition will still have that ample, equal liberty of development, then, sir, and not till then, will I concede that he justly requires a similar surrender of women. But I protest with all my humanity, and with all the energy of my mind, against calling our theories, the theories of men who have constantly excluded women from the government and the politics of this world, the divine order in regard to women. Sir, I put that objection under my heel with precisely the same contempt that I disregard the claim of any king or emperor that he rules by the grace of God. The grace of God in humanity is absolute liberty. The grace of God, so far as we can see it in the human order, is perfect freedom of development. That is what I claim, sir—absolute equality of development and unlimited freedom of choice. I claim that not for woman as woman, but I claim it for her as a human being. I claim it for every woman and I claim it for every human being. Sir, my friend and colleague from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], in closing his remarks this morning—to which we listened with the same kind of silent deference, with which we regard a funeral train enter a cemetery, by raising our hats in respect—my eloquent colleague declared that for his part he thought it wise to hold by the wisdom of our ancestors, and to make no change without the amplest reason, and he fortified his position by a remark of Burke. I remind him, sir, of another remark of Burke, which I do not doubt he will remember, and it is well for this Convention and for every body of men who are making fundamental laws, and who wish to entrench themselves upon the conservatism of Edmund Burke, to remember it also. He said in one of his legal arguments or speeches: "I am not of the opinion of those gentlemen who are against disturbing the public repose. I like a clamor whenever there is an abuse. The fire-bell at midnight disturbs your sleep, but it keeps you from being burnt in your bed. The hue and cry alarms the country, but preserves all the property of the province." Sir, in regard to the amendment which I have proposed to this Convention, it may be now that its voice from the lips of those who advocate it is but the silver tinkle of a distant bell. I invite my colleague and I invite every thoughtful man to listen well, to observe that the sound increases, that it swells, and before some of us are dead it will culminate in a peal that will "ring out the old, and ring in the new." I claim that the essential argument has been untouched. I demand absolute equality of development for every human being, and unlimited freedom of choice. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this question may be taken by a count.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] that he is out of order.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I do not wish to trespass upon the time, but I would like to say a word upon the question.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Curtis, and it was declared lost on a division, by a vote of 24 to 63.

Mr. SMITH offered the following amendment:

Substitute the following for section one, to-wit:

"SEC. 1. Every man of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding an election, and for the last ten days a citizen of the United States and a resident of the election district where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election in said district, and not elsewhere, for all officers elective by the people. Provided that after the year 1868 no person shall be entitled to vote at an election unless for the last thirty days prior thereto he shall have been a citizen of the United States; and provided also, that idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship, felons, persons convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime, and persons convicted of having received money or other valuable thing to influence or reward their votes, given at an election after the adoption of this Constitution, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil right, shall not be entitled to vote. No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay or offer to pay, contribute or offer to contribute to another to be paid, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote given or to be given at an election, or to reward an elector for attending the polls at such election to vote, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm before such inspectors that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid or offered to pay, contributed or offered to contribute to another to be paid, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote given or to be given at such election, or to reward an elector for attending the polls at such election to vote. The Legislature shall provide by law for the trial of persons charged with bribery, or of having received money or other valuable thing to influence or reward their votes given at an election since the adoption of this Constitution, and upon such trial the accused person may be a witness in his own behalf; and no other person shall be exempt from testifying on such trial on the ground that his testimony may tend to criminate or degrade him; but such testimony shall never be used against him in any criminal proceeding; and provided also, that the penalty upon conviction of having received money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote since the adoption of this Constitution, shall extend only to disfranchisement and disability to hold civil office. Laws may be passed excluding from voting at an election every person who shall have made or shall be interested in a bet or wager depending upon the result thereof.

Mr. SMITH—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SPENCER—I desire to ask the gentleman [Mr. Smith] whether the language of the amendment proposed by him is not liable to the construction that only those would be entitled to vote who at the present time, or at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, are citizens? I would suggest to the mover that he so modify that language as to read as follows: "Every man of the age of twenty-one years, who for one year next preceding the election shall have been an inhabitant of this State, and for thirty days a citizen of the United States, etc."

Mr. SMITH—I propose to make an explanation of the amendment, and if the gentleman will look at the amendment, and it be found liable to the criticism which he suggests, it can be altered. My principal object in offering this amendment is to secure, if possible, a more stringent clause intended to purify the elective franchise. I have followed, in drawing that amendment, the original as introduced by the committee, making slight alterations which will be apparent by comparing the two. It omits the clause in regard to paupers. I should have no difficulty in voting for that, myself, on principle, but there seems to be very much objection to it in the committee and on the part of the members of the Convention, and therefore I have omitted it from the substitute. The clause in relation to idiots, lunatics, and persons under guardianship, is retained. I suppose that no member of the Convention would claim that an idiot, lunatic, or person under guardianship ought to vote. The only objection made to that clause has been, that there might be some difficulty in determining this class of persons at the polls, and that difficulty is obviated by section three, which provides that laws shall be made for ascertaining them by proper proofs. The Legislature, under this clause, may regulate this matter. It may provide for fixing the status of these classes by judicial proceedings, or leave it to be determined under proper regulations at the polls. That seems to meet the objection which has been made to that section on account of the difficulty suggested. The substitute adds to the list of disfranchised persons those who shall have sold their votes, and provides that the Legislature shall make laws for the trial and conviction of such persons. Now, I beg that the Convention will take into serious consideration the necessity of such a provision. Whatever we may do, or neglect to do, if we fail to secure in the instrument we are about to frame a provision that shall be effective in purifying the elective franchise, we shall fail to perform the most important duty devolving upon the Convention. It is most imperiously demanded by the public of all parties. I have been appealed to on this point by men of all parties, and earnestly enjoined to do all in my power to secure some provision in the new Constitution which shall prevent corruption at the polls. It has become a very serious evil, and one which is dangerous to the stability of our government. Thousands and thousands of persons every year sell their votes, and tens of thousands of dollars are expended in every important election in corrupting the fountains of power, in buying votes, and controlling elections. Men to whom the privilege of voting is granted for the protection of their own rights, and as a sacred trust to be exercised for the good of society, prostitute it to their own base and selfish purposes. It is a fraud upon the Constitution; for the man who buys votes, instead of casting but one vote as he is entitled to do by the Constitution, may have fifty or one hundred, according to the amount of money he is able or willing to spend in purchasing them. It degrades the privilege. It results in the election of corrupt and incompetent men to official positions. In making nominations the question is asked, not who is the fit man, or who is the best man for the office, but, to use cant phrases, "Who will bleed most freely?"—"Who has the largest pile?" It often happens, though not always, that men totally unfit for the position, and destitute of moral character, who have money to spend, are elected to responsible offices. The Legislature of our State for several years past afford an instructive illustration. It is generally true that if a man buys his way into the Legislature, he will sell his way through it. He will sell his vote and influence. The evil does not stop here; the example and influence is felt in all other departments of government. By an inevitable law, evil propagates itself. If the fountain is impure the stream must be impure; and the stream of corruption sent forth from this poisoned fountain gathers force and breadth as it rolls on, and spreads desolation throughout our land. In my judgment, there is no one thing that so urgently demands our serious attention as this question. As I have stated, my purpose in proposing this substitute is to make the provision for purifying elections more stringent and effective. The provision reported by the committee which permits a challenge at the polls, is retained in the substitute. Both the buyer and seller may be challenged and put upon their oath, and if they cannot purge themselves they are not permitted to vote at the pending election. It seems to me we ought to go further—that we ought to permanently disfranchise the man who sells his vote until he be restored to the rights of citizenship by the pardoning power. Now, it may be asked why do you not include the buyer and have him disfranchised permanently? My answer is that the men who use their money to promote elections are not so culpable as the man who sells his vote. Why? Because the moral quality of an action must be determined by the motive. The man who sells his vote has no motive but the lowest and basest one. It is pure selfishness and venality. He cares not for his country, and he cares not how he exercises that sacred trust. If he can get five dollars for his vote, that is all he cares for. But it often happens that the man who uses money feels a deep interest in the pending election, independent of all selfish considerations. He believes, it may be, that the welfare and safety of the country and society and the stability of the government depend upon the success of his party in the pending election. He feels the necessity of using money, because he knows that there are voters in the market, and if he does not secure them in the only way they can be secured, their votes will be lost to the cause of truth. Hence it is, that upright and moral citizens use their money in promoting elections, and yet they regret the necessity, and are anxious that some provision should be made to prevent it. But, Mr. Chairman, even if the buyers were equally guilty, I should not think it expedient to include them. It would be regarded by them as an unjust reflection, tend to provoke their hostility to the provision and increase the difficulty of enforcing it. A certain object is to be accomplished, to-wit: to prevent the traffic in votes. If there were no votes to be sold there would be none to be bought. If we can accomplish the object by disfranchising the seller, no matter if the buyer be equally guilty, the question is, how can we best accomplish the object which we have in view. I would retain the original provision allowing the challenge of both buyer and seller at the poll, to be followed by disfranchisement at that election if they refuse to take the oath, or fail to purge themselves of guilt. In addition to this, the seller should be permanently disfranchised. He should be sent into society with the mark of infamy upon him, as a man who had betrayed his trust, and shown himself unworthy the high privilege of exercising the elective franchise. It would be a proclamation to the community in which he should dwell that this inestimable privilege of an American citizen must not be converted into an article of merchandise. One such example in each community would, in my judgment, forever cure the evil. I might extend my remarks upon this matter, but my purpose is merely to indicate the object and character of the proposed amendment. I have endeavored to draw it so as to meet objections which have been raised to the original section by gentlemen who have addressed the committee, and hope that this, or something similar to it, will meet with general favor, and that we shall agree upon a provision that will forever purify our elections. In no way could we be instrumental in doing a higher service to our State; and if our labors thus result we shall ever look back upon them with the highest satisfaction.

Mr. CONGER—I only wish to raise for the information of the committee and for our own guidance a question of order, whether the gentleman in submitting a series of propositions as amendments to the amendment has not submitted a series of propositions which will amend the whole article now before the Committee, and whether he is not limited at present to the first proposition. I do not seek to interfere with the right in committee to consider the whole proposition in the due and regular order of its parts, but to inquire whether the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] is not now limited to the first proposition which is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair regards the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton as in order.

Mr. FOLGER—I wish to ask the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] whether he cannot separate his amendment so as to propound to the committee the exact point which he wishes to present. I do not understand him as desiring to change the whole amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], but only to have engrafted upon it so much of the phraseology which he has adopted as will convey in the Constitution to be adopted the idea which he has presented of punishing those who sell their votes or purchase them. I desire him to separate, as I think he can, so much of his amendment as will present the spirit and feature of it to the committee alone. I do not see the necessity of altering the phraseology of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] merely to present this other idea, which is not in that amendment, of punishing the sale of a vote. Will it not present to the committee more definitely and more pointedly the idea he wishes to engraft upon the Constitution, that of rendering it infamous and a crime to sell a vote. I think it will be better to bring the committee to a vote upon that point, without frittering away their attention and exhausting it, and spreading it over the whole article, which he does by proposing the whole article as a substitute.

Mr. SMITH—If I may be permitted to answer the gentleman, I would say, that I like the original section as drawn by the committee, with very few exceptions; therefore my object was to retain the original as far as possible, and to incorporate into it these additional amendments. I prefer the original with these proposed amendments to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga. The proposed changes are so interwoven with the original, that it would be very difficult to separate them without considerable examination and care.

Mr. BARNARD—I ask that the question be divided, and that we take up each portion of the amendment separately.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be upon the first portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith].

Mr. RATHBUN—The amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. C. C. Dwight] has an advantage which it is well worth our while to consider. It has been the fundamental law of this State since 1846. All the provisions of residence contained in that amendment and the proviso are taken verbatim from the Constitution now existing, with which the people are entirely familiar and to which they have conformed for the last twenty years. Now, sir, the language is clear, definite, well understood practically by that long experience, and the departure from it or any of its provisions would require a good deal of examination and a good deal of investigation, much more than could be given to it by the mere hearing of a proposition read, in which we can recognize distinct omissions, to wit: no residence in the county is called for by the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], if I recollect right, and consequently no residence in the election district fixed upon. Here are omissions which I apprehend the Convention will not be willing to part with; they are not new; nobody is to be deceived, nobody is to be defrauded, but they will have the old rule with which everybody is familiar, and yet I have never heard within the course of that twenty years any person find fault with the provisions of that section in the Constitution in regard to the matter presented by that amendment of my colleague [Mr. C. C. Dwight]. No, sir; I apprehend our safety is in holding fast to all parts of the Constitution, whatever they may be, where by experience of twenty years no serious objection has been raised to them; and the only ground upon which, as I understand it, a proposition to amend can well arise is in regard to the question of bribery, which belongs in another portion of the article as reported by the Committee. With this single one, and that is the change of the right of suffrage from a portion of the colored men of the country to the whole body as a class, removing the property qualification, which has been retained as to them but abrogated as to white men. Now, sir, aside from that, it seems to me there is nothing which we should part with in the old or interpolate in the new; and I am in favor of the amendment of my colleague [Mr. C. C. Dwight], because I know what that is, and everybody in this house knows it as I do.

Mr. ANDREWS—I understand from the amendment that has been submitted by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] that he intends to retain that feature in the report of the committee, which provides that there shall be a citizenship of thirty days before a person shall be entitled to vote; but for the purpose of obviating the objection that has been made by some gentlemen in the house, to the effect that such a position would deprive certain individuals, acting upon the faith of the present Constitution, who declared their intentions in 1866, of the privilege of voting in 1868, he provides in substance that after the first day of January, 1869, that a citizenship of thirty days shall precede an election. What I desire to state is, that in my judgment the amendment would be improved by inserting the permanent qualification, to wit: thirty days' citizenship prior to the time of an election in the affirmative and substantive part of the article, and then by the proviso limit the application of that provision to such persons and to such elections as should occur after the first day of January, 1869, so that when the time had been reached when a uniform citizenship of thirty days should be required, the body of the Constitution in its affirmative part would show the permanent qualifications of electors. And I would suggest to the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] whether it would not be better that the amendment in the first place should provide, as in the report of the committee, that every man of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding the election, and for the last thirty days a citizen, etc., shall be entitled to vote, and then make a second proviso, following the first one reported by the committee, in some such language as one which I have drawn: "Provided also that until the first day of January, 1869, a citizen who shall have been a citizen for ten days, and is otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote." I think this certainly would improve the language of the section. I agree with the gentleman who last addressed the committee [Mr. Rathbun] that it is best to retain, unless there is to be some change in the substance, the language of the existing Constitution. Now, sir, the Constitution of 1846 declares that every male citizen possessing certain qualifications shall be entitled to vote. The report of the committee declares that every man of the age of twenty-one years who shall for the last thirty days have been a citizen of the United States shall be entitled to vote, adding to the qualification of citizenship, in the present Constitution, the words "of the United States," thus determining, if this amendment shall be adopted, that only a person who is a citizen of the United States shall be entitled to vote. Now, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there is a doubt, and possibly that there may be a difficulty arising from this change of language, because while it is the undoubted right of every State to declare who shall be citizens of that State and who shall be entitled to vote, there has been at least a question made, and so far as judicial adjudication can have determined the matter, it has been determined that colored men are not citizens of the United States. They are citizens of this State for the purpose of suffrage, they are so defined and declared to be in the existing Constitution. By several of the statutes of the State, negroes are called citizens of the State. But it will not have escaped the recollection of the committee that this precise question, to wit: whether free negroes of African descent are, under the Constitution of the United States, citizens of the United States, was determined in the case of Scott v. Sanford, which is reported in 19 Howard's U. S. Reports, by the dicta, at least of Judge Taney and the judges who assented to the prevailing opinion in that case, it was declared that colored men, the descendants of slaves, were not entitled to the rights or privileges of citizens of the United States. The same decision was made in 1833, in the State of Connecticut, in an opinion pronounced by Chief Justice Daggett of that State, and you will also remember that as late as 1856, Mr. Marcy, the Secretary of State of the United States, refused a passport to a colored man—a free man—on the ground that by adjudications he was not a citizen of the United States, and hence was not entitled under the law to a passport from that department. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the civil rights act of 1866 declared that all persons born within the country were citizens of the United States and also citizens of the State in which they were born; and I do not doubt myself that the law is, that birth upon the soil entitles one to the rights as well as imposes upon him the duties of citizenship, and I doubt not that the present supreme court, if that question should again come before it for adjudication, would thus hold the law to be; but the ground upon which Congress made this declaration has been questioned by high authority, and the same case to which I have already referred clearly shows by the statement of the judges that, in their opinion, there was doubt as to the right of the United States to declare, by act of Congress, who were citizens of the United States, and, as I understand, the pending amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which has been adopted by the Legislature of this State, was made to cover this precise difficulty. Section first declares that all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. If that amendment shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States, then of course the language of the committee would be entirely appropriate, and even if there is no great doubt as to the scope and effect of the legislation of Congress in the civil rights bill, it seems to me that at all events it is unwise to change the language of the present Constitution, which will give occasion at least to cavil as to the real meaning of the clause which may be adopted if the language of the committee shall be followed. I therefore hope, sir, that the language of the Constitution of 1846 in this respect will be followed, and that citizens shall be declared to have the right to vote without attempting to define a limit to citizenship by the words to which I have referred.

Mr. KRUM—It is not my intention now, sir, as I have not done heretofore, to occupy much of the time of this committee in discussion; and in discussing the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], with the mere hearing of it as read by the Secretary, it is difficult indeed to determine fully what that amendment is. There are some things, however, that I gather from the amendment, and others that I gather from the statement of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] himself, to which I am decidedly opposed, and for one I desire to enter my protest against it. I am in favor of everything that has a tendency to purify the elective franchise. I am in favor of dealing everything that has a tendency to destroy that purity its death-blow; and if its death-blow cannot be struck I would deal it such a one as that under it it should at first stagger and afterward fall. I am in favor substantially of the report of the Committee on Suffrage with regard to this question—that portion of the report which makes it a ground of challenge at the polls, applying equally to the person who buys as to the person who receives or sells. But I am opposed to that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] which seeks to convict the person of bribery who sells his vote, and at the same time permits to go “scot-free” the individual who buys the vote. And I do not agree with him, sir, that the individual who purchases is less guilty than the individual who sells. The individual who sells his vote, or the individuals who sell their votes, are usually individuals of limited means, limited intellect, and who use the selling of their votes as a means of relief somewhat from temporary necessity. I would not make them criminals and permit at the same time the man with his pockets filled with money, the man with the intellect more fully developed, with the mind more fully expanded, to introduce not only the argument of a superior intellect, but the argument also of his money. I would make the man who buys the vote equally guilty with the individual who sells the vote; I would not offer a premium to the man who has the funds to make the purchase while they inflict a crime upon the individual who sold. I, sir, would make them both equally guilty, and I would make the selling of the one or the buying by the other equally the crime of bribery, and I would equally disfranchise both. This, sir, in my opinion, is the only way to reach the difficulty complained of. If the individual who, as a man, is permitted, without the fear of the law, to ply his vocation and make his temptations and induce the poor man to sell, who is there here to complain, who is there even to enforce the law? Is it the poor man who has received the money? Certainly not, for he knows that the moment he opens his mouth he convicts himself, while he permits the individual who has bought his vote to go free. I believe these men, sir, generally, who use money, are men of intelligence. Those men know, if you put the enactment in the Constitution making them both equally guilty, that the very moment they offer the temptation, the very moment they seek to purchase, the very moment they make the proposition, the very moment they try to corrupt, that moment they lay themselves open to conviction for bribery, and disfranchisement forever. The fear of the law, the terror of the punishment, will induce them not to make the proposition, and by that means you let the poor man, the man who usually sells, escape the temptation which otherwise is to be thrust upon him. And while I believe that bribery should be punished by disfranchisement, I believe that it should be punished in such a way as that, by the terror of the Constitution itself the very proposition which we submit to the people, and which will pass triumphantly, should be as effectual as possible to remedy the evil. I am not in a position, without the amendments before me, to make such amendments (if they were in order) as I would like to make but generally I have stated my views. I would permit both persons to be witnesses; nay, more, I would compel them to be witnesses, and while I state that I would compel them to be witnesses I am aware of the provision in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits any person from convicting himself. But there is nothing in the Constitution, either in the State of New York as it now stands, or in the Constitution of the United States as it now stands, which prohibits or renders incompetent from being a witness, an associate in crime. If an indictment should be preferred against the individual who bought, under our law, as it now stands, the individual who sold might be a witness. The objection that he was an incompetent witness would be of no avail, and he would be sworn; but the moment that you sought to prove by him that he had sold his vote to the individual who was indicted, that moment he would claim his privilege on the ground that it would tend to criminate and disgrace him. I would so frame the fundamental law (and I think the amendment of the gentleman substantially does that, as far as it goes), that the objection by the witness himself, or by his counsel, that the answer to the question would tend to criminate or disgrace him, should not be entertained.

MR. SMITH—Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? Those very provisions are in the amendment, if the gentleman will read it. It provides that both parties may be witnesses, and that their evidence may be used in any criminal prosecution against them.

MR. KRUM—I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. My statement already made, with reference to it, grew out of the fact that from the hasty reading from the desk of the Secretary, I did not understand it; some such amendment should be made, and if you make the application of disfranchisement equally to the person who buys as to the person who sells, I think we will remedy the evil, and the terror of the law will prevent its violation. The gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] offered some amendments to that portion of the report of the committee relating to challenge at the polls for bribery, etc. Without the language of that amendment before me (and I desire to call the attention respectfully of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] to it), I am fearful that the language in it goes so far as to prevent the necessary expenditure of money to excite the people to the performance of their duty to vote, to attend the polls. If it does not, then I would leave the amendment in that regard as he has it; but I would be cautious with reference to the amendment in that particular, that nothing may be incorporated in the Constitution that will prevent the necessary and proper awakening of the people, the use of the necessary funds for political meetings, and the use of the necessary funds to procure teams and bring out voters. I do not know that the amendment offered by him goes so far as to deprive them of that right, but as I gather from his hasty reading I fear it does. I would guard against that.

MR. FULLER—I think sir, there should be very great care taken in adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith]. A fundamental law is a very solemn and important instrument. We shall have no opportunity to amend it again for perhaps twenty years to come. It is important, therefore, that not only every phrase but every line and every word of any amendment which we shall adopt should be carefully weighed and considered. There is no opportunity and there will be no opportunity afforded us to give the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] that careful consideration which the importance of the subject deserves and demands. I have listened to it with all the attention that I was able to give it, and I have as yet, sir, a very imperfect understanding of it; and for that reason, if for no other, I shall be compelled to vote against it. I have before me the report of the Committee on Suffrage, and I can understand that. I can offer amendments to it if I desire. I have also the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] before me in print. I can understand that. I have given to it a careful consideration, and I believe it is better than the original proposition of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and I shall vote for it accordingly. But so far as I do understand the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] I am opposed to some of its provisions. In the first place I am opposed to that provision in relation to idiots and lunatics, not because I am in favor of their voting, but because I believe that a provision of that kind would be of no practical value if inserted in the Constitution, because I believe there is no practical evil in that regard which we are called upon to remedy. In the next place I am opposed to any new restrictions on the right of suffrage, and accordingly I am opposed to any new restriction upon the right of adopted citizens to vote. I am opposed in that regard not only to the provision sought to be inserted by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, but also to the modified form of that provision, which the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] contemplates. I do not believe there is any necessity for any change in the Constitution in this respect. I am in favor of the four months' provision, but I am unwilling to put any new restrictions on the right of adopted citizens to vote. I belong to what is called the majority of this Convention, and I know that adopted citizens, as a general rule, vote in a body, almost in solid column, against the party to which I belong; yet in the consideration of this subject I trust I am able to rise above considerations of partisanship. I am opposed to putting new restrictions upon them. I shall therefore vote against not only the report of the committee requiring a thirty days' citizenship, but I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], and I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and accepted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]. I believe that we had better adhere to the Constitution as it is, except so far as experience has clearly demonstrated it needs amendment.

Mr. KRUM—I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Would you not put some clause in the Constitution in reference to corruption at the polls?

Mr. FULLER—Yes, sir.

Mr. KRUM—And in reference to disfranchisement for bribery?

Mr. FULLER—Yes, sir; and the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] contemplates that; and if that part of the amendment offered by him is not sufficient I am prepared to go further than that in that respect, but in other respects this article calls for no amendment, and experience has not demonstrated it needs any except by striking out the property qualification for colored voters, and I am most decidedly in favor of striking that out, but I will not detain the Convention in giving any reasons for it now, as it has been already so fully discussed.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would inquire of the Chair whether if this amendment proposed by the gentleman be adopted, it will take the place of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion it would.

Mr. BICKFORD—With that understanding I wish to call the attention of the committee to a matter which is of considerable importance in relation to the ease of conducting elections in which this amendment and also the report of the committee is in a great degree preferable to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight]. Under the report of the committee and under the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] there will be but one box needed, as only one ballot will need to be given; because if a man is a voter at all he is a voter for every officer to be elected. Under the Constitution as it now is, as copied by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] in his amendment, it will be necessary to have a multiplicity of boxes and a multiplicity of ballots, and the electors cannot vote near as fast, and there will be a great inconvenience attending it; and for that reason it is highly desirable that the main features of the report made by the committee should be adhered to rather than the present Constitution, which makes a multiplicity of boxes and ballots necessary. I merely call attention to that fact, as nobody else has mentioned it, and it seems to me to be a matter of considerable importance.

Mr. OPDYKE—I desire to say a single word in reference to the last clause of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], that clause which is designed to suppress corruption at the polls. If I have correctly apprehended it, it is this: that he proposes to punish the party selling his vote and proposes to exculpate the party purchasing it. He also proposes to bring them both upon the witness stand, but not to hold them liable to punishment for any facts that may be developed in their testimony. Now, sir, I think there is no more important duty that this Convention has to perform than to make an honest, earnest effort to purify the ballot. It is the very foundation of our political power, and if that be corrupted the whole superstructure will be corrupted. For myself, I think I would prefer to hold them both liable, and punish both parties, and also to bring them both upon the witness stand and to render them responsible and liable to punishment for the facts which they themselves may state. The gentleman in front of me [Mr. Krum] has said that the Constitution of the United States stands in our way. I beg to remind the gentleman that he is mistaken on that point. Doubtless most of the members of this Convention know that that prohibition simply relates to the power of the government of the United States. We have a perfect right to put in our own Constitution a provision compelling offenders against the law to take the witness stand and bear the consequences of the testimony they there may be compelled to give. Therefore in regard to offenses of this nature, the selling and the purchasing of votes, I would hold them both liable to punishment—the party selling his vote I would disfranchise forever; the party purchasing, such punishment as the Convention or State through its Legislature in its wisdom may decide. But I would punish both. I hope therefore that an amendment similar to the latter clause of that of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] will meet the favor of the Convention.

Mr. SKYMOUR—I would inquire whether the question is not upon the first proposition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith].

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] called for a division, and therefore the question will be upon the propositions separately.

Mr. SKYMOUR—The first part of the proposition of the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], as I understand it, relates to the citizenship in general terms, and the residence of the person who is to vote. I think it would be very unsafe for this committee, without having had the opportunity of critically examining the language in which this proposition is presented, to adopt it. I have looked at it and compared it with the proposition proposed by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], which is known to the committee to be the present Constitution on this subject. And as was remarked by his colleague the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] just now, it is highly important that we should retain as far as possible the language of the present Constitution on every subject. We have that language before us; it has stood the test for twenty years; it has been examined and re-examined by the ablest minds in the State, judicial and otherwise, sometimes receiving judicial construction from our highest tribunals, and I do not desire in any particular to depart from that instrument unless it be necessary to make an amendment to cure some existing evil. Now I understand that in this proposition no provision is made with regard to preserving the purity of elections. Such a provision can be added as a separate proposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and then we shall have it in a distinct and definite form which we can understand. There are, it strikes me, some important differences in the language of the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] from that of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight]. The proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], which is the present Constitution, requires a residence for some period in the county where the election is to be had, and where the voter seeks to give his ballot; there are a large number of officers elected by counties, and it is very proper and very important, in my view, to have a residence in the county, as has always been required, still continued to be required. I hope we shall therefore adhere to this proposition. This, I understood the Chair, is to be put by itself. It is a part of the proposition presented by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

Mr. GRAVES—I understand the proposition now before the Convention is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], which in language or in effect, if not in precise language, is like the old Constitution, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], differs in some material points from that. I have not been able to learn, sitting here, what that precise difference is. I do not see the wisdom, Mr. Chairman, of changing the original Constitution so far as regards the qualification of citizenship. I have heard no complaint of that in the rural districts. The question seems to be well settled. We know precisely how to understand that part of the Constitution. Is it wise or proper for this Convention to make a new provision in that particular, when this one is so well understood? The necessities of the people do not require it; some misconstruction may be given to it, and we shall not be as well off in that change of the Constitution as we are under the old; therefore, let us abide by the old until time and experience satisfies us it is necessary to make a change.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], if in preparing his amendment he has considered the question whether the limitation of the right of citizens for ten days does not come within the purview of the new amendments now pending, supposed to be about passing. Article 14 of amendments to the Constitution, if I understand it in its plain significance, forbids any abridgment of the right of a citizen of the United States to vote at any election. The phraseology is this:

"But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any wise abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State."

Now, I wish for information, supposing that the gentleman has given this question a quasi-judicial investigation. I wish to know whether the limitation that he proposes of ten days for the present, and thirty days in the years to come, of the right of a naturalized citizen, or of a citizen who becomes twenty-one years of age but one day prior to the day of election, does not abridge that right by the rule which he lays down? I suppose it is the intention of the majority of this Convention to adhere not only to the spirit but to the true meaning and interpretation of the article, and not to undertake to evade it or abridge the right simply on the ground that they are willing to abide by the penalty imposed by Congress in the article. I think the question is one of grave import, and as I have not examined it carefully, I would like to have an advisory opinion upon it.

Mr. SMITH — I would say, for the information of the gentleman, that I have made no special investigation of that question. My object, as I stated before, was mainly to provide for purifying the elective franchise; and, looking at the report of the committee and comparing it with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], I preferred the provisions of the original report, and took that as a basis. I have given no special examination to the other clauses of the section, and did not intend to change it materially, but simply to add such provisions as would effect the purpose I had in view. Perhaps this will be a sufficient explanation.

Mr. BURRILL — The remark which has been made by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], and the interrogatory put by him to the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], present a question which this Convention must at some stage pass upon, and I had supposed that full consideration had already been given to that subject by those members of this Convention who are prepared to vote in favor of the report of the committee as amended by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight]. The question put by the gentleman from Rockland to the gentleman from Fulton was whether or not he had considered the effect of the proposed fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, dated June, 1866, and which it is claimed has been adopted by some of the States. The amendment referred to prescribes a penalty for restricting the right of a citizen of the United States to vote in a State at any election for the choice of electors, representatives in Congress, executive and judicial officers of such State, and for members of the Legislature thereof, and declares that any restriction or abridgment of the right of suffrage which may be imposed by any State shall be followed by an abridgment of the right of such State to representation in the Federal Congress and by the reduction of that right of representation in the same proportion which the number of male persons so deprived of the right to vote shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State. I suppose that every man who votes in this State for any office within the gift of the people of the State votes not by virtue of any citizenship of the United States, but votes by virtue of his citizenship and as a citizen of the State of New York, and that this Convention, as representing the people has the right to restrict and limit each right to vote in such manner as it may deem wise or expedient, and that the right of this State in that regard cannot be interfered with. It is true, sir, that under the proposed 14th amendment to the Federal Constitution already referred to, all persons born or naturalized in the United States are declared to be citizens of the United States. It is true also that in that amendment there is held out the idea that a citizen of the United States has the right as such to vote for officers in the State of New York. As I have already said, in my judgment every person who votes for an office within the gift of the people in this State votes not as a citizen of the United States but as a citizen of the State of New York, and in my opinion the people of this State have the right to deny to citizens of the United States as well as to all other persons the right to vote in this State except under such restriction and qualification as they may choose to impose and require. If the intimation thrown out by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] that all persons, male citizens of the United States as such, and by virtue of such citizenship will be entitled, under the amendment referred to, to vote in this State, the labors of this Convention will be entirely useless. On such principle our work will be of no avail, because we are here for the very purpose, among others, of prescribing the conditions upon which individuals shall vote in this State, and the report of the Committee on Suffrage as originally reported, and the same report as it is proposed to be amended by the amendments of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and also by the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], prescribe that citizens of the United States shall be restricted, and limited in regard to their right to vote, and that they shall not vote except under the restrictions and qualifications in such report contained. There is no force whatever in the point suggested by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger]. I claim and insist that we have the right to prescribe for ourselves what persons shall be admitted to membership in the society or community in which we live; in other words, who shall be admitted to be citizens of this State, and also to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such persons shall be so admitted. I submit, that the action of this Convention in thus acting upon the question of suffrage is perfectly proper, and that we are in the right line of our duty. We and we alone have the right to prescribe upon what terms persons whether they be in name or in fact, citizens of the United States, shall exercise the right of voting in the State of New York; and I hope that no one in his action in this Convention will be influenced by the consideration that we are trenching upon a right which is or will be accorded by the proposed fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution to persons thereby claiming to be citizens of the United States. We should declare and act upon the principle that the people of this State and we as their representatives have the right to prescribe and impose limitations, qualifications and conditions to the right to vote, and that all who desire to exercise that right within the limits of this State must do so as citizens of this State and not as citizens of the United States.

Mr. CONGER — With regard to the interpretation as given at this time, I do not, having admitted that I had not been able to give this question a thorough examination, undertake at this time to say what I think should be ex cathedra the interpretation to be given to it. But I fear that no gentleman will be able to dispose of this question so readily, for, in the first place, all these persons who are declared to be citizens of the United States are also declared to be citizens of the State in which they reside, and there is no opportunity for any discrimination between a person as a citizen of the United States and a citizen of the State in which he resides. The fact of his being a citizen of the United States under the Constitution, and as by that article of the proposed amendment, and coupled with the fact that he is residing in the State, makes him a citizen of that State if I understand the force and meaning of that term. Now, when you come to the second article, it is clearly the intention of the supreme law of the land to set down a rule by which persons may vote, although it is stated as an alternative between obedience to the law and paying a penalty for disobedience, yet I apprehend if the question comes before the highest tribunals, the courts would be obliged to say that the United States, in prescribing the qualifications of its citizens for the purpose of exercising the electoral vote, should in good faith maintain the rule in accordance with the rule laid down, otherwise they would be obliged, it seems to me, to hold that the setting forth of the rule was merely a setting forth of the penalty, and that the insertion of the penalty was nothing more than an appendage to a rule that could be violated. No fair interpretation of the Constitution, it seems to me, can ever be given by a tribunal discussing or deciding upon this question dispassionately. I have a difficulty in my own mind with regard to the amendment I propose to submit at some future stage in the discussion of the committee, and I wish very conscientiously and carefully to avoid anything like an infraction of the rule laid down; still I think sooner or later this question must be discussed by some of the abler minds accustomed to deal with constitutional questions in this Convention. I apprehend they must tell us clearly and unequivocally that it was the intention in the article to lay down a clear and uniform rule by which citizens should be entitled to vote as citizens of the United States primarily, and citizens of the State in which they reside, secondarily; but to vote by a uniform rule, and that rule to be preserved. Now, I state so much because I wish light and a true interpretation, and because if the light come in time it may very materially vary some of the propositions I desire to submit. But I cannot think the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Burrill] has not yet set forth the question with that care which would enable him to say that it was the intention of the framers of that amendment to allow a State to discriminate as to the qualifications of its own citizens in the right of elections, as against citizens of the United States under the Constitution, for if the States have got that power under that article I would like to know what it is worth.

Mr. PROSSER—I propose to strike out ten, and insert thirty.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman that two propositions are now pending.

Mr. BARKER—Suppose the proposition is voted down, and the committee adopt the resolution of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], will it be in order to move to amend that part of the section by inserting thirty days in place of ten?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion that the committee have it in their power until to-morrow night at half-past seven o'clock to amend the proposition as many times as they please.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I would like to move an amendment if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair has informed the gentleman on the opposite side of the house [Mr. Prosser], and will now inform the gentleman [Mr. Robertson] that no amendment is now in order.

Mr. GOULD—I should just like to inquire one thing; whether this amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] takes place before the 1st of January, 1869.

The CHAIRMAN—It is after the year 1868.

Mr. GOULD—Then it cannot be before the 1st of January, 1869.

The question was then put upon the first part of the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] which was declared lost, on a division, by a vote of 20 to 85.

Mr. BICKFORD—Is the whole amendment lost?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman that a division having been called for only one-half of the amendment is lost.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be on the second portion of the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith].

Mr. RATHBUN—I wish to inquire whether that section now read is offered by way of amendment to the section offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], or whether it relates to a subsequent section in the report of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it is an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and cannot be intended in any other way.

The question was then put on the second part of the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], which was declared lost.

The question was then put on the third part of the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], which was declared lost.

Mr. DUGANNE—I offer the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Insert at close of first section:

And the Legislature may provide that, in the registration of voters, no person shall be registered who has been twice convicted of felonious offenses in any court of the State, and who thereafter, at the time of registration, shall be notoriously, professionally and persistently engaged in the violation of criminal laws and in sharing the profits of felonious practices and pursuits.

Mr. DUGANNE—Before any action is taken upon that resolution I wish to say a few words. It may not be known, but it certainly ought to be known, by gentlemen who represent the city of New York, that there is a large class, a very large class, a class large enough to sway the elections of New York, who are professionally engaged in violating the laws of the State. There are on the books of the police in the city of New York men who are known and registered as professional law-breakers, thieves, and other notorious criminals, men who are engaged from one year's end to another in violating and defying the laws. Every vote of one of these is a threat to a corrupt legislator, or a bribe to an unjust judge. It is well known, and I need only refer to the police records, I need only refer to the commissioners of the police in the city of New York, that there are at least twenty-five hundred men known as violators of law, who at every election, vote on the average four times each, and who, therefore, have the power of swaying ten thousand votes against the civilized and virtuous portion of the community. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be very proper to exclude the pure and virtuous woman from a share in the administration of our political affairs; it may be very magnanimous to prevent the man, whose only misfortune is his poverty, from sharing in the ballot, and in the administration of public business; it may be proper to make other restrictions—but, gentlemen, I ask you whether it is not more necessary, more vital to the existence and permanence of a virtuous commonwealth, that these criminal classes who are known, who are convicted, who are professionally reputed and believed to be violators of law, and to be always engaged in a raid and a war against society, should be deprived of the power to outweigh, by their votes, the good and virtuous men in society? I appeal to the good sense, I appeal to the morality of every gentleman on this floor, if we are not in danger of corruption, if we are not suffering from corruption every day and every year of our lives in those great cities where the ballot box as has been said by one of the gentlemen, the chairman [Mr. Greeley] of the Suffrage Committee, is in danger of becoming a "spittoon," but where, in my opinion, the ballot box is in danger of becoming a source of poison to the whole community. I do not wish this question slighted. I will not have it slighted on this floor. It is a more vital question than many on which we have expended torrents of eloquence; it is a question which goes home to every moral man, to every christian. There are men in the city of New York, who are engaged in demoralizing the whole community, keepers of notorious establishments, which are fountains of corruption for the youth of our land; there are men who are engaged and are sharing in the ill-gotten gains of gambling, men who hold out their lures and rivet their temptations on the young men not only of the city but of all the State—I say these men should have some check upon their powers in the State. If we cannot wholly deprive them of those powers, why, at least, we should refuse them a registry at such time as they are known, positively and notoriously known, to be engaged in breaking laws. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this question be not passed over in silence, or by the mere action of a rising or a viva voce vote. I wish gentlemen to discuss it. If there are gentlemen who fear those men's votes I want to know it. If they have champions on this floor I want to see them.

The question was then put on the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Duganne], which was declared lost.

Mr. ANDREWS—I offer the following amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Strike out "ten" in the second line and insert "thirty."

Also, "of the United States," in line three.

Also, add at the end of the first section as follows:

"Provided also, That until the first day of January, 1869, a citizen who shall have been a citizen for ten days, and is otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote."

So that the first section shall read as follows:

Every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been for thirty days a citizen and an inhabitant of this State one year next preceding an election, and for the last four months a resident of the county where he may offer his vote shall be entitled to vote at such election in the election district of which he shall be at the time a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people; but such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote.

Provided, That in time of war no elector in the actual military service of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from the State; and the Legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which, and the time and place at which such absent elector may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes in the election districts in which they respectively reside, or otherwise.

Provided also, That until the first day of January, 1869, a citizen, who shall have been a citizen for ten days, and is otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. FOLGER—Is it in my power to accept that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN—It is the opinion of the Chair that it is in the power of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to accept it.

Mr. FOLGER—I wish to accept the amendment, not that I coincide with every phrase in it, and will vote for some amendment that will alter some portion of it, but for the sake of hastening the proceedings; and inasmuch as this amendment meets the difficulty set forth by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] in his former amendment, I accept it.

Mr. McDONALD—I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Strike out all of the remainder of first sentence after the words "district from which," etc., and insert instead, "the election district in which he offers his vote."

Mr. McDONALD—The only change that this makes is to strike out the clause with regard to which there has always been some controversy, as follows, to wit: "And such citizen who shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election a resident of the district in which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote." It will be altered so as to read as follows: "But such citizen shall have been for thirty days preceding an election a resident of the election district in which he offers his vote." It changes the clause as it now is, which requires that he shall be a resident of that district in which the officer is to be chosen, to a clause which simply requires that he shall be a resident of the election district in which he offers his vote. The only object I have is to present the question which is presented by the report of the committee, to wit: that any person who votes shall have been for thirty days a citizen resident of the election district in which he offers his vote. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. FOLGER — Why do you want it?

Mr. McDONALD — I am asked why I want it. The reason I want it is this: in order to protect and determine who are voters. If we require, as we propose to, that a person shall be a citizen for thirty days, we should also require that the person shall be a resident of the district for thirty days. We have heretofore determined who are voters by registry and otherwise. In this way we can determine by the registry whether a person is a voter or not. I am aware that it sometimes deprives a person if he moves from one election district to another. But, let me add, the same objection also is made to the requirement of four months' residence in a county; and, as far as I know, that rule deprives more men of voting than a residence of thirty days in an election district would. I want it for the same reason that the former Constitution requires a residence of four months in the county and one year in the State. Simply, so that there may be time and opportunity to regulate and determine who are voters.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] would be entirely inconsistent with another part of the article he seeks to amend, to which his attention cannot have been called, which provides, in the language of the present Constitution, that every such person as is described in the first part of the section shall be entitled to vote at such election in the election district of which he shall at the time be a resident and not elsewhere. It requires no precedent residence in the election district, but authorizes a man to vote where he is an actual resident. It simply requires a thirty days' residence in the official district, if I may so express myself—that is, in the district in which and for which the officer for whom he offers his vote is to be elected. That is, if a man lives in an election district in the first assembly district of Cayuga county, and he moves into another election district in the same assembly district, he can vote still for member of Assembly. But if he moves from one assembly district to another assembly district, he is deprived of his right to vote for member of assembly, because the Constitution requires a thirty days' residence in the district in which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote. The object of that is to prevent the "colonization" of voters, as it is called, from a district in which a party may be strong into a district where it is weak.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I regard the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] as very immaterial, and I do not think it ought to prevail. It requires, if I understand it, that a voter shall for thirty days be a resident in the election district where he offers his vote. Now, with the other provision to be incorporated into the article on the elective franchise, there seems to be no reason for that requirement. A man the day before the election moves across the street. That is no reason why he should not vote for alderman so long as he is in the same aldermanic district. This is not colonizing a voter. He is still in the same official district. So a man may move across the highway the day before a town meeting, and thus find himself in another election district; but he is still in his town. Is that any reason why he should not vote for supervisor or for justice of the peace of his town? I apprehend not. He may move a short distance, but not out of his assembly district, just before the last day of registration. That, I think, is no reason why he should not be registered in his new election district and vote for Senator or for Governor or for Lieutenant-Governor. Such is the meaning of the Constitution as it now is, and such is also the meaning of the substitute offered by the gentlemen from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] and I think it ought to remain so, and that the amendment proposed to the substitute should not prevail.

Mr. GREENEY — The reason of requiring a thirty days' residence is because in one case the voter is in a district where he is known, and in the other case he is in a district where his right to vote is totally unknown. It seems to me that an elector may delay by one day his moving in order to save to himself the right of suffrage and not move on the morning of election or within three or four days of election. We cannot in the great city of New York tell who is entitled to vote. If a man may say "I will just move into this district this morning and have my name put on the registry," you will have gigantic frauds so long as you have men who move into a district where you do not allow time to have their claim to vote properly scrutinized. If you do not have that time, you simply allow a man to go into a district immediately before election, by some means get his name on the registry, and thus defraud the legal voters out of their rights. It is notorious that there are at election times what are known as "repeaters,"—men who make it a business to go around and vote in different election districts and are paid for doing so, and this provision reported by the committee is intended to cut them off.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. McDonald, and it was declared lost.

Mr. CONGER — Is it in order to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN — An amendment to the amendment is now in order.

Mr. CONGER — I offer the following series of propositions, which I wish to have considered and voted upon separately.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the prop-coitions offered by Mr. Conger, in words as follows:

"1. Every male citizen who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding an election, and a resident of the election district where he may offer his vote, including every white citizen of the age of twenty-one years, and every person of color who has heretofore been admitted to the elective franchise, shall be entitled to vote at such election in said district, and not elsewhere, for all officers elective by the people.

"2. But no person of color shall ever be admitted to participate in or enjoy the functions of sovereignty in this State, so as to hold any executive, judicial or representative office designated in this Constitution.

"3. Nor shall any person of color, excepting such as have heretofore been admitted to the elective franchise, be entitled to vote upon any Constitution of this State, or any amendment to the same now or hereafter to be adopted.

"The Legislature may if this right be approved by a separate vote of the sovereign electors of this State, admit all persons of color to the exercise of the elective franchise except as above provided."

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair must rule that under the resolution which has been adopted by the Convention the last proposition just read by the Secretary, cannot now be received.

Mr. CONGER—I merely say in regard to that, that the clause was framed before the committee or the Convention had adopted any rule, and secondly, that it proposes to place the matter in the body of the Constitution, and does not provide for any separate submission.

The CHAIRMAN—Does the Chair understand the gentleman [Mr. Conger] to appeal from its decision?

Mr. CONGER—No, sir, I only wish to explain—

The CHAIRMAN—Under the rule adopted, the proposition cannot be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The question was then put on the first proposition offered by Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the second proposition of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the third proposition of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

Mr. COMSTOCK offered the following amendment:

Strike out in section one the words "for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people."

Mr. COMSTOCK—The reason of offering the amendment is this: the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage defines the elective franchise to be the right to vote for all officers elected by the people. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], now under consideration, uses the same language in that respect, and both follow the language of the Constitution of 1846. Nevertheless I think there is a certain looseness and redundancy of expression which may be very inconvenient in carrying on the government, and may be even mischievous and fatal. Those delegates who were members of the Legislature at its last session (and I believe there are several on this floor) will appreciate the necessity of this amendment. The question was raised during the session of the last Legislature, as to who could vote for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. The right of suffrage by the Constitution is conferred upon those who could vote for officers of the State—the elective officers of the State. It was said in the discussions of the Legislature that a delegate to the Convention was not an officer of the State, and the question arose with the Legislature whether those persons only who were entitled to vote under the Constitution could vote in the election of delegates, or whether the Constitution was not at all the rule of suffrage in such a case, and whether the Legislature had not the power to say who should and who should not be entitled to vote. I believe I am correct in saying that one house entertained the opinion that the Constitution afforded a rule of suffrage for that occasion. The other branch of the Legislature seemed to be of a different opinion, and the result was a compromise resting upon no principle whatever. The Legislature did not incorporate into the body of the electors any new class, but by the adoption of a test oath it subtracted from the body of the electors another class who were entitled to vote under our present Constitution and laws. As I have said, the right of suffrage was defined in our Constitution as the right to vote for the elective officers of the State. How will the question be when one, two or three years from now an important fundamental amendment to the Constitution of the State shall be submitted to the popular vote. I apprehend that most people, certainly very many people, will suppose that the Constitution will have nothing to do with such elective officers, because the term is "officers elected by the people of this State." Suppose again, that question shall be raised, and it probably will be raised in our day, on our voting for delegates to another Constitutional Convention, what is the rule of suffrage?—what will it be on this most important, fundamental occasion? Will it be controlled by the Constitution, or will it be in the power of the Legislature to say that such men may vote and other men may not vote; will it be in the power of the Legislature to submit the important, fundamental questions which may lie at the very foundation of civil liberty with reference to the suffrage of a class? I suppose it is quite plain that there ought to be an uniform rule of suffrage for all occasions and all times when the popular will is to be consulted, and if my amendment receives the favor of the committee the Constitution will then simply provide that all male inhabitants of this State, having certain qualifications, shall be entitled to vote, not to vote for elective officers merely, but upon all occasions when the will of the people is to be consulted.

Mr. FOLGER—If the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], has clearly stated the point of his amendment, and I think he has, it does not touch the ground upon which the act to authorize the calling of this Convention was sought to be placed by at least one branch of the last Legislature. It is true that it was somewhat discussed, or hinted at in discussion, that a delegate to this Convention was not an "officer" within the purview of the Constitution as it now exists, and that therefore the Legislature had a right to give the choice of, or give the privilege of voting for, delegates to others than those empowered by the Constitution to vote for officers. But the main ground—I believe the true ground, and the prevailing ground upon which the right of the Legislature to enlarge the body of electors for delegates to this Convention was placed in the Senate of this State, was this: that when we came to the formation of a new Constitution, it was a semi-revolutionary matter; and it was the people, the whole people, who once more undertook the work of reorganizing their fundamental law, and that the ruling class that is talked of in this Convention, to my mind so erroneously, was not the only class to be consulted on such an occasion; for it was not in the ruling class, in whom rested the right to rearrange the frame of government, but in the whole people resided the sovereignty and from whom came the right of government, and they were to be consulted as to this new form of the organic law, and it was for them to determine who were to be called together to frame it. It was held that there is not of right a class who alone can rule; that to rule is a privilege conferred. And if a privilege, then it can be recalled by the power that gave it. That power is the whole people, and when a new Constitution is to be formed in which is to be laid down again, to whom shall be given the privilege of ruling, the whole people should be consulted. It was upon this ground, and not upon the narrow ground stated by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], that a delegate was not an officer. A Constitution is the work of the whole people, and the whole people are to be consulted, men and women, white and black. That was the ground upon which it was put, and that was the ground which prevailed in the Senate of this State, but which did not prevail in the Assembly. There was, therefore, a conference committee between the two houses, and a proposition of the Senate was yielded to secure, as it was thought, other important provisions in the bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] does not reach that position; for, if it is true, that in going back to form a new Constitution, we go back to the people as the people, they have the right to say, when they tear up the foundation work of the organization of society, who shall be the workmen. They have the right to be consulted and to take hold and assist in laying the new ground-work. Then nothing in this Constitution, however stringent may be its provisions, will protect and guard against that. Nor is this State lacking in precedent for the action of the Senate last winter. The act of the Legislature under which the Constitutional Convention of 1821 was convened, enlarged the elective franchise for the election of delegates to that Convention, and whereas it was given to a certain confined class before, that act invited to the participation in the formation of that Constitution another and larger class, thus recognizing this principle that it is the whole people who are to make the Constitution, and not a class, which are falsely called the "ruling class." There is no ruling class. The men who vote, the 'electors' as they are called in the Constitution, are but delegates, depositaries, of the sovereignty of the people, and as such they may be called upon to surrender and give up that right to those who gave it temporarily to them. A natural right to vote has been talked about here—a natural right to participate in the government, for both are synonymous, as the only way in which one can ordinarily participate in the government is by a vote. Does the natural right exist in any man from the foundation of the world to rule my action by vote? By no means. There is a natural duty devolving upon every man to rule his own action, but no natural right in any manner to rule the action of his neighbor. It is only by concession and by yielding and convention that any man has the right to vote, and so to control the actions of another man. It was upon this principle that the Senate proceeded, and the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] does not reach that principle.

Mr. HALL—I wish to offer a very few observations in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock]. I think it proper for two or three reasons not mentioned by the gentleman who offered it. In the first place, it strikes me that this first section is practically ignored by us in the election of certain officers in the State. The provision of the Constitution is that every elector shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people. It is known that in this Convention thirty-two members of it who are sitting here were elected not by the votes of the people, for all the people were not permitted to vote for the thirty-two delegates at large, but the vote was confined to sixteen for each of the parties. It may be said that in this case these delegates were not officers, but I don't agree with that. I think, they are in fact officers under the meaning of this section, and the same rule prevails in regard to inspectors of election; three of them are chosen, but each elector votes for only two. And so also with regard to those justices of the peace who are designated to sit as justices of the sessions. Although two are to be elected, the people are not practically permitted to vote for both those offices, but only one. And so with the supervisors of the city of New York the same rule prevails. Therefore, I submit this is a provision that is now practically ignored in our elections in this State. Another reason I would suggest why it should be stricken out is one that perhaps may not commend itself to the majority of the members of this Convention, but which I feel bound to state. I had the honor of introducing a resolution some time since, proposing a division of the electors of this State for the purpose of the election of Senators and members of Assembly, prescribing a different qualification as to length of residence in the election district for voters to the Senate from that which prevails with regard to voters for members of Assembly. Of course, if such a provision should be adopted it would be inconsistent with this present section. But I would submit respectfully that striking out those words will not abridge or practically change the rights of any citizen, and the effect will be simply that this section will state that every male citizen possessing these qualifications is a voter entitled to vote without showing for what offices he shall be entitled to vote. And if it is stricken out it will not be obligatory upon the Convention to make any distinction such as I mentioned, nor will the motion to make such a distinction render the Constitution inconsistent with itself. Another reason is that oftentimes propositions are submitted to the people not involving the election of any officer—such as the proposition to amend the Constitution, and a vote upon the submission to the people of that amendment. So, frequently other propositions may be submitted to the people which require a vote, and if we construct the section so it will read simply that every male citizen possessing these requisites will be entitled to vote, it will give him the right under the Constitution to vote not only for officers to be elected but upon all propositions of any kind whatever which may be submitted to the people.

Mr. BARKER—I hope this amendment will not prevail. By inserting this provision in the Constitution we take away from the Legislature all power to make the qualifications of voters, and declare that the Legislature shall not say what class of citizens may vote for officers which are to be chosen. It is a guard against party action in the future after the Constitution is adopted. If this amendment prevails, then the Legislature can at any time say what class of citizens may vote at an election. And we shall have the road open for the exhibition that has once been made in this State, that officers may be chosen to discharge high functions without the citizens having the right to vote for or against them. I claim it is in opposition to the elective principle for two men to come before the people, and they not have the power to vote for one and against the other.

Mr. SPENCER—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Spencer and it was declared to be lost, on a division, by a vote of 48 to 48.

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the proposition to strike out in the provision referred to by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] is a provision which has been in the Constitution for the last twenty years, and we never have had any trouble with it, and I hope we will not try to get rid of it.

The question was put upon the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews], which was declared to be lost.

Mr. LANDON offered the following amendment: Strike out all of section 2 of Mr. C. C. Dwight's amendment after the words "dependent upon the result of any election, of the right to vote at such election," and insert the following:

"No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay or offer to pay, contribute or offer to contribute to another to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing, to influence or reward a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm before such inspectors that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid nor offered to pay, contributed nor offered to contribute to others to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at such election."

Mr. LANDON—I simply desire to say that the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] requires the Legislature, or at least devolves the right upon the Legislature, to pass laws excluding from the right of suffrage certain persons who may use money corruptly. I propose to put that in the body of the instrument itself, and the amendment I have submitted is a portion of the report of a majority of the committee with the addition of the words "contributed or offered to contribute to others to be paid or used." It is the identical language of the report of the majority of the committee with that addition. I desire by that addition to strike at those men who contribute money in order to control elections. In close contests it frequently happens that large sums of money are raised by men who have means, and I desire to prevent the system of levying contributions upon persons who sympathize with particular parties, and by that means raising money. Now, if I can charge the contributor and say to him, "You contributed money." I will strike at the evil; I will make that man afraid to give any money, and will therefore prevent any money being raised at the election, and if it cannot be raised it cannot be used.

Mr. POND—There is one little aperture through this amendment, and through the report of the committee, and through the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], it seems to me. They provide against offering money and paying money, but they do not in either of these provisions provide any remedy against a man promising it. Now I think unless they do, the evil will not be entirely obviated. An offer of money and a man's note for it are different things entirely; the cash down or the offer of cash for a vote and a promise to pay it at a future time are different and distinct things; and if it be left so a man can be prohibited from offering money to purchase a vote on the day of an election, yet he may obtain it by a promise to pay at some future time.

Mr. LANDON—The gentleman will find that the amendment contains the words "valuable thing." A promise may be a valuable thing.

Mr. POND—A promise may not be valuable. It would be contrary to law to make one of that kind and legally speaking it would be invalid and worthless, but it may be sufficient to secure a vote, and so also in the report of the Suffrage Committee. If the voter is challenged he must swear or affirm before inspectors that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid nor offered to pay, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote. Now I submit that a candidate or other person may have promised a man to reward him for his vote and not be obnoxious to the prohibitions of that section.

Mr. OASSIDY—I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] to the fact that there are, I think, provisions in the report of the committee in regard to that subject, and I do so because it is before us printed and so explicit that everybody can understand it. If the language is not precisely what he desires it can be altered by the Convention, but I think this is the best basis upon which to form the amendment. Some considerable care was bestowed upon it. It reads, "No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer to pay any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at an election shall vote at such election;" and it has since been amended by the mover so as to read "given or to be given."

MR. LANDON—Mr. Chairman—

THE CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] that under the strict rule he cannot a second time address the committee.

MR. C. C. DWIGHT—I have no objection on my part to insert the words "or promise" after the word "offer" in the amendment as offered by myself, and I would consent to the insertion of the words "contribute to others to pay," as suggested by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon], but the point upon which I am strenuous and upon which I think the majority of this committee are inclined to be strenuous is that in regard to this matter, as in regard to many others, the duty of legislating upon this subject shall be imposed upon the Legislature and not assumed by this Convention. Make the power of the Legislature broad enough to cover this whole ground, as I am entirely willing and very desirous it should be made, and it seems to me we have amended the Constitution as it should be done. Now, sir, the framers of the Constitution of 1846 were satisfied, were content to authorize the Legislature to pass an act depriving of the right to vote at any election any person who should make or be interested in any bet or wager, and ever since the adoption of that Constitution we have had upon our statute-books a law of the Legislature which has covered that ground,—has made the fact of a man being interested in a bet or wager a ground of challenge at the polls. Sir, I have no doubt if we should authorize the Legislature to deprive any person of a vote at election who should pay, offer or promise to pay, or receive or promise to receive any bribe for his vote, we should have at the next session of the Legislature, a law passed covering that. It seems to me that all these matters of detail should be left to the Legislature, under provisions of the Constitution broad enough to provide for them.

MR. PRINDLE—I cannot concur with the remarks of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and I sincerely hope this provision will prevail. I think if there is any one provision demanded by the people of the State of New York it is this one. Of all the evils to be remedied by this Convention I regard this as the most important. Sir, this evil lies at the very foundation of our government. When the voters—those who elect the officers—become corrupt, the fountain is corrupt, and how, sir, can it be expected that a pure stream shall flow from a corrupt fountain? How can we expect, Mr. Chairman, that we shall have honesty in the executive officer, how can we expect that we shall have honesty in the judicial officer, how can we expect that we shall have honesty in the legislative officer, when the very persons who elect those officers—who create them—are notoriously corrupt? It is, I believe, sir, a notorious fact which no gentleman can deny, that officers are bought and sold like chattels in the market. It is a fact, sir, that in many localities in almost every town and election district, votes are purchased for money, and purchased, too, almost openly and unblushingly, by men who claim to be respectable; and, sir, I have heard more said in regard to this very proposition, and in regard to an amendment to the Constitution concerning this evil, than upon any other one subject. Now, sir, why leave it to the Legislature to make this amendment? Why defer it when we have the power in our hands, and it takes only five or six lines of the Constitution, to remedy the defect. I, for one, cannot see, I cannot understand the motive for placing this duty upon the Legislature, when it can be just as well done by this Convention, and by the people who shall ratify the Constitution which shall be made here. I am in favor, sir, of putting this in the Constitution, so that we shall be sure of it. If we say the Legislature may do this we do not know whether the Legislature will do it or whether they will not.

MR. POND—Say they shall—

MR. PRINDLE—That is not the proposition. I do not know why we should say "they shall," when we can just as well do it ourselves. We are not dependent upon any Legislature, or dependent upon any lobby of any Legislature which may hereafter assemble. It is for us to place this provision in the Constitution, and I trust sir, it will be placed in the Constitution. I believe if it is placed there, when a man of pretended respectability comes to the polls and offers his vote, and we have a right to challenge him and ask him whether he has contributed money, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of influencing votes or not, we shall have the power in our hands of remedying this defect. Men will not dare to engage in this business when they know that they are liable to have their votes challenged on that ground. Men will not assemble on the night before town meetings, or the night before elections, to contribute their five dollars or ten dollars for the purpose of carrying on an election corruptly, as is now done and as is conceded to be done by both parties, with such a provision as this in the Constitution. I believe, sir, it is the duty of every man in this Convention, who loves good order in society, who loves purity in all official places, to vote to place this amendment in the Constitution.

MR. BARNARD—I am very glad to hear these confessions that have been made by a gentleman from a rural district [Mr. Prindle]. I have been astonished since I have taken a seat in this Convention to find out how much corruption and bribery there is in the country. We see nothing of that kind in the city at all. Here we have gentlemen getting up all around us to try to put down bribery. It seems that in the country, in the pure rural districts at your town-meetings you meet on the night before election and you raise money to pay voters for their votes. I never heard of such a thing before. We do not have anything of that kind in the city [laughter], and I hope gentlemen if they wish to put down this bribery will offer such an amendment as will effect the object, and not do more. I tell you, sir, if you pass that amendment as it is upon your table, you tie the people of the State of New York hand and foot, and place them at the mercy of those who are beyond your limits. Why, you cannot even raise money to circulate twenty or thirty thousand extra Tribunes throughout the State to enlighten the people in regard to any subject about which they are to vote. It says you shall not contribute money directly or indirectly to influence a single voter and you must swear to that before you are permitted to put your vote in the ballot-box. Certainly we do not intend anything of this kind. If we do I hope the people of New York will never submit to it. We hear of congressional committees raising money to influence elections. We hear of manufacturers in the eastern States raising money to send into the State of New York to influence them in regard to the election of members of Congress who will vote for a high prohibitory tariff; and the people of New York tied hand and foot so they cannot resist this. They are not permitted to raise money to send a speaker into any part of the State to speak for them. They are not permitted to raise money to circulate documents or pamphlets of any kind in regard to any political subject, because the very object of such contributions is to influence the voters as to how they shall vote at the coming election. It destroys our whole system of electioneering. It destroys free speech and the free press. We cannot hold a ward meeting in our cities. I do not know how it is in the rural districts, where bribery prevails so extensively, but in the pure, uncorrupted, and incorruptible cities you cannot hold a ward meeting without paying for the hire of the room, and the very object of holding a ward meeting has in its view the influencing of voters at an election to nominate candidates, to raise means and ways to bring voters to the polls who are sick and infirm and unable to walk, to send pamphlets, documents and newspapers among the people, and to hire places where speakers can come and address the people, all of which involves expense, and the object of that expense is to influence the voters as to how they shall vote. Is it legitimate or is it illegitimate? I do not know but that you may carry it so far as to say that every man who makes a speech for the purpose of influencing the votes of others contributes a valuable thing for the purpose of influencing voting, and he will be prevented from casting his vote at the election. We want nothing more—when there are congressional committees and meetings of other States held, raising money and sending it here to influence our elections—than this amendment, to prevent free action, and we can do nothing but repel it. If we dare do it we are prohibited from voting. Now, if the gentlemen who are in favor of prohibiting bribery choose to insert into the Constitution a proposition to effect that object I would most cheerfully give my vote, if it is found that the Legislature is deficient in its duty in regard to this subject; but in regard to so sweeping an amendment as is offered by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon], after you come to read it and ponder upon each word, you will find that every man who contributes a sixpence to carrying an election, or towards paying any of the expense of an election, will be prevented from voting.

Mr. COCHRAN—I move that the Committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Cochran and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the Committee rose and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had directed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the motion to grant leave to the Committee to sit again.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN moved to recommit the report of the committee, with instructions to amend by striking out "section 3," and inserting in lieu thereof, the following:

"SEC. 3. Laws shall be made for ascertaining when the citizen offers his vote at the election, by proper proofs, whether he is entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established."

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that no such motion can be entertained in this order of business.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] to move to discharge the committee from further consideration.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I do move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from further consideration of the report, and that it be recommended.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the motion of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain].

Mr. BARKER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that we cannot adjourn and leave the committee in this condition.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that a motion to adjourn is always in order.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Barker, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER — I would like to have the communication from the Comptroller, which was referred to the Committee on Education, also printed.

The CHAIRMAN — The rule requires all these communications to be printed.

Mr. BEALS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be requested to report to this Convention:

The number of acres of land belonging to the common school fund in 1822, the report to specify the county in which the land was situated, the name of the tract and the several lots, with the number of acres in each. Also what lots have been sold, with the price of each, and what remain unsold. Also how much money has been received into the Treasury from such sales, and how much is still due upon bonds for lands. Also whether any sales for land under water have been made; whether land under the waters of the Hudson river, or under the waters of the East river, or under the waters of the shores of Long Island or Staten Island, or under the waters of the inland lakes; and if so, what sums of money have been received for such lands, specifying the sum received for each part, and whether the money received for lands under water has been added to the capital of the common school fund, and if not, the reasons for crediting it to any other fund. Also what lands belonging to the State, whether acquired by escheat or otherwise (except those sold in by the Commissioners for loaning the moneys belonging to the U. S. Deposit Fund), have been given away by act of the Legislature, whether granted to individuals, or to railroads, or charitable institutions, or for public use in any way.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the treasurers of every county and the financial officers of every city, town and village in this State, be respectfully requested to make a return to this Convention of the amount of fudged indebtedness of such county, city, town and village, whereupon interest is payable, and if it consists of several debts incurred at several times and for different purposes, for which bonds or other written obligations have been issued, then of their amounts and the times when and purposes for which they were issued.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN—I ask that the resolution which I introduced yesterday may be printed.

There being no objection it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution: Resolved, That document No. 30 be reprinted with the amendments of the committee thereto, and that the lines be numbered as in the case of bills reported in the Legislature.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BARKER—I move that this order of business be suspended for the day.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I would ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. BARKER—I would prefer not to do it.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barker, and it was declared to be carried.

The Chair announced the pending question to be upon the resolution of Mr. Champlain to discharge the committee from further consideration of the report, and to recommit it to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—The object of the introduction of this resolution was not that I might get an opportunity very briefly to address the Convention in opposition to the report of the committee, but from an apprehension that under the order of business as we were proceeding, I would be deprived of that privilege, and being satisfied now, sir, that the third section of this article must be considered in Committee of the Whole before it is reported to the Convention, and being anxious to facilitate the action of the Convention, I will withdraw my motion.

The question then recurred upon granting leave to the Committee of the Whole to sit again.

Which was granted.

The Convention then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

The Chair announced the question to be upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald].

Mr. LANDON—I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by me yesterday, so that the word "influence" shall be stricken out and the word "compensation" inserted, so that the clause will read, "as a compensation or reward for the vote."

The CHAIRMAN—There having been no affirmative action taken upon the amendment it will be amended as requested, if there be no objection.

Mr. KRUM—I would like, if in order, to make a suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would ask the gentleman whether he has not addressed the Chair before on that subject?

Mr. KRUM—I do not rise to address the Chair, but to make a suggestion to the gentleman who offered the amendment.

Mr. KRUM—I would suggest to the gentleman who offered the amendment that after the word "expected" he should insert the words "to offer," so that it will read "every person who shall receive or expect to receive, or offer to receive." My object is to make the person who offers to sell equally liable to challenge with the person who offers to buy. As the amendment now stands there is nothing that makes a ground of challenge for the seller or the person who offers to sell.

Mr. LANDON—Mr. Chairman, I will vote for that amendment when it is offered, but I prefer not to accept it.

Mr. BOWEN—Is it in order now to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion it is not now in order.

Mr. BERGEN—I have listened to this debate for several days on the question now pending, and had not intended to say one word on the subject; but yesterday an insinuation was thrown out, if I mistake not, by a member from the western part of this State [Mr. Landon], that there was a great deal of corruption in the rural districts of this State; bribery prevailed to a great extent, votes were bought and sold the same as sheep in the shambles. Now sir, as a resident of a rural district of the county of Kings, mainly inhabited by the descendants of the Hollanders and Netherlanders, I must say that this corruption does not exist in that locality. I have been familiar with the politics of that locality for years, and I have never known a single instance, where a vote of an individual has ever been bought or sold—I never heard of an instance. Now, if the western part of this State, settled by descendants of the Puritans, are so corrupt as is represented, the amendment now pending may be necessary, but I can assure this Convention it is unnecessary in that part of the State settled by the Hollanders and Huguenots. It is entirely unnecessary to be applied to that portion of the State, but if it is necessary to make pure elections in the western part of the State, I will consent to it.

Mr. PRINDLE—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does the gentleman believe that no votes are bought or sold in his county?

Mr. BERGEN—I have been familiar with the politics of that county for more than thirty years, and never within my knowledge has a vote been bought or sold; such things may have been done, but I have never known of such an instance.

Mr. PRINDLE—The gentleman dodges my question.

Mr. BERGEN—I doubt very much, Mr. Chairman, whether an instance of that kind has ever occurred in the county of Kings [laughter], with a population of nearly 40,000, more than double that of some of the western counties; therefore, on behalf of the portion of the county of Kings which I represent, I desire to purge that locality of these imputations, which may belong to the western part of the State, but which do not pertain to that part of the State that I have referred to.

Mr. HADLEY—I am glad to hear the gentleman from Kings state that there is no bribery or corruption in the county of Kings. I represent in part a district and a county largely settled by emigrants from Long Island, the descendants of the same class of men that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Bergen] says he represents. I have been engaged somewhat in the politics of the county of Seueca for the last thirty years, and can say this: that among the descendants of the same class the gentleman represents on Long Island, I have found men who buy and sell votes at every election and have done so, and I can only account for it by the fact, that when they get up into the rural districts beyond the influence of the great cities of New York and Brooklyn they become corrupt [laughter], but as long as they remain within the magic circle, they are entirely pure and virtuous. If it is true that in the rural districts in the county of Kings, there is no corruption, certainly this amendment will not hurt anything there, but if we are so corrupt in the rural districts of the State it may be of some benefit to us; therefore, I hope the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Bergen] will vote with us on this question. The sons of the Puritans are slandered everywhere, to-day almost; and when the gentleman from Long Island [Mr. Bergen] shall come in contact with the sons of the Puritans of the western part of this State, he will find that they possess as much intelligence, as much fidelity and as much virtue as do the descendants of any other people, whether they live in the county of Kings or elsewhere.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I rise merely to confirm all that my old colleague [Mr. Bergen] has just said as to his immediate rural locality, and the comparative purity of the mode in which its elections are conducted, when reviewed in connection with the exercise of the right of suffrage in other portions of the State. In the sequestered county of Queens, and the still more secluded one of Suffolk, I know of no such practices as have been properly held up for public censure, as being general elsewhere. The small vote (one-third of the legal one) at the recent election in the district that I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, shows that in that instance, at least, no effort was made to bring out a full vote of the entire district, however strenuous exertions may have been made personally by a candidate (justly a defeated one), and his friends to substitute deceptively his own name for my own upon the democratic ballots. It is pertinent to this view of the question to say that when in 1840 the registry law was first forced upon the city of New York singly, excepting from its provisions the other twelve cities—its delegates upon this floor (with whom I had the honor of being associated), contended that the electoral vote which was in proportion then as only one to nine of its population, whilst in the rural districts the ratio was as one to six—indicated so far as the purity of the exercise of the elective franchise was concerned, a decided advantage in favor of that much traduced city. I have no reason to know or believe that the lapse of twenty-seven years has at all changed these relations.

Mr. GOULD—These statements, sir, form the oasis in the desert. I am delighted beyond pleasure to hear them, and I only desire to have them fully confirmed. I would, therefore, propose to call upon Mr. Schumaker of Kings, or, Mr. Murphy, of Kings, to state whether they ever knew, in the course of their lives, any money paid for votes in the county of Kings.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I take great pleasure in answering the question propounded by my old friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould], whom I have known from my earliest infancy, and I know the reason why he asks it; it is, that there is so much corruption in the county of Columbia. When I was a little boy and living in the neighborhood of the gentleman, both parties used to stand around the polls with their pocketbooks out to buy votes. I left the county of Columbia twenty years ago; but once in a while I go up there about election time, and I see the same old practice. In the county of Kings a dollar does not appear as large to the citizens there as it does in the county of Columbia or elsewhere in this State, or in the county of Seueca, for instance.

Mr. HARRIS—It takes more to buy a vote then?

Mr. SCHUMAKER—They do not buy votes for dollars in the county of Kings; I have seen fifty cents buy a vote in the rural districts, not in the county of Kings. No votes are for sale there. I never yet have known a regular sale of a voter in the county of Kings in my life; they are generally men who are engaged in politics, and have target and steamboat excursions, and all that kind of clap-trap to approach persons running for office, and they are generally persons who are of the order of which there has been so much spoken on this floor—the “Know-Nothing Order.” They were not Irishmen, not Germans, not descendants of the Hollanders, but they were descendants of the persons who came over in that good old ship called the “Mayflower.” The most notorious strikers, the most notorious corruptionists that we ever had in our midst, and I speak a little from experience, are descendants of the Puritans and persons who emigrated into our county from Massachusetts.

Mr. FOLGER—Was Swartwout a descendant of the Puritans?

Mr. SCHUMAKER—Swartwout was a very small thief of the democratic stripe, but we have had in the last four years thieves of the Puritan stripe, that Swartwout, although a large man, would be considered dwarfish in comparison to them. I know Swartwout and Price committed a sort of petit larceny, but the immense larcenies and robberies which have been committed throughout the country since the republican party have had the ascendancy in the United States, dwarf the action of Swartwout and William Price twenty years ago.

Mr. LUDINGTON—Were the Willet's Point swindlers descendants of the Puritans?

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I would refer the gentleman to Mr. Townsend, of Queens county, as we do not know anything about those men in our county, and in reply I would ask him whether some of the great canal swindlers were descendants of the Mayflower people whom we have heard so much of?

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I would rise to a point of order, that this discussion is not pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion it has gone far enough in that direction.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I was about to say we had some persons with us who are very fond of money, but that they never received it openly at the polls as it is in the habit of being done in the country, where it is quite a common practice. But I never have recollected an instance where a person has been indicted—and I have had a little experience in the criminal courts of our county—for openly receiving money at the polls for his vote. It is quite common, I know, in the country, from personal observation, but I do not believe any of the gentlemen from Kings (and I see around me a great many of them of the legal profession) ever recollect of a single instance of a person being indicted or convicted for selling his vote at the polls. There have been a few indictments in relation to spending money, posting bills, hiring wagons, etc., which was called by the grand jury a subterfuge for influencing voters, but no out-and-out sale of a vote at the polls has ever occurred in our midst. There have been frauds at elections, and as I was asked by the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould], I would say that I have never seen anything like such frauds in the city, although I have no doubt that announcement may astonish a great many persons in this Convention; they either do it secretly or else they do not do it at all.

Mr. GOULD—I know the rock from whence that gentleman was hewn and the hole from whence he was digged. If it is really true that that gentleman of his own personal knowledge has never known anything about the purchasing of votes, I have only to say that the age of miracles has not ceased, and that you cannot give me any miracle that I will not swallow after this.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to inquire of the gentleman who proposed this amendment, and the gentlemen who favor a wise constitutional provision in regard to this matter of preventing bribery and disfranchising those who participate in it, whether they cannot find in the English language some more suitable phrase to use in this clause than "expect to receive." We have the word "receive" as opposite and complementary to the term "pay." And then we have "expect to receive" as opposite to the term "offer to pay." But gentlemen must see that an offer to pay does not have its full opposite in so general a phrase as this "expect to receive," because the expectation of a man may not be upon an offer to pay him, it may be founded upon something else. I throw out these suggestions because I think that to challenge a man at the polls on a charge of a general expectation to receive, without proving any offer to pay, would be nothing but an impediment to the exercise of the franchise.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Landou, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VREEDER—I would inquire whether it is in order to move an amendment to any other section?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion it is not now in order.

Mr. BICKFORD moved the following amendment:

Amend by adding at the end of section one, the words: "Provided further, that every man of the age of eighteen years, who is a native citizen of this State, and who shall always have resided therein, and who shall possess the other qualifications above provided, shall be entitled to vote for all officers elective by the people."

Mr. BICKFORD—In offering this amendment it will be perhaps expected that I should say a few words in its favor. It will be noticed that the amendment substantially proposes to confer upon the native citizens of this State—those born in the State and who have always resided in the State, and who have attained the age of eighteen,—the privilege of voting. It, indeed, proposes a considerable change in the right of suffrage as it has heretofore existed in this State; but it seems to me, sir, that it is a change which ought to be made, and which may be made with great propriety and with entire safety. The question as to who shall exercise the elective franchise is after all a question for the Convention and the people to determine. It is truly a conventional right. There is no limit fixed in nature, and no reason, other than an arbitrary rule, why a man should vote who has attained the age of twenty-one, when another who has attained the age of twenty years and six months, or twenty years simply, or eighteen years, should not vote. It is a question to be fixed by those who are to determine the matter, for there is no arbitrary line fixed in nature. I would say briefly that the class of men who are included in this amendment, as a class, are eminently patriotic; they have always lived in this State and are familiar with its interests; they have every means of acquiring an education, although I do not favor a mere educational test, yet I mention this to show the safety of this deposit of the elective franchise. If we wish to please the mothers about whom we have heard so much, you cannot better please them than by admitting their sons, who are their pride and delight, three years earlier to the exercise of the elective franchise. Now, sir, if we go back in the history of our race, we shall find that the period at which men have attained their majority has gradually diminished. Before the flood, when men lived to the age of nearly a thousand years, a child of a hundred years was still a child, the pride and hope of its mother. Afterward we find that Isaac emancipated his sons Esau and Jacob at the age of forty. Under the Jewish economy the age of majority was fixed at thirty years. Under the Roman Empire the age of majority was fixed at twenty-five. During the middle ages, in the Western parts of Europe, it was fixed at twenty-one, and we have adopted the same period heretofore in this country. Now, sir, in the age in which we live—in this fast age—men arrive to maturity both in body and mind at a great deal earlier period than formerly.

Does not every farmer who has a boy of eighteen years of age in ordinary health calculate he is able to do a man's day's work? I was brought up a farmer myself, and I was competent to do a man's day's work at sixteen, and I did it, too. We hold men at eighteen liable to the draft, and require them to peril their lives in the battle-field, and require of them a full man's military duty, and at sixteen even we admit them to make the most important contract of their whole lives, namely, the marriage contract. We treat them in many important respects as men, and it is time that we should acknowledge them to be men in the full acceptance of the term. The chairman of the committee, in his report, speaks of them as "half-grown boys." They are men and they should be recognized as men, by this Convention and the people. He also says:

"Nor have we seen fit to propose the enfranchisement of boys above the age of eighteen years. The current of ideas and usages in our day, but especially in this country, seems already to set quite too strongly in favor of the relaxation, if not total overthrow of parental authority, especially over half-grown boys. With the sincerest good-will for the class in question, we submit that they may spend the hours which they can spare from their labors and their lessons more usefully and profitably in mastering the wisdom of the sages and philosophers who have elucidated the science of government, than in attendance on midnight caucuses or in wrangling around the polls."

Is it possible that the acute gentleman who penned this, supposes that there can possibly be anything in it. How do we derive a political education in this day and generation? Is it by "mastering the wisdom of sages and philosophers who have written on that subject?" Not at all. It is from the newspapers that we derive our political education, and the gentleman is aware that the sheet he issues every day, or what is issued under his supervision, is calculated and expressly designed to secure the political education of the people, and it is thus we derived our views and our impressions on the questions of the day, and the duty that devolves upon us as citizens in relation to the matters involved in a pending election. The boys of eighteen (if you choose to call them boys, I call them men) are well posted and abundantly fitted to exercise the elective franchise. If intelligence is to be a test of this privilege, the boys at eighteen are much more intelligent on the average than many of the classes who we admit to the right of suffrage and who are rightfully admitted, for I would deprive no man of the right of suffrage who now enjoys it. But certainly men at eighteen are as intelligent on the average as men over seventy—certainly over seventy-five. The class of young men embraced in this amendment are certainly as competent to vote as are the average of persons born in Europe and naturalized in this country. I would not deprive any of those or change the law on that subject, but there are those who think there is danger from the influx of foreign voters, naturalized in this country. I do not anticipate any such danger, but if there is any such danger in that direction, the proper remedy is to admit another class in whom there is no danger to the exercise of this right, and if any gentleman supposes there is danger from admitting the negroes to a share in the elective franchise, let me say that danger is to be met by admitting another class, against whom no good objection can be made. I, therefore, hope, sir, that this amendment will prevail, and if it is not to prevail in this shape, if there are objections in the mind of some, that it only admits those who are born, and who have always resided in the State, if it is objected to on that ground, I will propose another amendment simply to strike out the words "twenty-one" from the report, and insert the word "eighteen," so that it will admit all men of that age to vote on equal terms with the rest.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I introduced a resolution of a similar kind with that now before us at the commencement of our meeting here, which was very summarily disposed of. I am glad to find there are gentlemen in other parts of this State who have thought over this matter, and have had occasion to think deeply on this subject of the rights of the younger inhabitants of this State to exercise the privilege of suffrage. I wish, therefore, to submit a very few remarks in support of the proposition of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford]. There appears to be two ultimate principles which are presented in regard to the determination of what qualifications should confer the right of suffrage—universal and manhood suffrage. Under the universal suffrage flag rank those gentlemen who favor the right of females to vote at our elections. Under the manhood suffrage flag are enlisted all those who think that every one who bears the port and outward semblance of manhood, and have the fully-developed mental powers of man in regard to his capacity to participate in government, should have a right to vote at our elections. All writers on this subject in regard to manhood suffrage, all who have exercised their thoughts and feelings on the other side of the Atlantic on this subject, have always conceded that manhood suffrage is the true limit and test of what should constitute the extent of suffrage in representative government. Manhood must everywhere be a comparative term. It is a term which derives its legitimate test and standard from the climate, the race, and surroundings of the inhabitants of every country. Manhood, in some climates, so far as the physical condition of man is concerned, reaches maturity much earlier than in others. I apprehend that manhood reaches its limit and powers at a much earlier period in the southern than it does in the northern part of the Continent of Europe, and natural intellectual vigor seems to follow the same rule. I agree with the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] that at eighteen years of age the capacity of learning and the power of communicating instruction to others, the ability to think well and deeply in all subjects involving the interests of the community, is as strong as it is at twenty-one. If the right of suffrage be natural, as has been contended by some gentlemen here, I would ask by what authority the legislature of this State, or by what authority we sitting here to regulate the right of suffrage, attempt to impose this additional three years probation before we allow man to exercise that right which he attains on arriving at manhood. Parties at eighteen years of age, in this country, not only are engaged in physical labor and the acquisition of knowledge, but they are also engaged in imparting it to others, and in teaching and directing others, and in superintending mechanical and other operations. There are masters of vessels at eighteen years of age, upon whose judgment and knowledge of navigation may depend the preservation of the lives of their passengers and the safety of their vessels and cargo. Men of eighteen have so fought in battles, as would not have done discredit to far older and more experienced generals, during our recent struggle for national existence. Men of eighteen have shed their blood by thousands freely on the field of battle in support of the independence of their country in the first struggle we had with the parent country. Men of like age have freely shed their blood and offered up their lives over the whole extent of this land for the purpose of sustaining the second war for the existence of the country. I find in the report which comes from the Committee on Suffrage that the colored men are recommended to our votes because they were "indiscriminately drafted and held to service to fill our State quotas in the war, with the whites, and henceforth we are to deal with men according to their conduct without regard to their color." So I say; we are to try men in accordance with their conduct and not in accordance with their age. At eighteen years of age, men are fathers of families, they bring up and rear the offspring who are to fill hereafter their respective parts in the nation and government of the country, who are in fact to compose that future nation. Marriage in this country, where the means of livelihood are more easily obtained, takes place at a much earlier age than it does in any other country. We therefore intrust to the care of a father of eighteen years of age the instruction and guidance of the infant mind, who are hereafter to become the constituent element of this republic, which is by them to be conducted to greatness or to misfortune, and yet we are not willing to intrust to him—the man who thus infuses into the mind of his children the means of knowledge which he has himself acquired, the learning of which he is possessed and the fruits of his experience of life—we forbid that man to step to the polls and vote for an officer however inferior may be his office, and however minute may be the reach of his influence and functions. I ask whether gentlemen are not willing to confide in the pure and uncorrupted mind of the "half grown boy," as he is called in this report. I ask the Convention whether they are not willing to trust the privilege of voting to them, with a fair field of life before them, with untainted principles, and with a love of honesty, honor and principle, that they have been recently taught by their parents, when they would spurn a bribe with indignation, rather than the man of party, who has learned to tamper with his honor and to yield to the temptations others may present to him: whether, if this whole country were governed by the votes of men of eighteen, we should not have more pure elections than we now have? I would more especially appeal to those gentlemen who are anxious to introduce men of color to vote at our elections, without any distinctions of property, whether they are not as willing to trust the white "boys" of eighteen, as they now exist, as they would a colored man of twenty-one, to vote for those who are to manage the affairs of this State. I appear in behalf of those who have hitherto been ostracized and excluded from the right to govern the country. I ask gentlemen to consider whether they will unhesitatingly and without reflection exclude all those men of this country, those "half grown boys" between eighteen and twenty-one, and at the same time say that they do it on the strength of the argument contained in the report of the Committee on Suffrage. These men of eighteen are therein recommended to dispose of their time as follows:

"With the sincerest good-will for the class in question, we submit that they may spend the hours, which they can spare from their labors and their lessons more usefully and profitably in mastering the wisdom of the sages and philosophers who have elucidated the science of government, than in attendance on midnight caucuses or in wrangling around the polls."

That recommendation might, with much more effect and justice, be followed by hackneyed and veteran politicians who have so long directed the affairs of the State, and been steeped in the turbid waters of its politics.

The question was then put on the amendment proposed by Mr. Bickford, which was declared lost, on a division, by a vote of 33 to 82.

Mr. OPDYKE—I offer the following amendment:

Insert at the end of the tenth line of the first section of the article reported by the committee:

"Provided, That any person not a qualified voter before the first day of January, 1870, shall not be deemed qualified to vote until able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his name; but this provision shall not apply to any person prevented by physical disability from reading or writing as aforesaid."

Mr. ROGERS—Is it in order to lay that on the table?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman that no such motion can be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OPDYKE—It will be seen that this is the amendment slightly modified, introduced by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], some time since, and which he subsequently withdrew at the request of some of the friends of this proposition. The proposition looks to the future elevation of the elective franchise by a method which every one should regard as unobjectionable, since it will deprive no existing elector of his right to vote. It seems to me to have sufficient merit to commend itself to the favorable consideration of this Convention, and to the approval of the people. The discussion it elicited on its first introduction, like other discussions which have followed it, took a wide range. Gentlemen have very properly, entered into an examination of the elementary principles which underlie the question of suffrage, with the view of defining the proper limits of that trust or privilege. This latitude of discussion is due to the nature and importance of the subject. The object of the discussion should be to ascertain, with all possible precision, the boundaries of the elective franchise, best calculated to secure the public good. Until we have done this, we cannot safely determine who should be admitted and who excluded. We have had many able speeches on that subject, but as no gentleman who has shared in these elementary discussions has presented the precise views I entertain on the subject, I will ask the indulgence of the committee while I briefly present them. Some gentlemen, taking the spirit of the Declaration of Independence as their guide, maintain that all have a natural right to share in the administration of the government.

This position, although in strict accordance with the original theory on which our government was founded, is evidently too broad. Literally enforced, it would destroy any government. Those who believe in its practical enforcement must overlook, as it seems to me, the great end for which governments are or should be instituted among men—namely, the promotion of the welfare and happiness of society. Whatever form of government will best secure that end is the best form. No American doubts that popular government, which aims through equal laws and equal civil rights to secure “the greater good of the greatest number,” is the type best calculated to secure the highest good of the whole collectively. This is the professed aim of our own government. Our statesmen have reduced the expression of that aim to the maxim just quoted, a maxim which, in my judgment, expresses the true theory of government. Now, sir, if we admit, as I think we must, that the true design of government is to promote the happiness or well-being of society, it follows that it should be so constructed as will best secure that end. Every constitutional provision should be tested by that principle. Those that embody the best known rules for securing the welfare and advancement of society should stand; those that fall short of that standard should be rejected, or so changed as to conform to it. This, it seems to me, is the touchstone we should apply to every proposition that comes before this Convention. Let us then apply this test to the elective franchise, and thus ascertain its proper boundaries. The first point to be determined is the nature of that trust and the extent of the political power it confers on its recipients. In all popular governments, those in whose hands it is placed constitute the governing class. They hold the supreme political power. They shape the policy of the government and dictate its laws. It is by their mandate that we are here to-day. They are taking note of our words and acts, and they stand ready to exercise their sovereignty in the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution we shall present to them, according as they may deem it conducive to their good or to their injury. True, sir, the body of electors, in the exercise of their sovereignty, choose to perform the immediate functions of government through the agency of representatives chosen by themselves rather than by their own direct efforts. Their numbers render this expedient unavoidable. But these representatives, with rare exceptions, faithfully execute the will of those who elected them. Nor is this all.

When taken collectively, the representatives reflect, with great accuracy, not merely the political opinions of their constituents, but their average moral and intellectual qualities as well. In a word, the representative body is in all essential characteristics a miniature reproduction of the electoral body. This fact may appear strange, but observation proves it to be true; and a moment's consideration will show that we have no right to expect a different result. The chords of human sympathy are strongest between those of like character and like condition. Therefore, the ignorant and depraved elector will be more likely to vote for a representative of his own type than for a wise and virtuous one, and vice versa. In short, the general truth, that like produces like, receives another verification in the product of the ballot, in the marked similarity in all essential qualities of the electoral body and its political offspring, the representative body. We are virtually governed, therefore, by those who exercise the right of suffrage. They are our rulers. They direct and control the whole machinery of government, from its lowest to its highest functions. Such, sir, is the nature and extent of the power that accompanies this franchise. It is as unlimited as imperial ruler ever wielded. How important, then, that those on whom it is conferred should have the requisite qualifications for exercising it in the advancement of the public good. Now, sir, what are those qualifications? By common consent, the first and highest prerequisites for admission into the ranks of the governing class are intelligence and integrity. These qualities, in some degree, are deemed indispensable for admission to that class by all governments, as is proved by the universal exclusion of idiots, lunatics and persons convicted of crime. In fact, it is a received axiom in political science, that intelligence and virtue are the only foundations on which popular government can be sustained. Any one who will for a moment reflect that the science and art of government constitute one of the largest and most intricate departments of human knowledge, cannot fail to appreciate the importance of having an intelligent body of electors. Nor can we, in view of the recent effort of highly intelligent men to destroy the best government in the world, overestimate the value of a patriotic integrity of character capable of resisting the promptings of selfish ambition and other evil desires. The learned gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], in his able speech on this suffrage question, some days since and again to-day, named three other prerequisites for admission to the elective franchise—namely, incorporation, independence and interest. With regard to the first, if he means by it only that those not “native here and to the manor born,” should undergo a probation long enough to understand our institutions, and for the growth of an attachment to our country, I agree with him fully; but I cannot agree with him in relation to either of the other two. There is no such thing as independence or entire freedom from dependence in society. The whole body of society is bound together by a chain of inter-dependence from which no one of its members can escape, except by a total severance from the society. This is as true of the body politic as it is known to be of the body corporal. This condition of dependence is reciprocal. The public official is dependent on the government for his place and his salary, and the government is dependent on the official for his services; the employed is dependent on the employer for his wages, and the employer on the employed for his services; the representative is dependent on his constituents for the trust he holds, and the constituents on the representative for the faithful performance of that trust, and so on until you reach the public pauper. There the reciprocal dependence ceases. The public pauper is wholly dependent on the State for the means of prolonging his existence. From his misfortune or fault he has lost the capacity of sustaining himself, and can contribute no strength, physical, mental or material, to aid in sustaining the State. Those who do this, rightfully constitute the State. Therefore the dependence existing between the State and the pauper is not reciprocal, but all on one side. The pauper is indebted to the State for everything, including life; the State is indebted to the pauper for nothing. Rightly considered, he is no longer a member of the State, but one of a helpless class who live through its bounty. Sir, let us be careful, lest sentiments of kindness or party interests mislead our judgments on this question. The proposition that those who contribute no strength to the State, and are themselves wholly supported by its bounty, have a right to share in its government, is so palpably unsound, that I am persuaded gentlemen who support it now will hereafter have occasion to regret it. The other prerequisite insisted on by the learned gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], appears to me to be wholly unnecessary. If interest in the State entitles a person to the right of suffrage, all persons are entitled to it, for every man, woman and child, including public paupers, have an interest in it. All are indebted to it for the protection of their relative rights, and for their security against force, violence and fraud. In fact, other portions of the animal kingdom have an interest in the government, as witness our laws for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Nay, more, the vegetable kingdom is not without such interest, as witness our laws for the protection of useful plants from the domination of the hardier, noxious varieties, such as the Canada thistle. For these reasons I think the gentleman should eliminate "interest" from his list of prerequisites. It embraces too much. Sir, even the great prerequisites, intelligence and integrity, essential as they are to the attainment of good government, should not, in my opinion, induce the State to confer the right of suffrage on all who possess them. I would withhold it, as we now withhold it, from woman and from minors. Woman, I think, has quite as much intelligence as our own sex, and she has more purity. She would, therefore, make an unexceptionable elector or representative. But I would withhold from her the right to exercise either function, for her own sake. The delicacy of her nature and the fineness of her sensibilities forbid that she should enter the arena of politics, to share in its fierce and demoralizing contests. Such duties are better suited to the rougher nature of man, but even to him they are not elevating in their tendencies. The effect on woman would be more deleterious still, and, for one, I am disposed to protect her from it, both for her own sake and for ours. So in regard to minors of our own sex, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one. With few exceptions they have the intelligence and integrity requisite for good electors; and they have an additional claim to the right of suffrage, grounded on our requirement that they shall aid in fighting our battles. But I would continue to exclude them from its exercise, for the same reason that I would exclude woman; that is, for their own good. That period of incipient manhood, instead of being spent in the exciting field of politics, should be devoted to preparation for some useful calling by which they may fight the battle of adult life successfully. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen from what I have said, that I would exclude from the electoral class all but adult men possessing the requisite degree of knowledge and integrity. This I believe to be the proper limit of the elective franchise if we would have good government. It differs from the boundaries established by our present Constitution only in this: it rejects the property qualification now required of colored men, and it requires a higher standard of intelligence, and also, if it be feasible, of integrity. I would abandon the trace of property qualification remaining in our Constitution for two reasons; first, because it is invidious in being applied only to colored men; and secondly, because experience has shown that its possession does not confer political knowledge. It may, perhaps, be best to retain this requirement in some degree in the government of cities, which are not properly of a political nature, but relate mainly to the care and regulation of property. But in relation to the State government, I would abandon it altogether. Men of wealth are usually so absorbed in the acquisition and care of property that they have little leisure or inclination to take an interest in public affairs. When bad government is brought home to them in the form of riotous disorder or onerous taxation they are both loud and indiscriminate in their denunciations of public men, and occasionally make a spasmodic effort at reform. But being, from their habitual inattention to public affairs, "most ignorant of what they're most assured," they are apt to make a sad failure of it, and not unfrequently make matters worse instead of better. As regards intelligence, I think the people of this State, and of the United States, have not sufficiently heeded the importance of that quality in the governing class. Overlooking the important fact that the electors reproduce their own average of intelligence in the representative body, they have placed the standard of knowledge too low. The present tendency seems to be to further depression, which I regard as most impolitic, if not dangerous. What the public good clearly demands is a higher standard of intelligence for voters; and for one I am prepared to take a slight step in that direction, such as the amendment I have offered proposes. Its adoption, as I have already said, would not exclude from the polls any who have now the right to vote. It would merely say to future claimants, if you wish your names enrolled in the governing class, you must first learn to read and write. This requirement is as reasonable as it is proper. If the applicant has too little of intellect or of self-respect to thus qualify himself, he would be properly excluded. A kindred proposition will be presented for the consideration of the Convention, making the education of all children in the State compulsory. The adoption of the two provisions would do much to suppress ignorance in the community, and in an equal degree to elevate the character of our State. Sir, I am aware that this proposition to curtail the existing boundaries of the elective franchise, although intended only to apply to those who have never yet been entitled to vote, will strike some gentlemen as an impolitic departure from our hitherto uniform practice of enlargement. The gentleman from Rensselaer, with his liberal views of suffrage, will doubtless regard it as a downright wrong. That gentleman cannot value more highly than I do the truths contained in the Declaration of Independence; nor can he place a higher estimate on the political wisdom of its author. But I beg to remind him that neither the author himself, nor any of his contemporaries or successors, ever attempted, in practice, the literal enforcement of the principle of universal suffrage. Why, sir, in the broadest extension of the franchise that has ever obtained in any one of the United States, or in any State with whose history I am acquainted, not one-fifth of the entire population have been entitled to vote. Under our present Constitution we exclude all of one sex and all minors of the other. We also exclude nearly all whose skins are not white; all of foreign birth of less than five years residence or who have not been naturalized; all native born citizens of the United States who have not been residents of the State for twelve months; all convicted criminals, and persons of unsound mind. Why have we not lived up to our original theory of unlimited suffrage? The answer is obvious. It has not been deemed compatible with the public good. This is the only true test of suffrage, as it is of every other prerogative of government. And, sir, it is solely on that ground that I would prospectively exclude those who cannot read and write. Reading and writing, I admit, are not unerring indices of the intelligence requisite for the proper performance of governmental functions; but I think the absence of that knowledge may, as a general rule, be regarded as evidence of unfitness. At all events, its requirement will be a step in the right direction, and it will serve as a basis for a higher step hereafter. The essential elements of good popular government are intelligent electors and faithful representatives. By excluding the lowest grade of ignorance we shall secure a higher average of intelligence in the electors. I hope we shall be able, also, to devise means for elevating the standard of official fidelity. If we accomplish both, I am confident the effect on the character of our State government cannot fail to be most salutary. At least two of our sister States—Massachusetts and Connecticut—have adopted this limitation of suffrage proposed by this amendment, and, as I am informed, have found its results most satisfactory. General Ashley, member of Congress from Ohio, proposed, at the recent session of that body, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States similar to the one I have offered. I welcome his movement as a bow of promise for the future of our common country; but I hope we shall not permit Congress to anticipate us in this salutary reform. I am unwilling that the Empire State should lag a step behind the foremost on any of the pathways that lead to a higher civilization. If she would excel in intellectual development, she must stimulate the demand for education by strengthening the motives for its acquisition. The well-known principle of commerce, that supply is measured by the demand, is equally true in politics and morals. Increase the motives for education by making it a prerequisite for voting, and you may be sure of soon finding every adult male in possession of it. The objection urged by the Committee on Suffrage, that it would be difficult to apply this restriction impartially, appears to me ungrounded. The capacity to read the Constitution would be sufficiently demonstrated by the applicant for registration, by his reading any one of its sections that the registrars might designate, and his capacity to write by recording his own name in the registry of voters. I can see no danger of partiality or unfairness in matters as simple and direct as these. Let us not fear that the people are unprepared to take this step forward, provided it be proper and salutary. They are ripe for every proper reform, and they are quite as capable of determining that point as we are, and they are more likely to act up to their convictions, because they have no constituency standing behind them, to affect their action or weaken their moral courage. I trust the amendment will receive the favorable consideration of the committee and the Convention.

Mr. CONGER.—If I understand the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke] correctly, he has presented the mercantile view of the foundation of government and the structure of society. He has laid down the broad and universal postulate that all we hold in society of human right, or under government of human liberty and sovereignty, is simply in the nature of a commercial quid pro quo. He says we make a bargain with a man for his services for a specified time, whether as a laborer, an associate in business, or a representative of the people; or society agrees with a citizen for the protection of his life, liberty and sovereignty, and opens its political ledger with him for the especial security of the latter, solely on the condition of self-support. It is all one and the same thing. The gentleman has laid down the Procrustean bed on which all must lie. When the bargain is concluded by the occurrence of pecuniary dependence there is an end of all reciprocities of kindness and humanity. Is it come to this, Mr. Chairman, in this enlightened age of the world, that a citizen must be told, because through misfortune in business and the infirmities of age he has ceased to support himself, that society owes him nothing; his obligation with society being that during his relation with and existence in it he must support himself? That this is the bargain which society makes with every individual; as the ground of his stand-point in the social state and his right to political existence, that he must never be weak opportunity to improve themselves—and if it shall be found hereafter that they have been so far improved and acquired so much knowledge and information as to enable them to exercise the right of franchise properly and beneficially, then the people of this State may confer that right upon them. The principle of my amendment is that this franchise shall not be enjoyed until those upon whom it is sought to confer it, shall have the opportunity of acquiring the necessary intelligence and information to enable them to exercise it properly. I do not propose, sir, as I have already said, to disfranchise any, but to leave the matter as it now stands—to allow those who now have the right under the existing Constitution to retain it, and to confer that right upon all those who may hereafter be born in this State, so that we may insure the possession by this people, as a class or race, of the necessary qualifications to enable them to exercise the right properly. I am free to say that were we here to legislate for individuals—if I myself had the right to select individuals from one race or the other who should have the right to vote, there are some who now have the right from whom I would be very willing to take it, and I would confer it upon others who though competent by reason of their intelligence and education to exercise do not now enjoy it. But, sir, we are not legislating for any particular individuals, but for an entire race. If I could be satisfied in my mind that the objections I here urged against this class or race are not sound, and that, as a class or race, they possess the necessary qualifications of intelligence and information, I might be willing to open the door to all. But, sir, that is a responsibility I do not feel called upon to take. It is a matter which the people of this State must pass upon themselves. I disagree, sir, entirely with those gentlemen upon this floor who say that they are unwilling to submit to the people of this State for their consideration, as a separate proposition, any measure which does not meet their own hearty approval. On the contrary sir, if any respectable minority of this House shall propose any measure which it desires to have submitted to the people separately, so that their views might be taken upon that question independently of all other questions, I shall be perfectly willing to submit it whether I approve it or not. I am willing to submit as a separate proposition the question of female suffrage, or that of negro suffrage, or any other proposition involving important principles which any respectable portion of this body may desire to submit in that way. Mr. Chairman, I have had another object in drawing the amendment in the language in which I have. I desire, if possible, to embody in the Constitution of this State the assertion of a principle, the correctness of which I believe, and for which I shall contend, and that is the principle which I enunciated yesterday, viz.: the unqualified and exclusive right of the people of this State, in their sovereign capacity, to determine who shall and who shall not exercise the elective franchise within its limits. I have drawn this amendment for the purpose of asserting the exclusive right of this State to do that, and for the purpose also of denying any claim which might be made, or any inference which might be drawn that we recognize the right of the Federal government or any branch of the Federal Congress, to interfere with us in that regard. I wish to draw the attention of the Convention to the language of a proposed amendment of the Federal Constitution and also to the language of the bill which has been proposed in Congress on this subject. As I said yesterday, I believe in that doctrine. I believe that the people of this State have the right to prescribe who shall be entitled to the right of franchise, within its territorial limits, and further, I believe that it is an exclusive right, and one in respect to which we cannot submit to be interfered with. The right to vote exists by virtue of citizenship of the State and not by virtue of any citizenship of the United States, if any such thing there be. Congress has no right to interfere in regard to this matter. It has no power to determine who are, and who are not, citizens of the United States. It has no power to legislate in regard thereto, except such as is conferred by the Constitution, and such power is limited to the passage of uniform laws, in regard to the naturalization of aliens. That power is conferred by the Constitution and is derived from the States themselves, and it would be strange if the States could confer a power which they did not themselves possess, and which they could not exercise or control. It seems to me very plain and clear, from the fact that the only power that Congress has is derived from the Constitution—that such power is restricted to the passage of uniform laws in regard to naturalization, and that such power is conferred by the States themselves, that the States must possess full and complete power to regulate and control the franchise so far as it is to be exercised within the respective States. I called the attention of the committee yesterday, very briefly, to the language of the proposed fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of June 16, 1866. The first section of that amendment is as follows:

“All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.”

Now, if the argument of gentlemen upon this floor be correct, that this right of franchise is a privilege or immunity, or is a natural right, or one of those privileges mentioned in the second section of the fourth article of the original Federal Constitution, and which follows the person of the citizen in every State to which he may go, it would necessarily follow from the language of this proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, just read, that after its adoption no State could pass or enforce any law giving to its own citizens, or to those whom it might choose to make citizens, the right to vote, or which should prevent any class of persons within its limits (including citizens of other States) from exercising such right. I am opposed to any such construction, and I deny that Congress has any power in the premises. The second section of the same amendment, to which I desire to call the attention of the committee, is this:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in the rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State."

This section, therefore, in substance, provides that if we undertake here to deny to any male citizen of the United States, who is an inhabitant of this State, this right to vote, then our basis of representation shall be lessened. If the first section be regarded as valid and in force, then every person born in the United States, or naturalized citizen, without regard to race or color, is a citizen of the United States, and under the second section of the proposed amendment, is entitled to vote without any restriction whatever, on the part of the State. The substance of the amendment referred to, is simply this: that any native born or naturalized citizen of the United States, who becomes an inhabitant of this State shall be admitted to vote on the same terms as any other inhabitant of this State shall be entitled to vote, and that if we attempt to abridge this right in this State, we shall be punished by a reduction of our representation in the proportion which the number of the male inhabitants so injuriously discriminated against may bear to the whole number of male citizens of the age of twenty-one years in this State. I desire, therefore, to present this question directly to this committee and to the Convention, and to ascertain whether or not the doctrine is to be established by this Convention, that the people of this State shall not regulate and control this right of franchise, or whether such right shall be enjoyed by all persons who may be declared by Congress to be citizens of the United States, without any restriction, and without any right on our part to impose restrictions, save under the penalty above provided. But, sir, that is not all. For the purpose of showing that the amendment referred to is susceptible of the construction which I have suggested, and that there are some who are disposed to give it such consideration, I invite the attention of the committee to the bill which has been introduced into Congress during its recent session. The bill provides as follows:

"That every citizen of the United States, who may have been a slave or the descendant of a slave, or by reason of race or color deprived of equal rights, shall, in every State and Territory, have the right, if not otherwise disqualified to be registered and to vote at all elections for members of Congress, for presidential electors, for representatives and senators to State or Territorial legislatures, for all State, county, city, town, and other officers of every kind, upon the same terms and conditions, and no other, as white citizens are, and may be allowed to be registered and to vote; and every State and Territorial Constitution, statute, and ordinance which is now or hereafter may be enacted, and every custom and principle of law heretofore recognized in any State or Territory, contrary to the foregoing provisions, are hereby declared null and void."

That brings up the question directly and squarely whether or not this right of franchise is to be enjoyed within the territorial limits of this State, under the conditions and subject to such restrictions and modifications as we may impose, or whether it is to be enjoyed under some permission to be accorded by the Federal Congress, entirely irrespective of the control of the people of this State and those who may represent it. I have, therefore, drawn my amendment for the purpose of bringing the Constitution which we may frame directly within the reach of the first section of the proposed amendment to the fourteenth article of the Federal Constitution, and also directly within the reach of this proposed bill in Congress, so that it may be seen whether or not we are to take a stand in regard to the right of the State to restrict those who may be here and to control the right of the elective franchise, or whether it is to be entirely taken from us and to be disposed of as Congress may see fit to grant. If Congress has that power then our time has been wasted, and we may as well go home, so far as any good we may do here.

Mr. RATHBUN — Will the gentleman [Mr. Burrill] allow me to ask him a question? I would like to know whether what he has read is a law or only a bill?

Mr. BURRILL — It is a bill introduced. I have said all I desire to say in reference to this subject, and I shall have accomplished my object if I have directed the attention of this Convention to the consideration of the important principles involved in the discussions before this committee. As I have already said, my amendment does not seek the disfranchisement of any class which now has the right; on the contrary, it opens the way to secure this right to persons born hereafter. It also brings forward prominently the question which must at some time be determined, whether the State shall control the question of franchise, or whether it shall be determined by the Federal Legislature.

Mr. HUTCHINS — I would like to know from the gentleman [Mr. Burrill] whether I correctly understood him to say that the Constitution of the United States nowhere recognizes a person as a citizen of the United States?

Mr. BURRILL — No, sir; I did not say so.

Mr. AXTELL — I am opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from New York [Mr. Burrill], and I am in favor of the report of the majority of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

frage, and also in favor of the amendment to that report offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], in so far as they both relate to the colored question. The purpose of the report is evidently to remove one of the vexed questions of political discussions, and I sustain the report for the same purpose, not because I am prone, from my profession, to indulge in political animosities as my colleague, the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] the other day intimated—and at this point I may be allowed to say that neither the profession to which I have the honor to belong, nor any member of it, need apprehend any particular damage, either from the flings or commendations of that gentleman. The report of the majority of the committee, and the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] alike propose to remove this question from party discussions. I have been accused upon this floor of attempting to make a party issue on this question, whereas it has been my constant aim and desire to remove it entirely from the field of party politics. I am tired of this discussion of the negro. Though never to any extent mixed up with the discussion of it by words, I have heard and seen the subject discussed with other arguments. I have heard and seen something of a discussion with other arguments—cannon shot and shell and rifle balls—in which the main proposition under discussion was the principle of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Burrill] in regard to the supremacy of State citizenship, and the question of the colored man as an incident. The discussion of that main proposition ended with the surrender of Mr. Lee at Appomattox Court-House; and when that mode of discussing the subject was ended, I did hope that the whole subject was closed, so far at least as it relates to the policy of this State, but I have been disappointed; the question has been re-opened by the gentlemen of the opposition, and for what purpose they best understand, but these gentlemen well know, that, but for the attitude they have assumed in this Convention, the question in this State, was practically closed. I have been also accused on this floor of charging the democratic party with the riots of 1863, and that the party is largely composed of criminals. No language of mine justifies any such accusation. I remarked that the criminal classes would vote against the full enfranchisement of the colored man if the question were submitted separately, and thus made a party issue. I have no doubt that there are criminals in the republican party as well as in the opposition. I instanced certain classes of criminals, among them those who burned negroes, thinking, of course, that those who had no scruples that prevented them from burning negroes in 1863 might possibly be so tinged with prejudice as to vote against giving them equal rights in 1867, but in referring to this I utterly disclaim any intention of charging the democratic party with the riots of 1863. Those rioters may have been the political friends of the gentleman from Clinton. From his sensitiveness I conclude they were, but that was no charge of mine, nor fairly inferable from anything said by me. And in connection with that remark I distinctly declared my opinion that the better and more respectable classes of the opposition, equally with the party with which I have the honor to be associated, would, if the subject could be disentangled from party and partisan animosities, vote for removing this class distinction, as proposed by the report of the majority of the committee. There are, to be sure, some respectable men of that party, whose aristocratic and monarchical tendencies would cause them to vote against any extension of suffrage—some of the political associates and neighbors of my colleague the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed]—who think and proclaim that republican government is a failure, and that monarchy is the only form of government fit for a gentleman to live under—men who publicly thanked God during the war for the asylum for the oppressed found in Canada; but the loyal and liberal-minded men of that party, if the question shall be untrammelled, will vote for equal rights and equal privileges. The sending of this question to the people, as the report of the committee proposes, without any proviso in the Constitution for a separate submission, without anywhere in that instrument recognizing or admitting the rightfulness of a class distinction—does in itself disentangle the subject from party politics. It places before the people an instrument symmetrical and complete, embodying the views of the most of the gentlemen of this Convention upon the propositions which are the subject of it. Now sir, is not this mode presented by the majority report the fair and manly mode of presenting this subject? Is it not manly and honest, as contrasted with the attempt to defeat the reform by the political strategy of separate submission. The gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] stated some time since that I gave as a reason for opposing separate submission and sustaining the report of the committee, that I feared if separately submitted, it might be defeated. But in that he misrepresented me, though without doubt unintentionally. I did say that there was a possibility that it might be defeated, but is this by any fair interpretation to be twisted into a confession that we are afraid of defeat? To take the proper means to prevent defeat does not in any wise imply a fear of defeat? We are not afraid of defeat, because we intend to use the proper and wise precautions which will prevent defeat. Let me show the absurdity of the position of the gentleman from Clinton and others by referring to an incident. On one occasion, during the late war, we found ourselves, after some hard and successful fighting in the morning, with two loyal divisions in front of a formidable position of the enemy, with orders to attack at a certain time. There were three strong bastioned forts. Between our division and the center fort which we were to attack, was a distance of about 1400 yards, covered with a tangled mass of fallen timber; through these obstructions we were to move under the fire of forty or fifty pieces of artillery. Now sir, suppose the noble man who commanded our division on that terrible day, had said to his superior, allow me to suggest that over there to the left is a smoother field unobstructed by this tangled mass; our approach will be easier; we can form our line in that ravine and get much nearer the fort before receiving their fire; if we are put in there we shall be far more certain to succeed; if we are compelled to move through all these obstructions there is a possibility of failure. Stop, says the superior; you are admitting that you fear defeat; that is cowardice; it will be cowardly to do as you propose. But, general, cannot you see that there is a combination of circumstances which makes our success almost an absolute certainty if you put my division in, in the manner I have indicated? No matter, sir, no matter; to move your division over the smoother ground would be to confess a fear of defeat. Now, sir, we are to-day in front of this last stronghold of class prejudices in this State. We propose to storm this stronghold and level it to the ground. To advance to the attack by the way of separate submission, is to move through a tangled mass of prejudices and partisan passions, and party discipline, and under a fierce cannonade of party misrepresentations—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair must call the gentleman [Mr. Axtell] to order. Under the resolution adopted, the question of a separate submission cannot be now discussed.

Mr. AXTELL—Can I proceed in order?

Mr. WEED—I trust the gentleman [Mr. Axtell] may be allowed to go on.

Mr. AXTELL—To advance by the way of combined submission, as indicated in the majority report, is to remove at the outset the obstructions of party passions and prejudices, to silence the guns of the enemy, and secure the success of the attack. Which mode shall we choose? Which is wise? We have the power of choosing our mode of attack, and our point d'appui. Shall we allow our enemy to choose them for us?

Mr. NELSON—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I make this motion to enable me to move in Convention that all speeches in Committee of the Whole be hereafter confined to five minutes.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Nelson and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Burrill and it was declared lost.

Mr. GRAVES—I offer the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Add to the first section:

And all women of lawful age of like citizenship, may vote for the same officers at the same elections—if, at an election to be held on the first Tuesday in June, 1868 (at which women alone over the age of twenty-one years, shall vote), a majority of all the votes given shall be in favor of exercising the elective franchise.

Mr. GRAVES—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOLGER—I would ask the Chair if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], does not include the idea of a separate submission.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that strictly it does. The amendment, is not in order, except the first part.

Mr. GRAVES—I do not ask a separate submission of that amendment. I only ask, under that resolution, that at an election to be held in June, 1868, if a majority of the women shall decide that they desire to vote, they shall be entitled to vote.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] has the floor.

Mr. FOLGER—Do I understand from the Chairman that the point of order is abandoned?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands the proposition to be not for a separate submission of the proposition to the people, but a proposition to accord to woman the right to vote dependent upon their determination of the question.

Mr. FOLGER—It is, then, not only a separate submission of a clause of the Constitution, but it provides for a submission of the question to a separate class. It has two elements of separation, and it is, therefore, doubly objectionable, and comes within the scope of the resolution offered by the gentleman [Mr. Graves] himself.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair concurs entirely with the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], but it has endeavored to give the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] an opportunity to be heard. The attention of the Chair having been again called to the subject, it must rule that the proposition of the gentleman [Mr. Graves] is out of order. The gentleman can take an appeal from the decision of the Chair if he desires.

Mr. GRAVES—If it is so understood under the rule I will acquiesce.

The CHAIRMAN—It is so understood under the terms of the gentleman's own resolution by which the subject of separate consideration was deferred to a future period. Does the Chair understand the gentleman as appealing from its decision.

Mr. GRAVES—If an appeal will give me the opportunity of discussing the merits of the question, I appeal.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair cannot put any bounds upon the gentleman's ideas in regard to the matter; but if the gentleman [Mr. Graves] departs from the matter of the appeal to debate the ground of his amendment, the Chair will feel compelled to call the gentleman to order. The gentleman from Herkimer appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. GRAVES—I was about to state, Mr. Chairman, that the rule adopted by the Convention limiting debate to twenty minutes (which is very properly enforced by the Chair), has compelled me to abridge the remarks which I intended to make and which are due to the question, and to present briefly, as I must, although in an undesired form, some of the reasons for seeking by this amendment to make conditional that which now appears to be unrestricted suffrage.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair must call the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] to order. He has no right to discuss the merits of the question on an appeal. The question pending is shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of this Committee?

Mr. CURTIS—Is that a debatable question?

The CHAIRMAN—It is within certain limits.

Mr. GRAVES—I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. CASSIDY—I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Secretary.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Add to the section:

This section shall not apply to any man of color who shall not be an actual resident of this State at the time when this Constitution shall go into operation, unless such man of color shall have been for the five years immediately preceding, an actual resident of this State.

Mr. CASSIDY—The object of this amendment is to place colored men, recently emancipated, upon the same basis as foreigners coming from Europe, who are compelled to reside five years in the country before they attain the full rights of citizenship.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I would ask the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] if that amendment includes white men who came from the South and voted in New York last fall?

Mr. CASSIDY—No, sir, it only applies to negroes.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Cassidy, and it was lost, on a division, by a vote of 37 to 77.

Mr. MASTEN—I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and which is designed to be a substitute for the second section.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime; laws may also be passed for permitting and for depriving of the right of suffrage persons who shall pay or contribute, or agree to pay or contribute, or who shall receive or agree to receive any money, property or valuable thing to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket, or who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election."

Mr. MASTEN—I am as anxious as any gentleman in this Convention, that the purity of the election shall be preserved, and that all measures within the power, either of this Convention or of the Legislature, shall be resorted to, to accomplish that end. Now, I propose this amendment, for the purpose of giving to the Legislature the entire control of this matter. It is impossible that we should put in this Constitution a code of laws against bribery, and the only way to secure a competent and perfect code is by conferring ample powers upon the Legislature, so that the Legislature, from time to time, may perfect a code of laws in respect to that subject. Now, for the purpose of showing concisely the fallacy of thus undertaking to place in the Constitution itself a code against bribery, or a code of laws on any subject, let us turn for a moment to the first branch of the report; the word "felons" is used there. I suppose it was not the intention of the honorable chairman [Mr. Greeley], who made that report, that persons who had been sentenced to be confined in the State prison, should immediately on their coming out, be allowed to vote; still they would be permitted under the section reported by the committee. The word "felon" has a well known signification at the common law; and there are offenses now punishable by imprisonment in the State prison, which are not felonies; they were a misdemeanor at common law and the aggravating of the punishment does not make a misdemeanor a felony, nor does it change the character of a crime simply by reducing its punishment. Now the object doubtless is to protect and secure the purity of elections; that is the object on all hands. It will be found, sir, upon an examination, that the laws now in force upon our statute book are much more stringent and go much farther for the protection of the purity and freedom of elections than does anything that is contained in the report of this committee or in any of the amendments which have been proposed. That shows us, sir, the importance of leaving the whole of this matter to the Legislature, and giving them ample power to pass all the laws that from time to time may be found necessary to secure meet devices and to secure the highly desirable end of making our elections pure and free. This provision, as it now stands may possibly raise another question, whether the inserting a provision in the Constitution in respect to particular cases may not take away from the Legislature the power of going beyond that which is contained in the Constitution itself, upon the doctrine that the expression of one thing excludes the other—expressio unius, exclusio alterius; and for these reasons I think it is wise to give to the Legislature the most ample powers, and to leave it entirely to them instead of undertaking to insert a code against bribery, or against the purity of elections, in the Constitution itself.

Mr. MILLER—I am strongly inclined to favor the proposition just offered by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten]. I have not been able fully to catch every sentence in that amendment; but, sir, I am of the opinion that we shall do wisely if we shall leave the formation of the law—its minutiae and machinery by which to prevent bribery and corruption at the polls—to the Legislature to enact instead of trying to put the provision in the Constitution itself. I think that a majority of this Convention are of one opinion in regard to the object sought to be attained. I think that we are all agreed that the improper use of money at the polls is a great and growing evil, and the only difference of opinion is as to the proper remedy. I, sir, am of the opinion that if we undertake to put the provision into the Constitution without any legislation we shall find that the schemes of designing men will get around or through the provisions that we shall frame. And, Mr. Chairman, I think that a legislative enactment has this one great advantage over any provision of the Constitution, that it is liable to be, and can be changed as experience and trial shall show the necessity for it. We all know what we want to reach, and what the evil is that we want to remedy, but if we fail in providing the exact remedy, the failure must stand for twenty years, if the remedy is only a constitutional provision: but if we indicate strongly to the Legislature our object and intention, and make it their duty to pass the law, if they fail at the first session, their failure can be remedied the next year, and as trial and experience shall show defects, we can have other remedies applied. Now this crime, as it will be a crime if we make it so—this great evil of the use of money at elections, is one that it would be very difficult to prevent at the first trial. Sir, if we make it a crime, it is a crime, in which two persons are only necessarily engaged; they are both equally guilty; neither of them has any motive for exposure, and it will be almost impossible to reach it except by the most carefully drawn provision of law, or provision of the Constitution. I like the plan proposed by the committee that it shall be made a ground of challenge, and that the person so challenged shall not vote until he shall purge himself by express denial under oath; but we can so instruct the Legislature to frame a law with that provision in it, and if we leave it with the provision in the Constitution, without any legislative enactment in aid of it, I am afraid that our law will be found defective. If it is too narrow it will be evaded and dodged. If it is drawn loosely there will be some loop-hole that men will get through; and if it is drawn too broadly as I thought the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] was, if it reaches objects that public opinion will not say are corrupt, if it goes so far as to shut out the legitimate use of money which public opinion approves, it will fall into disuse, disrespect and neglect. I think the only safe way is to leave the matter, with proper instructions and authority, to the Legislature to enact a law.

Mr. CASSIDY—The difficulty which the Committee on the Right of Suffrage has in regard to that, desirous as they were of leaving this to the Legislature, was that the Legislature could enact no law requiring in addition to the qualification of age, residence, citizenship, etc., any further requirement. No law which the Legislature has been able to pass within the past twenty years, has given a person the right to challenge a voter on the charge of bribery. It cannot be done under the existing Constitution, or under any other proposition here made. In order to make it a ground of challenge, it must be specifically included in the Constitutional definition. It is not sufficient to say that the Legislature may pass laws to prevent and punish bribery. They have always had and have exercised that power, but unavailingly. What is wanted is to make it a ground of challenge.

Mr. MASTEN—My amendment is to deprive him of the right to vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—The amendment deprives him of the right to vote in further elections upon trial and conviction—that is the extent to which the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], reaches. This provision is a self-executing one. It applies only to the election at which the person presents himself. It allows him to purge himself of the accusation upon his own oath, and it invokes to its execution the vigilance and even the animosities of the contending parties. If after elections we trust to parties and individuals to secure the punishment of those who have been guilty of bribery or who have violated some law in regard to the elections, we look to resources which are perfectly unavailing, as the experience of twenty years has shown. We must, therefore, in some form or other, make it the ground of challenge in some effectual and simple manner. I think that is accomplished by the provision as reported by the committee and amended by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon].

Mr. HALE—I wish to inquire if the amendment is proposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]?

The CHAIRMAN—It strikes out the second portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and inserts this in lieu thereof.

Mr. HALE—I would further inquire whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] was adopted?

The CHAIRMAN—It was adopted and became a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. HALE—I would suggest, therefore, that the amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], would be incongruous with the amendment already adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] that the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] offers his amendment as a substitute, and, therefore, it takes the place of the second section.

Mr. LANDON—If this matter shall be referred to the Legislature to pass the laws necessary to prevent bribery and corruption at the election, it may be, from weakness of the Legislature or their indifference to that subject, that such laws may not be passed; or, if passed and referred to the courts to carry out their provisions, if we do not retain in our own hands the means by which we can enforce these provisions upon the day of election, I am fearful, sir, that we shall fail in preventing the corruption and bribery which all men deplore; but if we leave this matter so that we, the electors of the State, upon the day of the election, when we are eager and in earnest in regard to this matter, can apply the remedy, can then and there, by challenge and immediate proof, ascertain and exclude the corruptionists, we shall be able to stem the tide of corruption which now influences the elections. If we put this matter in the Constitution itself, we shall thereby be able to satisfy the people of the State that we do intend to put an end to bribery and corruption. If we refer the matter to the Legislature, we shall subject ourselves to the suspicion that we are not in earnest in regard to it, and the people will doubt whether we do not really desire to leave this matter so that the Legislature may pass a law through which fraud can drive a coach and four rather than pass one which shall effectually repress bribery and corruption. If it is feared that there may be some defect in this constitutional provision which shall not fully carry out the purposes we have in view, then I would suggest that there be added to the provision as it now stands the further provision that the Legislature may, by appropriate legislation, fully carry into effect the objects and purposes of this provision. Then we shall have not only the constitutional enactment, but we shall place it within the power of the Legislature itself to add to that, so that if the constitutional enactment fail, then the Legislature can step in; and, if honest and earnest in its purposes, can supply the defect, and in that way bribery and corruption can be suppressed.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I think the objection which is made by my colleague [Mr. Cassidy], to the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], can be obviated by inserting two or three words. After the word "suffrage" there should be added the words "and exclude on challenge." This would give the Legislature power to enact a law to exclude on challenge.

The CHAIRMAN—There being two amendments pending, the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—Then I suggest it be accepted by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten].

Mr. MASTEN—If I have the power, I will accept it.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—And that he also substitute the word "shall" in the first line, for the word "may" so as to make it imperative upon the Legislature to pass such laws.

Mr. MASTEN—I will accept the suggestion.

Mr. PAIGE—I have come to the conclusion, sir, that there are but two remedies for bribery and corruption at the elections that can be effective. One is to provide in the Constitution that the sale of and trafficking in votes be a ground of challenge at the election, and the other is, that the successful candidate, after election, take and subscribe an oath that he has not used money for the purchase of votes, or for any other purpose of promoting his election. The gentleman behind me referred to a resolution offered by me and referred to the Committee on Suffrage, as being too sweeping in its character. I have prepared an amendment that I intend to offer before this article is disposed of, excepting from the oath such expenses as are now authorized by law for defraying the expenses of printing tickets, etc., but requiring the candidate to specify the several sums of money so expended, the purposes for which it was expended, and the names of the persons to whom paid. Now, sir, if we incorporate these two provisions in the Constitution I think we shall remedy, or at least diminish, the crying evil of corruption at our elections. This amendment by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], as I understand it, is not incompatible with either of the provisions to which I have referred. He aims at authorizing the Legislature to enact laws excluding from the right of suffrage those who have been convicted of bribery. This section authorizing the Legislature to pass laws, refers to a disfranchisement, to an exclusion from the right to vote at all elections, until this punishment is remitted, whereas the provision in the section reported by the committee, making the purchase and sale of votes a ground of challenge, only applies to the pending election; therefore, sir, the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], is not, in my judgment, inconsistent with the provision in this article reported, making it the ground of a challenge.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], that the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], strikes out the proposition of the gentleman from Outart [Mr. Lapham].

Mr. ANDREWS—I agree with the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller], that the better course to pursue with respect to the subject-matter under consideration, is to give sufficient authority to the Legislature to legislate on the subject; than it is to attempt to define in the Constitution itself, the causes and the circumstances which shall exclude a voter from the right to vote, and I, therefore, prefer substantially the second section as contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], to the one contained in the report of the Committee on Suffrage. I take it, sir, that there is no division of opinion in this committee as to the propriety of providing in some way, if possible, to protect the purity of elections. And, sir, I think that it will be better attained by prescribing the boundaries of the power of the Legislature in the Constitution itself over this subject, leaving it to the Legislature from time to time to adjust legislation according to the necessities or exigencies which may arise, than in any other way. But, sir, it occurs to me that the amendment now pending, proposed by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], if I properly understand it, is too broad in its scope and application, because, as I understand it, it excludes from the right of voting all persons who have contributed in any way to secure the success of a particular candidate or a particular party. I think, sir, that that amendment would at least create doubt, whether a great many contributions for the general purpose of affecting the result of an election, and which are proper in themselves, would not be prohibited. It strikes me, sir, that the original resolution substantially covers what will be required in the case, and while I would not prohibit contributions having a tendency to disseminate in a proper way information among the electors, and thereby indirectly promote the success of a particular party, I would point legislation to the particular evil to be reached, to wit: The effort, by the use of money, to reach and control the individual voter at the time of giving his vote; and it seems to me, therefore, that while in favor, as I am, of the general principle on which the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] is placed, that it is better to reject that, in the form in which it is presented, for the purpose of recurring to and reaching the provision already pending before the committee upon the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

Mr. KERNAN—I desire, before this question is passed upon, to express my very strong conviction that it will not be best nor wisest to remit this matter entirely to the Legislature. I think that, at least, we should have in the Constitution a provision that it shall be a cause of challenge of the elector that he has paid or promised to pay, received or expects to receive money, or other valuable consideration to influence votes, and if that challenge is not withdrawn he shall be required before he votes to purge himself by oath from the charge. I would have the provision substantially as in the amendment, or in the report of the committee, that he may be challenged for that cause, and required to take his oath before he votes, and if he do take the oath denying the cause of challenge that then he be allowed to vote. So far as punishing him otherwise than by prevent-evil of the use of money at elections, is one that it would be very difficult to prevent at the first trial. Sir, if we make it a crime, it is a crime, in which two persons are only necessarily engaged; they are both equally guilty; neither of them has any motive for exposure, and it will be almost impossible to reach it except by the most carefully drawn provision of law, or provision of the Constitution. I like the plan proposed by the committee that it shall be made a ground of challenge, and that the person so challenged shall not vote until he shall purge himself by express denial under oath; but we can so instruct the Legislature to frame a law with that provision in it, and if we leave it with the provision in the Constitution, without any legislative enactment in aid of it, I am afraid that our law will be found defective. If it is too narrow it will be evaded and dodged. If it is drawn loosely there will be some loop-hole that men will get through; and if it is drawn too broadly as I thought the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] was, if it reaches objects that public opinion will not say are corrupt, if it goes so far as to shut out the legitimate use of money which public opinion approves, it will fall into disuse, disrespect and neglect. I think the only safe way is to leave the matter, with proper instructions and authority, to the Legislature to enact a law.

Mr. CASSIDY—The difficulty which the Committee on the Right of Suffrage had in regard to that, desirous as they were of leaving this to the Legislature, was that the Legislature could enact no law requiring in addition to the qualification of age, residence, citizenship, etc., any further requirement. No law which the Legislature has been able to pass within the past twenty years, has given a person the right to challenge a voter on the charge of bribery. It cannot be done under the existing Constitution, or under any other proposition here made. In order to make it a ground of challenge, it must be specifically included in the Constitutional definition. It is not sufficient to say that the Legislature may pass laws to prevent and punish bribery. They have always had and have exercised that power, but unavailingly. What is wanted is to make it a ground of challenge.

Mr. MASTEN—My amendment is to deprive him of the right to vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—The amendment deprives him of the right to vote in further elections upon trial and conviction—that is the extent to which the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], reaches. This provision is a self-executing one. It applies only to the election at which the person presents himself. It allows him to purge himself of the accusation upon his own oath, and it invokes to its execution the vigilance and even the animosities of the contending parties. If after elections we trust to parties and individuals to secure the punishment of those who have been guilty of bribery or who have violated some law in regard to the elections, we look to resources which are perfectly unavailing, as the experience of twenty years has shown. We must, therefore, in some form or other, make it the ground of challenge in some effectual and simple manner. I think that is accomplished by the provision as reported by the committee and amended by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon].

Mr. HALE—I wish to inquire if the amendment is proposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]?

The CHAIRMAN—It strikes out the second portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and inserts this in lieu thereof.

Mr. HALE—I would further inquire whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] was adopted?

The CHAIRMAN—It was adopted and became a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. HALE—I would suggest, therefore, that the amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], would be incongruous with the amendment already adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] that the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] offers his amendment as a substitute, and, therefore, it takes the place of the second section.

Mr. LANDON—If this matter shall be referred to the Legislature to pass the laws necessary to prevent bribery and corruption at the election, it may be, from weakness of the Legislature or their indifference to that subject, that such laws may not be passed; or, if passed and referred to the courts to carry out their provisions, if we do not retain in our own hands the means by which we can enforce these provisions upon the day of election, I am fearful, sir, that we shall fail in preventing the corruption and bribery which all men deplore; but if we leave this matter so that we, the electors of the State, upon the day of the election, when we are eager and in earnest in regard to this matter, can apply the remedy, can then and there, by challenge and immediate proof, ascertain and exclude the corruptionists, we shall be able to stem the tide of corruption which now influences the elections. If we put this matter in the Constitution itself, we shall thereby be able to satisfy the people of the State that we do intend to put an end to bribery and corruption. If we refer the matter to the Legislature, we shall subject ourselves to the suspicion that we are not in earnest in regard to it, and the people will doubt whether we do not really desire to leave this matter so that the Legislature may pass a law through which fraud can drive a coach and four rather than pass one which shall effectually repress bribery and corruption. If it is feared that there may be some defect in this constitutional provision which shall not fully carry out the purposes we have in view, then I would suggest that there be added to the provision as it now stands the further provision that the Legislature may, by appropriate legislation, fully carry into effect the objects and purposes of this provision. Then we shall have not only the constitutional enactment, but we shall place it within the power of the Legislature itself to add to that, so that if the constitutional enactment fail, then the Legislature can step in; and, if honest and earnest in its do not desire to speak of that class of citizens in this country with disrespect; but I will say this, that the Puritan character is a many-sided crystal, and on some sides shows a deeply discolored face. I need not dwell upon the earlier history of this country when the Puritan shook hands with Georgia and secured for us the slave trade, nor the period when the Puritan engaged in the manufacture of New England rum to debauch the country. It is right that repentance should begin at home. It is right that the Puritan should undertake an anti-slavery crusade in his own State, and a Maine Law movement there. I do not object to that. But I do hope that you will remember, that the institutions of the State of New York were founded and moulded by men of Holland birth, by men not ashamed in that day to be known either as Irishmen or of Scotch or Cavalier descent. It is unfair in this tribunal of the people to speak of the Puritan ancestry as if that was the only source from which all purity could descend. It is very much like the pious nonchalance of Holy Willie, in Burns' prayer, when it is claimed that the Puritan in the State of New York is "A burning and a shining light

In a' this place."

Now, as I said before, I do not object to any gentleman in this Convention of the people undertaking to mature a wise system for the correction of these or other public mischiefs. If I have studied any of the facts in the history of this State since 1851 correctly, the evil of bribery in the planning and prosecution of political campaigns has grown up under the auspices of the dominant party, and I believe the credit and the duty falls to them of undertaking to perfect a proper and suitable system for correcting the evil which they themselves inaugurated. But I protest against abusing the body of the people in this hall of their representatives, as if all the people were corrupt, or as if the methods of corruption were to be singled or parceled out by localities. In the name of the people of the county which I represent, I enter my entire, candid and serious remonstrance. But to go back to what I have mostly in hand. Sir, if gentlemen are disposed to believe that the Legislature of 1853 had considered well their remedial propositions, if they are willing to imagine that there were matured after a long and protracted discussion, in which the minds of the most prominent jurists in that body were engaged, they may possibly derive some benefit from a brief statement of the result of their labors. In the first place, in the amendments as perfected by them, they desired to interpose in the second section of article 2, immediately after the word "election" these words: "or who shall pay, give or receive, or promise to pay or give any money or other property or valuable consideration, with intent to influence any elector in giving his vote, or to deter any elector from voting." We considered that the evil then was not simply the offer of money to induce a man to vote in a certain direction, but that there was a great influence exerted to deter men from the polls, or to induce them to withhold their votes, and when the time comes, I shall ask you to insert that clause in this article, so that you will not only make it a crime to influence men to vote in a particular way, but you must also make it a crime to deter a man from voting or induce him to withhold his vote. Now, then, further on, the Legislature of 1853 proposed that laws should be passed for determining in a summary manner at the polls, all questions affecting the right of any person to vote thereat, so that section two as amended is very much in the spirit of the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten]. But it is far more comprehensive, and it carries throughout this idea, that you have not only to provide against a positive corrupt voting, but from deterring, or hindering, or preventing men from going to or inducing them to stay away from the polls. And there is another class of cases which they thought a matter of some consequence, the reasons for which I need not enlarge upon, as probably some gentleman upon this floor will suggest more fully the grounds of such propriety, that was preventing corruptionists from holding any office voted for at such election. I think, Mr. Chairman, that when we have got fairly into a position where this amendment might be offered, the reasonable and the right-minded men of this Convention will not refuse their approbation. But as I did not get an affirmative answer to the question I proposed this morning, I desire now to discuss a part of the proposition of the gentleman from Schoenectady [Mr. Landon]. Now, see what he desires. He wishes to deprive a man of the right of suffrage who not only receives but expects to receive some consideration. Very well; but, if you remember, he couples with that the right of challenge at the polls, so that it would be competent for the dominant party in the exercise of this power to require of every person who presented himself after the hour when all their party had cast their votes to submit to the test of this oath, and to swear that he had not only not received but that he did not expect to receive anything of whatever kind as the result of his action. I wish to know what is the effect of asking a man at the polls to swear that he does not expect to receive any possible return in consequence of a vote he gives. For, if I do not mistake the purport of this strict test-oath which you are now seeking to carry into effect, is to negative all possible expectation of receiving any possibly valuable consideration by reason of his vote.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] allow me to suggest what I suppose is the meaning of it?

Mr. CONGER—I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND—This, I understand, is often done at elections; indeed I have seen it done. A man says "Here is five dollars; you go and vote this ticket and you shall have this money."

Mr. CONGER—The remedy as provided by the Legislature of 1853 is amply sufficient if you challenge the vote of a man who agrees directly or indirectly to receive. To require of a man who is about to vote to swear that he does not expect in any way to receive any benefit covers too much ground. If you limit it to his expecting to receive money at any time after the election, I shall not interpose any objection. But when you couple with it not only money but valuable con-ing him from voting at that election, this may be very well left to the Legislature; but to the extent of making this a ground of challenge, I think our experience is in favor of doing so. It is very easy to make the challenge; it is very easy, if the elector be honest, that he shall purge himself and vote; and I think we will find that such a provision in the Constitution will be very efficacious in preventing the evil complained of. When the elector can be challenged and required to take an oath at the polls, it will have a great deal more effect in preventing the corruption of which all complain than any penal system of laws which the Legislature may enact to punish him afterward. I therefore hope that the Convention will retain in some form that test of the purity of the elector, and then anything else that is desired in reference to punishing him otherwise, when he is convicted, may be very well left to the Legislature. I think with that provision, and with the other provision which I know several gentlemen design to introduce at the proper time, by which the person elected to office shall be required to take an oath to the effect that he has not used money improperly, will effect more reform than any system of legislation for punishing otherwise, however stringent it may be. And moreover, sir, I fear if we do not put this test in the Constitution, there will be a good deal of difficulty in getting laws enacted which shall effect the purpose which this will effect.

Mr. GRAVES—I move the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Graves, and was declared carried. Thereupon the Committee rose and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had directed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put upon granting leave and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL—I move that we take a recess until four o'clock.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Bell and it was declared carried.

So the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock, and again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

The Chairman announced the pending question to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. Masten to the amendment offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight.

Mr. CONGER—I deem it due to the committee to state that the subject now before it of putting a sufficient check upon bribery at elections, is one which has heretofore occupied the attention of and action in definite form by the representatives of the people. It has long heretofore been admitted that the provisions of the Constitution of 1846 were not sufficient to cover the desired result. So, Mr. Chairman, when in the Legislature of 1853, in which I had the honor to have a seat, this subject was presented in view of the gross corruptions which had been practiced prior to that time, although they were not as great or as numerous as those which have since shocked the public sentiment, the Legislature, with great unanimity, passed a series of provisions amending the Constitution, to which you will permit me to draw your attention. Now, in view of what has been said, (and I wish to speak with no unnecessary reference to party distinctions) it ought to be remembered that the Legislature of 1853 had the reputation of being entirely a democratic body; and I advert to the fact for this purpose, to show why it was, and in what way the propositions matured in 1853 were lost, for as you are aware the Constitution required that they should be submitted to the Legislature at the next ensuing election of Senators. In pursuance of that requirement of the Constitution the amendments proposed by the Legislature of 1853 were sent down to the Legislature of 1854 of which it may be said that it was not only largely republican, but that they entirely ignored the attempt made by the democratic Legislature of 1853 to check the evil. Seeing what has occurred since, I deem it right and proper that the majority of this body should undertake to reform an evil which has grown to such great magnitude under their auspices. There is a great disposition here, Mr. Chairman, to allude to corruption in the body of the people. I think, with greater propriety, we might refer to the corruption which now exists in high positions. This morning, when this subject was under discussion, some allusion might have been made to the fact that a republican member from this State, of the House of Representatives had been ejected by Congress in view of the bribery practiced by him as a representative of the people. I do not wish to draw too strongly upon your historical recollections to ask if it was not notorious that no little part of the Washington schemes which culminated in his Congressional eviction were connected with the Albany scheme by which large sums of money or a large patronage was to be secured for his associates by canal contracts under the fraudulent lettings of 1851. But when we come to the facts as they are at the present day, and amid other like announcements find the Secretary of the Treasury complains that his officials, all loyal men, are so corrupt that it is impossible for him properly to collect the revenue, I submit we should not undertake here in our place to stigmatize the body of the people. If we make any inquisition, let us find out at whose door the fault lies. Who are the men that are guilty of these great crimes of perverting the franchise and attempting to corrupt the people. We had an admission here this morning by my honorable friend on my right, which would lead us to suppose that all these high crimes were confined to a certain class outside of that known as the Puritan. I and corruption, and leaving it to the Legislature, it is preposterous in my estimation, and I am surprised that gentlemen will urge any such proposition as this, to leave to the Legislature the question of bribery and corruption. What have you heard here during these debates? Why, sir, it has been heard, and it is believed, and if it is not believed by the members of this Convention, it is believed by all the people, that, I will not say the majority of the Legislature is elected through bribery and corruption, but a large portion of its members are elected through this means. What do you propose to do? To leave to this very nice body so elected, and to be repaid through legislative corruption to pass laws against bribery and corruption—that is the proposition. That is the practical effect of it as I understand it. Why, sir, to leave to the Legislature the power to pass laws against bribery and corruption what is it? I do not mean any disrespect to many honorable members of the Legislature, but it would be setting a thief to catch a thief. Worse than that, sir, it would be empowering a thief to sit in judgment, and say how much punishment should be administered to a thief. That is the practical operation of that proposition as I understand it. Now, sir, the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] presented a proposition here the other day; one of the most practical remedies against a particular kind of bribery and corruption. It is not entirely fresh in my recollection, but his proposition as I remember it, was that it should be part of the oath of a public officer, a member of Assembly, or a member of any public body, to swear that when he was elected he did not pay and use any money for his selection. That is the proposition, as I understand it in that of the gentleman. If I am wrong, I ask the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] to correct me. Sir, there is something, there is good sense in that, there is the good sense of the jurist and patriot in that, in my humble opinion. Why, sir, if we have degenerated to this; if we have become so totally depraved that there is a person that will walk that aisle, and place his hand upon the Bible there and take the oath of office as a member of the Legislature and swear that he has paid no money when he has paid money; why, sir, I repeat, if we have become so totally depraved as that, there is no use of any more Constitutions or laws. The only punishment that can be inflicted upon such a person is a punishment beyond this world. If I should believe all the charges members of this Convention have made against the last Legislature—I must confess that I had lived long enough to change my mind upon the doctrine of total depravity. I should be glad to see some such provision as proposed by the gentleman from Schenectady adopted into the Constitution, and not leave the purification of the elective franchise to the easy virtue of modern Legislatures.

Mr. BECKWITH—I wish to inquire whether, if the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] prevails, it takes the place of the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige].

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands that it is offered as a substitute.

Mr. BECKWITH—I am in favor virtually of both propositions. I believe it wise, on our part, to introduce into this Constitution a provision for the punishment of bribery, distinct and emphatic; one that would be clear to the understanding of every individual; and, while I do that, I am also in favor of making it the duty of the Legislature to provide by law to carry out that object and to make such provision as would render the full accomplishment of the object to be desired. The evil of which we complain is not to be reached by that single provision which the gentleman from Schenectady would have introduced, for, if I am correctly informed, the evil lies beyond it. One of the greatest evils is this.—You and I very well know, Mr. Chairman, that in many localities in this State the democratic party is largely in the majority, and in other localities the republican party is also largely in the majority. We know very well that certain individuals in these localities control these caucuses. They are your noisy, boisterous, bar-room politicians that control the nominations made at these caucuses; and we know that in some of these localities a nomination is an election, and if I am correctly informed, there are in certain localities in this State persons who take it upon themselves to say to the friends of certain candidates, "if your friend wants to be nominated—the nomination being an election—give us one thousand dollars, give us two thousand dollars, give us three thousand dollars, or some other sum, and we will secure his nomination." And to the friends of other candidates for nomination they will say the same, and they will finally get up a strife and a bid, and I have been informed (I won't say I have been correctly informed) that even the office of a judge has been tendered to men if they or their friends would secure to those men who control these nominations four thousand dollars, and that the friends of others have stepped in and said "We will give you five thousand dollars," and they have thereby secured their nomination and their election. The reason why I am in favor of both propositions is this, that by the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] we cannot reach this evil, but if we make it the imperative duty of the Legislature also to provide those laws which shall carry out this object and all necessary laws to prevent bribery and corruption, we may possibly reach this evil and the others. I am, therefore, in favor of both propositions, but if I can have but one, I am rather inclined to prefer the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], for, if we obtain this provision only, it will not be sufficiently stringent, and will not meet all these evils.

Mr. SPENCER—I wish to suggest whether the great desire to impose penalties for the offense of bribery may not be sufficiently effectual to produce legislative action, from the fact that the business of bribery in high places, or as compensation for perversion of official duty in high places, may be more profitable if those who seek places in the Legislature of the State can escape the expense which grows out of the practice at elections. It has resulted in the necessity of buying votes, and they can get the same prices siderations, I want to know what gentleman in this Convention who might be a candidate for office could take the oath, because every one knows that as the result of an election may be determined in his locality, he is more likely to receive a sufficient vote for some office for which he may be an expectant or a candidate. You make this thing too stringent on the general ground of an expectation, and the only practical effect, I think, is that you will put it in the power of individual challengers at a poll to obstruct an election, and when sundown is announced there may be thousands outside who have not had permission to vote. That occurred last winter in the city of New York; it is likely to occur there time and again. It might occur in any rural district where the majority, who sought to compass a majority vote, were resolute and persistent in this exercise of the right of challenge; for it is not merely the right of challenge but it is the right to require a man to take an oath, and that oath, according to your law, must be reduced to writing. According to any estimate that can be made, I think these oaths would take, at the least calculation, three minutes apiece. I ask you, gentlemen, to look at this thing calmly and carefully. It is sufficient in my judgment if you make a man swear that he has not agreed directly or indirectly to receive, but if you want to prevent the possibility of his receiving anything you can easily cover a promise to him to be available at a future day. You should devise some form of speech which will correspond with that form by which you attempt to shut off the man who offers to pay. The man who pays and promises to pay is more culpable than the man who receives, and when you go to him in all the forms that you have prescribed, either paying or offering to pay, promising to pay or giving money, and follow it all through the verbiage which you have got in this amendment which I need not now specify, you merely make that man swear that he has not paid or offered to pay, and you make the other man swear that he has not received nor has any expectation in general of receiving. I submit to the gentleman that the expectation of receiving is not a correlative of the offer to pay, it is of far more general force, and it has a more surprising effect.

Mr. LANDON — Will the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER — Certainly.

Mr. LANDON — If that was struck out how would you meet the case where a man votes to-day and expects to receive that money to-morrow which he promises to pay.

Mr. CONGER — I admit the case ought to be provided for. But when you go on further and make a man swear that he does not expect to receive any money or other valuable consideration, do you not include those who are expectants of office in the general sweeping phrase of "a valuable consideration?" I desire the gentlemen to perfect their scheme. I do not interpose with a view to embarrass their efforts. Having voted for the proposition of 1853, it is too late for me, if I wished, at this day to retract, and I am perfectly willing to take the amendment proposed in 1853 and incorporate it in the new Constitution. I am perfectly willing to go still further and make a provision more stringent. But I do ask gentlemen to look very carefully at what they are about, lest in any manner they go too far in the exaction of an oath upon a phrase which is very comprehensive, and carries with it more, in the connection in which it is placed, than I think gentlemen dream of.

Mr. BICKFORD — Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is not the provision you are considering necessary to prevent a state of things like these?

The twenty minutes having expired the gavel fell.

Mr. HATCH — Mr. Chairman, when this House generally goes into the Committee of the Whole, for the last two weeks, and the negro is up, as usual, I generally pass out; but I came in after the Committee of the Whole had been occupied sometime, to-day, and very much to my surprise, I have found another subject under consideration in the Committee of the Whole — bribery and corruption. I certainly congratulate the Convention on the change. I might say, sir, that for one I have had all the acquaintance I desire with the negro in politics. I don't want to be any further enlightened as to his capacity or incapacity, physically or intellectually. He has generally kept democrats out of public life for the last ten years [laughter], and I never could find any political capital in the negro, and I do not believe the democratic party will ever find any capital in the negro. And I am surprised, sir, too, when I find some of my democratic friends here still determined to try and see whether something could not be made out of the colored gentleman. Like a certain class of very desperate people, constantly engaged in a losing game, they still are determined to have another fight with that black tiger. [Laughter.] Sir, if I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] the practical effect of the adoption of that amendment would be to exclude from the Constitution any provision against bribery and corruption. If I am mistaken about it, I hope I will be corrected. Now, sir, if this Convention proposes to do anything that is useful to the people, I believe any measure which they should inaugurate should be adopted in the Constitution. If the people had anything in view in calling this Convention, it was to take power out of the Legislature of the State of New York. I will not go into the reasons fully now why this should be done. Any man, if he does not know them, I ask him to go back to the journals of the Legislature of last year, and read from the journals the acts of the Legislature which they adopted, and above all to read those acts proposed which were beneficial to the people which they did not adopt. Those they did not adopt, on examination, would be found to belong to that class of measures, to use the common parlance of the lobby, which had no money in them. I ask them to read those; I could give some recital of them, for I had occasion to examine one to-day which I should be very glad to bring before the Convention in confirmation of my views, and I shall, before the Convention closes its labors. Sir, this proposition to exclude from the Constitution any provision against bribery and corruption, and leaving it to the Legislature, it is preposterous in my estimation, and I am surprised that gentlemen will urge any such proposition as this, to leave to the Legislature the question of bribery and corruption. What have you heard here during these debates? Why, sir, it has been heard, and it is believed, and if it is not believed by the members of this Convention, it is believed by all the people, that, I will not say the majority of the Legislature is elected through bribery and corruption, but a large portion of its members are elected through this means. The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands that it is offered as a substitute.

Mr. BECKWITH—I am in favor virtually of both propositions. I believe it wise, on our part, to introduce into this Constitution a provision for the punishment of bribery, distinct and emphatic; one that would be clear to the understanding of every individual; and, while I do that, I am also in favor of making it the duty of the Legislature to provide by law to carry out that object and to make such provision as would render the full accomplishment of the object to be desired. The evil of which we complain is not to be reached by that single provision which the gentleman from Schenectady would have introduced, for, if I am correctly informed, the evil lies beyond it. One of the greatest evils is this.—You and I very well know, Mr. Chairman, that in many localities in this State the democratic party is largely in the majority, and in other localities the republican party is also largely in the majority. We know very well that certain individuals in these localities control these caucuses. They are your noisy, boisterous, bar-room politicians that control the nominations made at these caucuses; and we know that in some of these localities a nomination is an election, and if I am correctly informed, there are in certain localities in this State persons who take it upon themselves to say to the friends of certain candidates, "if your friend wants to be nominated—the nomination being an election—give us one thousand dollars, give us two thousand dollars, give us three thousand dollars, or some other sum, and we will secure his nomination." And to the friends of other candidates for nomination they will say the same, and they will finally get up a strife and a bid, and I have been informed (I won't say I have been correctly informed) that even the office of a judge has been tendered to men if they or their friends would secure to those men who control these nominations four thousand dollars, and that the friends of others have stepped in and said "We will give you five thousand dollars," and they have thereby secured their nomination and their election. The reason why I am in favor of both propositions is this, that by the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon] we cannot reach this evil, but if we make it the imperative duty of the Legislature also to provide those laws which shall carry out this object and all necessary laws to prevent bribery and corruption, we may possibly reach this evil and the others. I am, therefore, in favor of both propositions, but if I can have but one, I am rather inclined to prefer the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], for, if we obtain this provision only, it will not be sufficiently stringent, and will not meet all these evils.

Mr. SPENCER—I wish to suggest whether the great desire to impose penalties for the offense of bribery may not be sufficiently effectual to produce legislative action, from the fact that the business of bribery in high places, or as compensation for perversion of official duty in high places, may be more profitable if those who seek places in the Legislature of the State can escape the expense which grows out of the practice at elections. It has resulted in the necessity of buying votes, and they can get the same prices for their votes, when they come into the Legislature, or for the performance of their official duty when they fill any other office; if that be so, the business of filling such offices will become so much the more profitable.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I ask for a division of the question between striking out and inserting.

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order, that by the rules adopted by this body, it is not permissible.

Mr. MASTEN—I do not rise for debate, for I know that it is out of order, although I have very little parliamentary knowledge, but I suppose that it is still in my power to modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. MASTEN—I desire to do so, so as to make it as agreeable as possible to the committee. I, therefore, instead of striking out the whole of this section, will move to strike out all of the section excepting that portion which was inserted by the amendment of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon], and then to add mine at the end of the section.

Mr. HATCH—I want to inquire of the gentleman [Mr. Masten] how that will then read?

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the clause as proposed to be amended, as follows:

No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer or promise to pay, contribute, or offer or promise to contribute to another to be paid or used, any money, or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm, before such inspectors, that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid, nor offered or promised to pay, contributed, nor offered or promised to contribute to others, to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote, to be given at such election. Laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, or of any infamous crime; laws may also be passed for punishing and depriving of the right of suffrage persons who shall pay or contribute, or agree to pay or contribute, or who shall receive or agree to receive any money, property or valuable thing to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket, or who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election.

Mr. LAPHAM—Will the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] allow me to make a further modification to the proposition? I desire to call the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the language of the provision of the Revised Statutes, and the exceptions contained in the sweeping language of the statute which is analogous to the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten]. It excepts from the operation of the act, the defraying of the expenses of printing and the circulation of handbills and other papers previous to any such election, and of conveying sick and poor or infirm electors to polls. The proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] is broad enough to include all that class of cases, and for that reason I must vote against it unless it is modified.

Mr. HATCH—I understand it would be in the power of the Legislature under this authority conferred upon them, to make these modifications and such others as they saw fit.

Mr. LAPHAM—Not so, for the reason that the language of this provision is a constitutional direction, and is broad and comprehensive as I have suggested.

Mr. CHESEBRO—If this is to be passed, I would like to have it corrected somewhat in its phraseology. I would therefore move to strike out from the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Erie the words "or ticket."

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman [Mr. Chesebro] that his motion is not in order.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I should like to ask the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], if the substitution of the words "or any remuneration" in place of "valuable things," would not cover his views in connection with it?

Mr. BELL—I am of the opinion that there is sufficient in these two propositions to cover the entire ground in the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole is not a very convenient place to weigh every word that should be incorporated in the fundamental law, but if it is ascertained that a proposed clause expresses the sense of the committee—that we have put in some simple, plain language, a provision that shall prevent fraud, leaving to the Legislature to pass laws sufficiently complete in detail to carry out the provision based upon it—an article can be drawn to become a part of the organic law. My advice would be to pass upon this, crude as it is now, and let it be then referred to some committee to put in shape, or some individual can take it up and put it in its proper shape before it is finally passed. I think the better way to dispose of this would be to adopt it in the Committee of the Whole, and afterward make such correction in the verbiage as may be necessary.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Masten, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 68 to 40.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I offer the following amendment:

Strike out section three, and insert instead thereof—

"SEC. 3. Laws shall be made for ascertaining at the time the citizen offers his vote at the election, the citizen who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established."

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order. Have we reached section 3 yet?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that we have not yet reached section 3. The Chair is of the opinion that all amendments are in order, and that this is an amendment to an amendment proposed.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—If the section to which this amendment is applied is referred to, it will be found that it proposed to strike out that part of the section which authorizes the Legislature to pass the registry law and amend the remaining portion of the section by confining the power of the Legislature to make all requisite proof at the time the elector offers his vote on the day of the election.

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order. It was decided in the beginning that this article should be read through in gross, and that then we should take up each section of it. Section 1 of the report of the committee is under consideration. The amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], accepted by me, substitutes two sections for section 1, being sections 1 and 2. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], to refer to section 3 or section 2 of the original article reported by the standing committee, so that I do not think it is now in order till we have completed section 1 of the report of the standing committee.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. Not that I wish to throw any embarrassment at all in the way of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], but this morning I inquired of the Chair whether an amendment to section 3 was then in order, and the Chair declared it was not in order as we were then considering section 1, and that no amendment to section 3 would be entertained until section 3 was reached in its order; the same state of facts exists now in the Committee of the Whole, as existed then. As I understand the business before the committee, I think after the motion made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] that we should proceed to consider the report of the committee by sections, that the only way in which this can now be reached is by reconsidering that resolution of the committee and moving to consider the report as a whole. Then amendments generally would be in order; but as it stands now, I submit, and as the Chair has stated, those amendments only are in order which simply pertain to the order of business before the committee, to wit, the first section of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. KERNAN—I rise to a point of order. The point of order is this, that the Chair has ruled that the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] is in order, and there has been no appeal.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will state in a few brief words the situation of this matter. The gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] upon the incoming of the report of the committee last evening, as he had a right to do, moved that the report of the committee be sent back to the original committee with instructions to make the amendment now proposed by him in his place. For the purpose of facilitating the business of the committee, and at the suggestion of gentlemen of high position in the Convention, he reluctantly agreed to withdraw that proposition in order to enable him to speak for twenty minutes. And it was understood that he should have an opportunity to speak before half-past 7 o'clock this evening, and under these circumstances the Chair permits the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] to speak.

Mr. FOLGER—If that was the understanding, I withdraw my point of order. As a matter of courtesy I have no objection.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I would have this provision of the Constitution declare the right of suffrage, so plain, simple and perspicuous, that the citizen when he reads it can see embodied there all the qualifications of an elector; I would leave no power beyond the mere regulation of the elections on election day in the Legislature; I would not authorize that body to impose any conditions or restrictions upon the exercise of this right, after it is prescribed in the organic law. It is a right that ought not to rest in part in the Constitution, and in part in laws to be passed by legislative authority; I would not send the citizen to grope through session laws and their amendments to find out the steps necessary to the enjoyment of the elective franchise, but I would have him take in his hand the Constitution prescribing his qualifications and armed with that, find the avenues that lead to the ballot box, free and unobstructed, and not blocked up by legislative enactments.

This report upon this subject declares:

"Your committee would urge that this precious right, so fundamental to all others, be carefully shielded from corruption, and that the main safeguards against its abuse should not be left to unstable and fluctuating statutes, but should be firmly imbedded in the Constitution."

It is surprising that after using such language the committee, in the same report, should not only permit the Legislature to exercise this extraordinary power over "this precious right," but that they should make their command imperative that it should be so exercised. It is more surprising still that this language should be used to justify the very thing that the spirit of the language so strongly deprecates. We have a right to consider the propriety of this section in view of the registry law we now have, modified only to uniformity, although the kind of law is not specified. We know what partisan legislation has done, and in obedience to this command it may do much worse. It is fair to assume it will not be better, and in view of existing enactments we know substantially what is intended. One very obnoxious feature is firmly imbedded in this section—that every elector not registered six days before election loses absolutely his vote. We have a right to assume that the Legislature, quickened by this imperative command, can construct just such provisions as partisan excitement and prejudice may dictate, and as are usually contained in "unstable and fluctuating statutes." It was twelve years after the existing Constitution took effect before the registry law was passed. It has been twice or three times amended. It was passed under a provision of the Constitution which declared that "laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proof the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established." This provision is contained in the section reported, and my amendment, as before stated, conflues its effect to the time when the elector offers his vote on election day. The section, as incorporated in the existing Constitution, many of the ablest men in the State have supposed only contemplated laws regulating the election on election day, and as not authorizing any previous steps, as required by the registry law. This view is strengthened by the fact that the Legislature of 1847, at the extra session, called to make the laws necessary to put the new Constitution into full operation, confined their action on the subject to the enacting of laws for regulating the election on election day, thereby assuming that only such legislation was authorized. There is a strong belief pervading the public mind that when this power was asserted and used, it was so used for partisan purposes: that this registry law was a mere contrivance intended to strike down the conservative majorities in the cities. I would not leave a power in the legislature whose use would be open to such imputation or engender such prejudices. I would place the right of suffrage where the storms of party passion and party prejudice, if they beat upon it, would beat upon it in vain. They could not subvert it, for it would be firmly "imbedded in the Constitution." I believe a registry law to impose a useless and onerous burden upon the voters. The present law is oppressive upon the laboring and industrial classes, and is unpopular and odious with the people. The main reason for it, in the report, is that it prevents fraud. If it did it would be unjust to impose such a burden upon all to prevent fraud in a few. It is believed to promote fraud under the lull in the public mind and the feeling of security it engenders, it is believed the door is opened wide for the most glaring frauds upon the elective franchise. The minority report well says: The "pipe laying" conspiracies against the purity of elections in our large cities were perpetrated under registry laws. I have looked through the documents laid upon our desks to ascertain the expense of an annual election. I have not been able to obtain the information, but certain it is that it must double or treble that expense, for with the published instructions and blanks issued, and the services of the same board of officers who preside at elections, the same length of time, the expense to be paid by the tax payers, must be doubled if the board set one day, and trebled if they serve three. The existing law gives, in all respects, the same compensation as at elections, and authorizes three or four days services, besides blanks, books and instructions, thereby trebling at least the expense of the annual election. This is visited upon the tax payers generally. Again, it imposes an onerous and unnecessary condition and burden upon the elector; a burden, sir, that falls with a heavy hand upon the poor laborer and mechanic, to whom the loss of one or two days' wages is a loss they heavily feel. The man of wealth and leisure can take his gold headed cane and walk to the place of registry, or roll in his cushioned carriage on one or more days, if necessary, and not feel it as a burden. Indeed, his very prominence as a citizen places him on. But go the field of the husbandman or to the workshop of the mechanic, whose very obscurity keeps him off, and demand that he shall lose one or two days of his valuable time, and you take by means of this exaction the bread out of the mouths of his children. This burden falls with a crushing weight upon the laboring poor, with whom the loss of a day's labor deranges their calculations, and pinches them with actual want. Sir, a law that should impose a tax of two dollars upon each elector, as a condition of his right to vote, would be met with the scorn of the public. How does this differ in effect from such an imposition? You punish men for operating upon the mind and perverting the honest will of the voter by bribery or menace. By the restrictions and burdens of such a law, as is contemplated, you operate in many cases upon the mind of the poor voter and keep him from the polls. The government will do what it denounces as criminal in others. It will throw a counter motive into the mind of the elector which will induce him to withhold his vote rather than to be to the trouble to obtain it. The great and inestimable right of suffrage is so lumbered up with restrictions that it is not worth having. Under the best devised registry laws many must lose their votes by accidental inability to comply with its provisions. Here is an unalterable constitutional requirement disfranchising all who by any accident are prevented from registering six days before the election. The report of the learned chairman, [Mr. Greeley] justifies this provision upon the same grounds that recording of deeds is provided for. He says, "To maintain that registration while it does afford protection to the titles whereby we hold our lands will give none to our right of suffrage is to defy reason and insult our common sense." Sir, I fail to see the slightest analogy between the two provisions. The recording acts are founded on principles highly beneficial and remedial to the owners of titles. They are not imposed as burdens. They are intended to protect the individual from fraud and to place the deed in a safe depository for his benefit, and place the evidence of title upon an imperishable record. They are not compulsory; but the citizen may avail himself of them or not as he elects. Suppose you had a provision of your Constitution reported here that as a condition to the right to hold property the citizen should be compelled to go annually to the county clerk's office and register his name. Would not such a law be regarded as an unjust and odious restriction upon the great fundamental right to hold property? And here lies the distinction. That a registry law for an election must impose the great burden of personal attendance upon the elector, and the taking of all the oaths, if challenged, which may be required on election day. The elector must first attend and offer his name, and the same process is required to get that entered as is necessary to get in his vote. He must attend until he is able to accomplish it, if it take one, two or three days, and when he offers his vote the same oaths are necessary. If you have a registry law at all, for I presume no one would contend it would be safe to intrust this power entirely to the officers, it operates as a restriction upon a right, and involves a loss of valuable time. Is it wise to impose it upon all because you fear a fraud in a few? It is useless, because upon challenge when the vote is offered all the oaths must be taken, notwithstanding the registry. I insist that for the mere purpose of preventing imagined wrong in one, the hand of indiscriminate vengeance should not lump together all the innocent and the guilty by such an imposition. Our census laws, State and national assessment laws, State and national laws for the registry of births, deaths and marriages, are all framed upon the principle I am advocating, and in opposition to the spirit of the provision under consideration. The wisdom of the law makers has placed the decade of the census ten years apart, and have so carefully arranged it that it involves no burden upon the people; officers go about and take the census, involving the loss of only a few moments time to the citizen to answer questions and so of your assessment laws, State and national, officers go about and carefully collect the information. A law that should require every person once a year, to go somewhere and register his name for the purpose of taxation, would not be sustained by the people. It would be an onerous tax in and of itself, imposed in advance of the general tax on property, contemplated. I perceive by the notes accompanying the copy of the Constitution prepared under the supervision of a committee of this body, that out of the thirty-seven States of this Union, but four or five are stated to have an election registry law, and that among them are Maryland, Virginia, Louisiana and South Carolina, States whose systems of civil government heretofore I had supposed would not meet with so ardent an admiration from the learned chairman [Mr. Greeley], as his report in this respect evinces—having adopted them in this respect, as models. The report states:

"Your committee are confident that the experience of our State, and of the civilized world fully justifies these requirements. According to my limited reading of history I cannot concur with this statement unless, indeed, the learned chairman referred to the southern States I have named, as that part of the civilized world, whose experience fully justifies these requirements."

In this country we once had a registry law directed against foreigners, requiring them upon landing to repair to the nearest court of record, and register their name and age. It was found oppressive and burdensome in its operation and tended to discourage emigration, and it being the spirit of our institutions to promote emigration, this law was, in 1816 I believe, repealed. In the early history of England there was an act of parliament enacted for a similar purpose. It was the spirit of the government of that country to prevent emigration, and while under the law of nations it did not absolutely exclude, yet it applied a stringent law to the border lines over which there was a facility for emigration, and its effect was to obstruct and prevent it. Sir, these registration laws have figured in the history of the civilized world; upon the darkest pages of the history of religious persecution Christians have been compelled to "register" and take out passports, at a high and extraordinary tax, for the mere privilege of passing from one town to another. The learned chairman [Mr. Greeley] when he penned this report, must have forgotten a registration law that, with the consequences associated with its enactment and execution, marks the brightest and one of the darkest epochs in sacred history. That history tells us that when one Augustus Cæsar was Emperor of Rome, at a period when she had attained to imperial power, when the flags of many nations were waving upon her walls, he had annexed the land of Judea to his dominions, and that near the close of Herod's reign as governor of those provinces, he gave cause of offense to his imperial master. That in order to humble Herod and his people, and the more completely to subject them to his dominion, he issued a decree commanding all the people of Judea to repair to the chief city of their tribe and "register." History further tells that it was in obedience to this harsh and humiliating decree that Joseph with Mary journeyed to Bethlehem, the city of his tribe. That because of the crowd of people who had congregated there in obedience to the same oppressive decree, the Inns were crowded and he was obliged to seek lodgings in a stable; and there, while shepherds watched their flocks by night upon the plains of Judea, that event occurred that changed the eternal destiny of lost man, and raised in the sky a bow of promise for the redemption of a ruined world. An ambassador was sent to Augustus by Herod to plead for his people, and the execution of the unjust decree was suspended. History tells us that ten years later, under the reign of Cyrenus, his successor, the odious decree was enforced, and the people broke out in open rebellion against it. And under the lead of one Judas of Galilee, the people were organized in forcible resistance to Romish authority. Might triumphed over right at first, but the war was waged with varied success for many years, until finally Jerusalem was demolished—razed from the face of the earth as a measure of imperial vengeance upon the insurgents. Long before this, tyrannical rulers in Israel had ordered a numbering of the people, and history tells us that a long persecuted class of Christians and unhappy people were driven out among idolaters and strangers, and hung their harps upon the willows and sat down by the river of Babylon and mourned over the lost Jerusalem, and wept; and vowed that the gentle notes of their harps should never mingle again with the voice of the despoiler. Sir, this coerced registration has been imposed in the history of the civilized world by the mild forms of civil authority and the harsher forms of military power—by the conqueror upon the conquered. It has generally been imposed as a burden, often as a restriction upon the exercise of some right, and sometimes as a measure of deep humiliation, and it has always been odious. Sir, I would not have a "registry" system in the Constitution. A registration is going on now in one-third of the States of this Union, enforced in the rigorous and anti-American form of arbitrary and despotic military power, under a law which, at one fell swoop, has swept away the liberties of twelve millions of people. It is expelling large numbers of persons from the exercise of the right of suffrage who have heretofore enjoyed it under laws of their own framing, and is forcing large numbers of ignorant and degraded persons into the body politic—contrary to the traditional customs and habits of the people; repugnant to their polity, convenience and prejudice. I believe a day will come when all this will be changed, when these arbitrary acts of Congress so repugnant to the Constitution, by which the courts, the laws, and all the safeguards of personal liberty and private right of the people in ten States of this Union are destroyed, will awaken the deepest indignation of the American people.

Time is dispelling the passions that fratricidal war has engendered; a day will come as fast as its lightning flight can bring it, when public affairs will be viewed by a purer philosophy, and controlled by a nobler and more exalted statesmanship; when that day shall come; when the country shall emerge from the political gloom in which it is now enshrouded, when the bleeding, disavowed and estranged fragments shall be gathered together under a restored Union and re-established Constitution—a Union restored in that spirit of public concord and brotherhood which animated our fathers from the first gun of the revolution and which sent a united and prosperous country along the pathway of national advancement. I believe that all these measures will become offensive and hateful to the American people. I believe that day is coming, because it was the great inspiration of the people in carrying on this war. It was the proclamation of the national government. The faith of the nation was pledged that the Union should be restored in that spirit. It was sounded in every bugle charge. It was thundered from the mouths of your cannon, and it was a part of that registered oath which is inscribed above your head (pointing to the words inscribed upon the wall above the president's head, "I have the most solemn oath registered in heaven, to preserve, protect and defend the government."—Lincoln), and while the soul that took upon itself that oath, was under its solemn sanction, other words were uttered and were registered also with that oath, to which I will invite the attention of the committee, in the inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln:

"We are not enemies but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic cords of memory, stretching from every battle-field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched; as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

That chorus is already rising. Its voice has been heard in Connecticut; it has been loudly echoed from that State beneath whose soil repose the ashes of Henry Clay. Its murmurings are heard on the distant shores of the Pacific. It will leap the Rocky Mountains and will sweep the prairies of the West; it will gather momentum and power in the Central States, and only break upon the granite hills of New England, as

"From peak to peak the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder. Not from one lone cloud,
But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps that call to her aloud."

When that day shall come, this redemptive wave of public sentiment, rising to one overwhelming and mighty ground swell for the Union and the Constitution, will sweep away these enactments, and render the very name of registration hateful to the American people.

Mr. GREELEY—I shall say but very few words as to this provision with regard to a registry of voters. The gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] well said that the times are not propitious for the success of such measures as he judges expedient, especially this one. I postpone, then, to the time when it shall be necessary, the argument that might be made in favor of a registry law. I will only say this on that point: that all the New England States have about the same as registry laws. Every one, so far as I know, has its check-list, which is made up some days before each election, and no man can vote whose name is not on the check-list. Some States, as Massachusetts, require and impose a poll-tax, to be paid some time before election. Pennsylvania also imposes a poll-tax, which amounts to a registry. A good many of the States have some sort of a property qualification, which answers to a registry. There are few States wherein universal suffrage prevails which have no other safeguard against fraudulent voting than the word of the voter, and these grow fewer every year. A State which accords the right of suffrage to whosoever shall choose to claim it, I think, never has endured in the whole history of the civilized world. What we ask is, that the right of each man entitled to vote shall be established calmly, deliberately, dispassionately, judicially, at some time apart from the heat and struggle of an election. When the gentleman says that each year the voter must appear before the registers and put his name on the registry, the answer is that the fact is otherwise, except in certain great cities where every man lives within five minutes' walk of the polls. It has never been required that a voter in the rural districts should put his name on the registry, and repeat that process from year to year. The registers, when they make up the list, come to the name of John Jones: "Does anybody know him?" "Yes; he lives down by Sykes's mill;" and John Jones' name is kept on the list until he moves away or dies; then it is erased. There is no such thing as calling the husbandman away from his farm to be registered annually, since re-registration has been required. I should be perfectly willing to strike out the words, "And the Legislature shall provide that" as I consider them superfluous; but to assent to the gentleman's proposition is to agree that we shall have no registry at all. Of that enormous mass of population in New York city and Brooklyn, not one voter in ten is known at the polls. I voted in New York nearly or quite twenty years, and I did not pretend to know one man in ten whom I met at the polls of my district, and could not tell whether they did or did not live in that district, nor where they lived. The practical effect was, that almost any man came up and voted who claimed the right. Mr. Horace F. Clark told me that when he ran for Congress in 1886, as a democratic candidate, he had votes in the Twelfth ward (Harlem), in the upper part of the city, accompanied by tickets for charter officers in the First ward, and that he was satisfied that the voters had commenced at the Battery and voted right along up to High Bridge. [Laughter]. It is notorious among managing politicians in the city that there is on election day voting over and over and over again, by men called "repeaters"—men who are trained to vote at as many polls as they can. It is an established institution, and not entirely abolished by the registry, any more than the forgery of a man's title is always stopped by the registration of deeds. But it is an enormous check on the facility for voting unlawfully, and I have no doubt that the registry law diminishes illegal voting in the city of New York at least seven-eighths.

Mr. HITCHMAN—How does the gentleman provide that persons who have attained their majority within six days before the election, shall vote? They will have no opportunity to register.

Mr. GREELEY—Any registering board will put on the list every man who will be entitled to vote on the day of the election at hand. For instance, a man states to the registrars that he has only been naturalized five days; but they know that the date of his naturalization is ten days prior to the pending election, and that he will then have a right to vote; and no inspector would refuse to register; and in case of a young man who shall appear before the inspectors and swear that he will be twenty-one years of age before the election, no officer that I ever heard of, would refuse to put his name on the list.

Mr. BICKFORD—He is obliged to.

Mr. GREELEY—Allow me now a few words in regard to other objections to the Committee's report. Two weeks have passed, during which time I have sat silent and heard nearly a hundred speeches against it. Our proposition is the simplest, clearest and most explicit, that was ever submitted as the basis of suffrage in this State. The suffrage article in our present Constitution prescribes four different terms or periods of time: One year in the State; four months in the county; thirty days in the district; and ten days a citizen. We propose to sweep away these four terms and replace them by two: viz.: One year's residence in the State, and thirty days' citizenship and residence in the election district where he offers his vote. These are the only two conditions as to residence, and every one can understand them. Under the present plan, if a man comes to vote, we ask him "How long have you lived here?" "Two days," "You can't vote." "Yes, I can vote for Senator, because I have lived four months in the senate district, and I can vote for Governor, and for Congressman, though not for Assemblyman." How do the inspectors know for what officers he will vote? What right have they to look inside of his ballots to see what candidates are in them? Sir, the plan is all wrong. It is opening the way to fraud to have any such condition of suffrage, and therefore we ought to abolish it. We ought to have a simpler system. The gentleman from New York—

Mr. VEEDER—Will the gentleman [Mr. Greeley] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GREELEY—As I have only twenty minutes, I prefer not to be interrupted. The gentleman from New York on my left [Mr. Gross] says that, if you exact a thirty days' naturalization before voting, all the adopted citizens will vote against our Constitution. I hope not. They did not vote against the Constitution of 1846, which originated a clause requiring a ten days' naturalization, and that involved exactly the same principle; and it cut off some men from the right to vote at the next election who would otherwise have been entitled to vote under the previous Constitution. The Convention of 1846, I think, did right in striking at the enormous abuses which existed under the previous rule in this respect. I have seen a mayor of New York elected by voters manufactured on the third day of an excited three-day's election. I know there were enormous frauds in naturalization. Men swore others through, when they would not have done it, except under the stimulus of an election. Their passions were excited, so that they swore wildly; and we propose to relieve others from their temptation. I desire that the naturalization shall be completed calmly and deliberately, like the registration, thirty days before the election, so that there shall be ample time to learn whether there has been any fraud in such naturalization. I do hope that adopted citizens will not take offense at this, as it is not intended to be an encroachment on their rights, any more than the ten-day clause in the Constitution of 1846 was intended to be. I am very sure there are not nearly so many frauds in naturalization as there were when naturalization was continued, and voting thereon, up to the day of the election, and on that day. I believe if you make it thirty days, there will be nothing like the frauds committed that now are. I protest against the practice which now prevails of drag-netting the whole community to find out persons who can be pulled into the naturalization office and run through the mill in order to get their votes at the election. I would like to have every person who comes here to live become a citizen of the country; but let it be by his own voluntary act; let it not be, as it is now, by the work of a press-gang, looking into all the cellars and garrets and holes in New York, dragging out all who can be ground through the naturalization mill, and thus swell the vote of the party. It was so last fall; it is so very often; but, if the time is made thirty days, it will enormously diminish abuses in naturalization, while, at the same time, you will preserve unimpaired the right to be naturalized. And now, Mr. Chairman, as to paupers. The gentleman who preceded me [Mr. Champlain] said there were 250,000 paupers in our State, of whom the men would be disfranchised by this bill. But, sir, the records of the city of New York show that, on the 6th of October last, just after the great war, and when there was an enormous drift of population to our cities, there were just five hundred and four men in the poor-house of that city—not citizens, but all sorts—foreigners, Asiatics—people gathered from the highways and byways and from all the seas that wash the earth—five hundred and four men. There were beside eight hundred and eleven families termed out-door poor; but I am assured that most of them were the families of widows, not to say of aliens. I verily believe that there were not five hundred persons in that great city of New York who were male citizens of the age of twenty-one years and upwards who accepted relief from the public during the month of October; and these are all that are excluded as paupers by our report; and, if there are not more than five hundred there, there cannot be more than five thousand in the State; indeed, I do not believe there are three thousand.

We all know how their names are multiplied. A man appears in a town in the dead of winter, and goes to the overseer of the poor, and says that he wants help to get to the next town, where he has friends who will help him. "How much do you want?" "I want a dollar." The overseer hands him a dollar, and with it the man goes to the next town, where he tells the same story to the overseer there; and so he goes from town to town, until in a few months that man figures in our returns as a hundred paupers. [Laughter.] I have seen it—you have seen it. These men are kept moving all winter. They go from town to town, and the result is that they figure up from two to three hundred thousand paupers, when there are not more than five thousand in the State—I mean men. What we mean by this provision is to limit the enormous and inordinate power which is given to a few officers who have charge of relieving the poor, to expend public money to serve the ends of this or that party. I am assured that the relief of the poor in the city of Albany is worth two or three hundred votes to the dominant party; I am assured that in Troy it is worth three hundred votes; and I say that this dispensing of public alms is a source of political corruption. I know that the officers of the almshouse in New York have sent word that they have not allowed persons to go out to vote. I presume that is so; nevertheless, men do leave the almshouse in order to get registered, and they do vote. You cannot stop them without such a provision as we have reported. A pauper comes to his keeper and says, "I have been here long enough, and I want to leave." How can you detain him? He leaves, urged by the promptings of a political committee, who take him, fill him with liquor, get his vote, and then shove him off; and in a week he is again back in the almshouse. If paupers are entitled to vote, they will vote, and there is no power to stop them. Your overseers of the poor, your keepers of almshouses, your relief officers, will be vote-gatherers for their party, and it is but natural that they should be. I would be. I would not do anything wrong; but I would try to keep the paupers well supplied with documents on our side, and I would not be in any great hurry to give them anything on the other side. [Laughter.] The paupers of our State are not independent voters. They do not vote their own views, but those of their keepers. They do not supply a substantial contribution to the public sentiment of the State of New York. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] the other day raised an objection to our proposed disfranchisement of idiots. He argued that blockheads are idiots—hence this exclusion will work enormous disfranchisement. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will consult Webster's quarto dictionary, he will find this dictum, quoted from the British Encyclopedia, I believe: "A person who has understanding enough to measure a yard of cloth, number twenty correctly, and can tell the day of the week, etc., is not an idiot, under the law." I beg that gentleman [Mr. Barnard], therefore, to calm his apprehensions—he will not be disfranchised by this exclusion. [Laughter.] It was said by a gentleman from my own county [Mr. Tappen] that the Committee on the Right of Suffrage had made undue haste in presenting their report. We certainly did try to present our report so soon as we reasonably could; but we did not make undue haste. At our first meeting, after consultation, we invited each member of the committee who chose to submit his draft of an article; and three members did so—I among the number. My draft was not accepted, and that which most closely followed the present was accepted as a basis, to be improved as we could find from the other drafts or the suggestions of other members who had not submitted drafts. We scrutinized very carefully, line by line, section by section and clause by clause, and it was gone over and over and over again; fifty or sixty votes were taken on the different propositions; and no attempt was made to report until every member of the committee had been fully heard, every suggestion noted, and every proposition acted on. We made as fair and clear an article as we could well do; and if we had been six months at it instead of two weeks, I do not believe we could have satisfied ourselves better than we did by the article as reported to the Convention. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] with his chart, which was suspended on the wall, showed us that Blacks are not accustomed to go out of their proper latitude. I accept that statement. I believe that the Black element of our population will necessarily be smaller and smaller every year. They were one-fifth in the boyhood of our fathers, they are but one-eighth now; and the child is now born who will see them less than one twentieth—not because they cannot live here, but because before the overwhelming tide of foreign immigration which breaks on our shores at the rate of more than a thousand a day—mainly of the young, vigorous, and energetic people of Europe—the Blacks cannot but diminish in proportion to our whole population. But, with these facts before me, I hold just the opposite of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger]. Since our Black population is so small, and gradually becoming less important, it does seem to me that we are not justified in making any extraordinary, invidious rule in reference to them, as there can be no danger from so powerless an element in the population of this State—that we can afford to be just—nay, generous—because we cannot pretend to be afraid of Blacks. If it be true, as the gentleman showed on his map, that the Blacks never did seek a home in this latitude, but only came here as they were dragged away from Africa by white men, I have no doubt that, under the beneficent rule of freedom, they will gradually gravitate toward the tropics, where they belong. They will go there because it is their nature to go there; and they will become still fewer here in proportion to our whole population. Now, Mr. Chairman—

At this point in the remarks of the speaker the gavel fell, the twenty minutes having expired.

Mr. VEEDER—I ask if it is in order for me to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain].

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair does not regard the proposition of the gentleman in order.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Champlain and it was declared lost.

Mr. VEEDER—I do not like to proceed out of order, but I desire to propose an amendment to the third section.

The CHAIRMAN—It was under peculiar circumstances which led the Chair to permit the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] to offer the amendment he did. The Chair feels that it cannot again deviate from the rule by admitting the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] to offer the amendment he suggests.

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Add at the end of section 2, the words following: "The payment of the expense of printing and circulating of papers and documents previous to any election, and of conveying sick and infirm electors to the polls is excepted from the operation of this section."

Mr. KERNAN—I think, sir, if the proviso, which has just been offered could, in good faith, be strictly enforced, it would probably be proper, but I submit to the Convention, and to the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], that it will open the door for a large amount of fraud in the use of the money that is raised for elections. We all know when they come around to get money, that they always claim they desire to raise money to print and circulate documents and to enable them to get the poor, aged and infirm voters to the polls. Hence many men will be led to give money to those who say it is for such a purpose, when in truth it will not be, to any considerable amount, used for any such purpose. Gentlemen will find that the aged and the infirm can be got to the polls without paying for it. We need not fear but what there will be sufficient printing done and documents circulated without raising any money for it. Hence, I trust we will not adopt this proviso, for I fear if we do, it will, to a great extent, nullify the provisions of the proposed article. We all feel that one of the great dangers to our system of government, one of the evils undermining and endangering our popular institutions, is the use of money in carrying elections. I trust we will not adopt any proviso which will enable parties to evade the provision which has been agreed upon. Printing can be done and documents circulated, and the aged and infirm electors brought to the polls without raising money as is done in the name of paying for these services, and which is used for corrupt purposes.

Mr. LAPHAM—I have proposed this amendment, because I have found in the present statutes almost the precise words employed by me, as constituting an exception in the election law, which is an act similar in its purpose to what it is now proposed to engraft in the Constitution. I am unwilling to enact a constitutional provision which will forever prevent any citizen from paying any money for the purpose of defraying the expense of printing or of circulating documents, or of conveying aged and infirm electors to the polls. According to the doctrine of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], every document which is hereafter to be printed, must be printed free of expense, and no money can be contributed to defray such expense, without coming within the inhibition of the section as it now reads; no money can be paid for defraying the expense of circulating intelligence among the people, and the result is that my friend from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] and the benighted men who clamor in the name of democracy and who support his ticket, who do not want any information of any description or kind will be satisfied. I want food for the intelligent people of this country, who read that they may understand what they are called upon to vote for, that they may vote intelligently upon all questions which may come before them hereafter. I do not wish to see any door opened to fraud or imposition. I repeat I have copied this from an act of the Legislature carefully framed, and of which, so far as I am advised, no complaint has been heard from the time of its passage to this day, and no abuses have grown up under it. If a person, under pretense of paying for documents, in truth and in fact pays for a vote, why, then, he is open to punishment under the Constitution as it will read with my amendment, because, if under the pretense of preserving the Constitution, an act inhibited by it is performed, it is just as much an offense as an open violation. And if, as has been suggested here, the thing is so nicely done in certain localities in the State, that it does not bear the name of bribery, it is no less bribery. If in the country, as is claimed, we do the thing so openly are we any more deserving of punishment and reprehension, than those electors, where the thing is sugared over with contrivances, to enable the perpetrators to escape the punishment to which under the law they are amenable. What I desire to secure is an opportunity for every liberal, well-disposed man, and every man who desires the circulation of intelligence among the people, to contribute of his means honestly for that purpose, and this amendment provides for nothing else.

Mr. KERNAN—I would like to make a single remark.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion leave cannot be granted to the gentleman.

Mr. KERNAN—Would it be in order to move to strike out a word.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion it cannot be done.

Mr. LANDON—The language of the section as it now stands, is "that no person shall contribute any money or valuable thing as a compensation or reward for a vote." That language is different from the Revised Statutes. I desire to call attention of the committee to the fact, that as I understand the condition of this amendment, it re-enacts the same thing. In the second section of the amendment of Mr. C. C. Dwight there is substantially the same provision that has been adopted in the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten].

Mr. WEED—One word in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]. We are attempting by Constitutional provision to prevent frauds in elections, that gentlemen upon the floor say are now an every day occurrence, and yet the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] says he has heard no complaint under that statute, at the same time every word that has been uttered here has been a complaint under that statute; a complaint that the statute does not reach the trouble, and that there needs to be some other remedy. Now he proposes to amend the proposition before the Convention, with the words of the Revised Statutes. The first part of his amendment, that part of which refers to circulating documents and printing I would gladly vote for, but under the last part, every gentleman familiar with elections throughout the State knows that three-fourths of the money corruptly used at elections in this State is paid. I cannot give my vote to incorporate into the Constitution those words. It is a clause allowing people to pay money to get aged and infirm voters to the polls. Without any great amount of trouble, every man in the State can get to the polls, certainly he can in the country, by private conveyances; any infirm and poor man will get to the polls in that way; but if you put a clause in the Constitution authorizing the payment of money for that purpose, every man who wishes to sell his vote, if there are persons who wish to purchase, will agree for so much money to a man to bring his poor neighbors to the polls, which is purchasing a vote and nothing else. For that reason I am opposed to the latter part of the amendment, and I wish to ask if there cannot be a division, so that the first part may be adopted and the last rejected.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion there cannot be a division.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I think the necessities which call for that provision for bridging in poor and infirm voters to the polls is so slight, that I cannot readily see the way in which that could be used for the purpose of corrupting the purity of the elective system. I trust the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] will himself consent to the striking out of that clause. As far as the circulation of documents among the people is concerned there can be no question upon that, there is no liability of that being abused, I am sure of that, speaking of my own neighborhood. The necessity for bringing out these old and infirm voters is so very slight, that I see no reason for putting this provision in the Constitution and I therefore beg the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] to consent to a modification of that part of the amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM—I have no objection to striking out the last sentence.

Mr. COMSTOCK—Is it not now a new proposition?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair thinks not.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I simply rise to ask the gentleman who proposed that amendment, to point out what there is in the article which requires any such exception.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Lapham and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 55 to 51.

Mr. CONGER—Do I understand it is now in order to move an amendment by way of substitute?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion it is not now in order to offer an amendment by way of substitute.

Mr. CONGER—Is it in order by way of amendment?

The CHAIRMAN—By way of amendment it can be offered.

Mr. CONGER—Then I desire to offer the following amendment, which I have referred to when I last addressed the committee, to wit, the same that was proposed in the Legislature of 1853.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, or other infamous crime, for depriving every person who shall make or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, or who shall pay, give or receive, or promise directly or indirectly, or agree to pay or give money or other property or valuable consideration with intent to influence any elector in giving his vote, or to deter any elector from voting, from the right to vote at such election, or from holding any office voted for at such election.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion the proposition is a substitute and not an amendment, and can only be received by reconsidering the vote by which the former proposition was carried in the committee.

Mr. CONGER—Then I move to reconsider that vote with a view of enabling me to offer this—

Mr. RATHBUN—That motion cannot be considered to-day, I suppose—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion it can be entertained, as it appertains strictly to the business before the committee.

Mr. CONGER—I will state that my object in offering this is based on the following reasons: In the first place, as I intimated before, I wish to include what has been omitted heretofore, the action of the party who seeks by money, or other valuable consideration, to deter or dissuade anybody from voting. I suppose there is no objection to that proposition. Then, again, we have here, under the form of a constitutional provision, really done the work of legislation; for my honorable friend from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] has been obliged to resort to the Revised Statutes to get the foundation for his amendment, but he could not well get the whole statute in. It is very unnecessary in making these constitutional amendments by which the Legislature are to pass certain laws, to go into all the particulars of the law which they shall enact. It is sufficient if we point out clearly to them the duty they ought to pursue. When you have the phrase "with intent to influence any elector in giving his vote or to deter or dissuade any elector from voting," I submit you have perfect power to command precisely what the Legislature of 1853 sought heretofore; to say what influences may be allowed and what influences may be disallowed. The other advantage of the proposition I submit is this: That it is simpler in form, it embraces all the subjects on which the Legislature are to act; for you will find as in the report of the committee that they are also to pass laws depriving anybody who shall make any bet or wager, of the right of voting. As I have said I have an unusual advantage in presenting this proposition, because I know when it is carefully scrutinized it will meet the approbation of the majority of this committee, in preference to the other proposition, for where I use the phrase "promise or agree to give or receive directly or indirectly," I think it is a much better form, to cover the whole subject than that which is in the proposition of the amendment, "receive or expect to receive," because it must be out of an agreement directly or indirectly made that the base transaction grows of buying or selling votes. It covers both cases equally, of those who pay or offer to pay, and those who receive or offer to receive. This proposition, made by the Legislature of 1853, was canvassed with the greatest care, and there were more minds occupied upon it, and that took part in maturing it, of the legal profession, than might be supposed, on mere notice of the result of their deliberations. The proposition was introduced by the late Mr. Taber of Albany, who used all his ability in perfecting the language which should cover every possibility of fraud. Afterward it passed the Senate, and received all the votes of the gentlemen present in the Senate, with the exception of three. That is the reason, I think, that this proposition will be found better and more desirable by the gentleman than his own.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Conger, to reconsider, and it was declared lost.

Mr. FOLGER—I wish to offer an amendment which may perhaps be premature, but which will be necessary if the report of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, is adopted. It is to strike out that provision which requires a residence in the district from which the officer is to be elected, and also the provision requiring a four months' residence in the county. According to the report of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, that is the smallest district from which an officer is to be elected; and single assembly districts are by that to be abolished. I offer this amendment so as to make this article correspond with what appears to be the temper of the Convention in reference to that report.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Folger, as follows:

Strike out the words in section one of Mr. Dwight's amendment: "But such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote."

Mr. RATHBUN—I am opposed to that amendment for one reason, which I will state. If I understand the amendment, it removes entirely all necessity of a personal residence in the district for any time. Unless the district system is altered, persons may colonize a weak district from a strong one in one single day, so as to change a majority in the smaller district, and still leave the other to be carried by the same majority. It opens the door for colonization, unless the report of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature shall fix the location of districts by county lines. Unless that prevail, then we have the colonization system complete and perfect, from one district in the county to another, and in cities still worse.

Mr. BARNARD—I would suggest to the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] that there are other districts beside assembly districts, and although we may have the proposition of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, so as to have county lines represent the districts, yet when it comes to the cities—the city of Brooklyn for instance—we have an election for city officers, held on the same day as for State officers; we have an election for mayor in the city, who may be voted for, unless an amendment is made, by all the citizens of Kings County who may come in within a few days into the city of Brooklyn. Then we have aldermen to be elected, and we might have this colonization from one ward to another, unless the provision is left as it stood originally.

Mr. FULLER—I desire to offer an amendment as follows:

In section 1, line 2, after the word "citizen" insert the words, "of the United States."

As the amendment stands now, accepted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], these words are stricken out. The reason of the amendment, as stated at the time, was that a doubt had been raised as to whether a colored man was a citizen of the United States; and, if I understood it, it was in deference to this doubt that this amendment was made. The gentleman stated that it was held in the Dred Scott decision that a colored man was not a citizen of the United States, and also that Governor Marcy refused to give a passport to a colored man, upon the ground that he was not a citizen of the United States; and it was in deference to these decisions, as I understand it, that this amendment was moved to strike out the words "of the United States." I am not in favor of making any such concession—it is a virtual concession—in deference to those decisions, that a colored man is not a citizen of the United States; or in other words, it assumes that there may be a well founded doubt, as to whether a colored man is a citizen of the United States. I am unwilling to admit or concede, directly or indirectly that there is any such doubt. The Dred Scott decision never was an authority higher than an obiter dictum; such as it was it has already gone to the "tomb of the Capulets" never to be resuscitated; it is nothing to the credit of Governor Marcy, that he refused a passport to a colored man, on the ground that he was not a citizen of the United States; and if alive, he would not do it again. I am, Sir, in favor of extending the elective franchise to the colored man, but I am unwilling that while I extend it to him with one hand, I should be found taking back with the other a full recognition of his citizenship. I plant myself upon the ground that he is a citizen of the United States—there I propose to stand, and that ground I do not propose to yield. If you strike out these words for the reason assigned, we shall have it alleged hereafter that this Convention has decided by its action that a colored man is not a full citizen of the United States, but only a sort of half citizen, such as was described by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] the other evening. There is another reason why these words should be restored; the words "citizen of the United States" are well understood. This word "citizen" is a word of very large import; it is one which has not been judicially defined in the Constitution of this State, and if the amendment is left to stand, it may have to be judicially defined. The amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] accepted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] assumes that if we use the word "citizen" instead of "citizens of the United States," a colored man may vote, although not a full citizen of the United States. If that is so, then why may not another man vote who is not a full citizen of the United States. And where will this end? I think, sir, we had better preserve the language as it was in this respect, and I think the amendment is not called for. In the next place, the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] is a concession I am unwilling to make, in deference to the authors of the Dred Scott decision or any other decision of that kind.

MR. FOLGER — The gentleman finds his argument upon an error. The phrase "citizens of the United States" is not in the present Constitution, and this statement eliminates all there is in his position. Then, it seems to me, down falls his argument. If the gentleman will turn to the Constitution, he will see that the phrase "citizens of the United States" is not there at all, and never was, from 1777 down to the Constitution of 1821, and the Constitution of 1846, referring to the men of color, expressly speaks of them as "citizens of this State." And also it says: "And no man, unless he shall have been three years a citizen of this State." So the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] was not introducing a new rule, but only restoring the words the fathers handed down to us, and by which I prefer to abide, rather than to launch upon the sea of uncertainty and require a judicial construction on any new phrase we may use. It is very bold and manly, without doubt, to despise the precedent of the Dred Scott decision, and the precedent fixed by Governor Marcy and the precedents fixed in the history of the country. It is very bold to say that there are no doubts; that we cast all doubts to the winds; that we are not to give way in our feeling for the negro and our desire to take care of him, to any such fanciful, unfounded doubt. But if there is a doubt, is it not the part of wise and prudent men to guard against it; and while pursuing the object we desire, to remove from our path all pitfalls into which we may perchance slide? That there is a doubt, the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller] cannot deny. There is an express decision upon the judicial records of the country, to the effect that the colored man is not a citizen of the United States. There is an express decision upon the records of the executive department of the United States, that the colored man is not a citizen of the United States. Then where is the wisdom of running our heads full against this wall, however weak it may be, for although the wall may topple over, our scalps may chance to be abraded. I think we give up nothing when we adhere to the language of the Constitution of 1846, which had no such phrase as the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller] claims to restore, but which crept into the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] because he perceived it was used so extensively in the report of the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage. If it be true—I do not say it is or is not—but it may by possibility be true, that the colored man is not a citizen of the United States. And then if we put that phrase into our Constitution and say that because he is a citizen of the United States, he shall be a voter here—while we have come together with that subject in our minds among others, and with the desire to give the colored citizens of this State the right to vote, we are using language which may defeat the exercise of that right. I say, it is the part of wisdom to eliminate all such doubts from our Constitution and plant ourselves on certainties, which we surely do plant ourselves upon when we adhere to the language which has been settled for twenty years.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Fuller, and it was declared to be lost.

MR. VAN CAMPEN—I offer the following amendment to Mr. C. C. Dwight's amendment:

To strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof "two," so that it shall read "two months' residence in the county" instead of "four months' residence in the county."

The object of moving this amendment is, that I desire not to throw any unnecessary obstacle in the way of those who have a clear State residence of one year. I cannot perceive that by retaining four months we gain anything, except a certain purpose to hinder what is termed immigration from one district to another. It seems to me that every facility ought to be afforded to the voters who have a clear State residence, and whose interests are clearly identified with the State. Therefore, I think all the purposes of preventing those frauds, which are sometimes perpetrated by moving from one section of the State to another, would be clearly provided for by two months' residence as well as four. I like generally the article as it reads, but I think this would be an improvement upon it.

MR. KERNAN—I am in favor of that amendment. As I understand it, it reduces the county residence from four months to two months. I am in favor of it because I am opposed to anything of that nature. I do not see the function which a four months' residence in the county is to perform in this constitutional arrangement. The voter must have been in the State for a year, and it seems to be the settled purpose of the committee who reported this provision, that he must reside thirty days in the official district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote. Under this arrangement, I do not see any benefit of any such limitation of four months' residence in the county, as there must be a residence in the official district from which the officer is to be chosen.

Mr. FOLGER—The reason there is for this residence of four months, is undoubtedly to prevent colonization, which might be carried on in a residence of sixty days. Take the county of St. Lawrence for instance, with its seven thousand surplus votes, and it might control the election of many assemblers in an election, upon the result of which election might depend who should be United States Senator. In a time of great excitement, or great desire to carry that election, they might send the surplus population of St. Lawrence (supposing they were men of such principles), over into the counties of Clinton, Warren, and Essex, and down to Fulton and Hamilton, and by a residence of sixty days, they would be enabled to carry so many assembly districts as to decide the result of the Senatorship. Or, that I may not seem invidious as to party, you may take the forty-six thousand surplus of New York city, and send them up along the line of railroads and along the Hudson river, and produce the same result. In the old Constitution this required residence was six months; the Constitution of 1846 reduced it to four, and to my mind four is as small a limit as expediency would require, and the result of any further restriction will be bad.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I do not conceive that a residence of four months is to prevent colonization entirely, but I understand that requirement is in its reason analogous to the requirement of one year's residence in the State, before a man shall be authorized to vote. That is to say, it is to secure an incorporation as it were into the body politic of the county of which he is to become a citizen, that he become acquainted with the people, and with the institutions of the county. There is a great multiplicity of county officers to be chosen, and it is intended there should be such a residence required as will make a man really a citizen of the county, before he shall be entitled to vote therein. I conceive that to be a stronger reason for requiring a four months' residence, than the reason that it will operate against colonization to carry an election.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared lost.

Mr. MERRILL—I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the word "suffrage," in the second line of the second paragraph, the words, "idiots, lunatics and," so that it will read: "Laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage, idiots, lunatics, and all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery, larceny," etc.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Merrill, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of fifty-three to thirty-four.

Mr. AXTELL—I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the word "crime," the words following: "All deserters from the military or naval service of the United States, and all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States."

I do not propose to discuss this subject at any length, but I simply wish to say, that this amendment, if adopted, would probably prevent from voting about thirty thousand persons in this State and perhaps more. There are on the rolls in the Adjutant-General's office, about twenty-four thousand deserters. And as I am informed by gentlemen who know very well about it, there are some ten or fifteen thousand who were engaged in the rebellion against the United States, who voted in this State at the last election. Then there are a large number of persons who left the State for the purpose of avoiding the conscription. Of all these classes there are probably twenty or thirty thousand still in the State, who are voters. I believe that by adopting this amendment, we shall say that we believe citizenship is a sacred thing, and then there is a difference between a loyal man and the man who is not loyal, that there is a difference between the man who stood faithful in the battle front and the man who deserted his colors.

Mr. BARNARD—I have this suggestion to make to the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], to insert in his proposition a provision excluding from the right of voting the men who paid $300 to be relieved from the conscription. I think that if you want to give this privilege only to those who went to the battle front, those rich men who were able to escape by the payment of $300 ought to be prevented from voting as well as those who were real deserters, or who sought to leave the State.

Mr. LANDON—I submit whether that will not contravene the provisions of the Federal Constitution, which provides that no bills of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed. At the time these men deserted they were entitled to vote and this is a proposition to deprive them of that privilege.

Mr. BICKFORD—Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of excluding any man from suffrage who has hitherto enjoyed it. My idea is to extend the right of suffrage, and I shall therefore oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell.] I do not believe that people who are the objects of government, citizens of the United States and of this State, should be deprived of the right of voting on any such ground as this. It would cause altogether too much confusion and trouble, and is not a proposition which can be well enforced; it will make anger and ill blood, and cause a great many evils. I hope, therefore, that it will be voted down.

Mr. GRAVES—I ask, Mr. Chairman, if the question is not divisible?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. GRAVES—I would like to have a division on the first portion of it.

Mr. COMSTOCK—The objection I have to that proposition which must control my vote, is, that it is in direct contravention of the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits any State from passing any bill of attainder or ex post facto law. Now, a provision in the State Constitution, as well as an act of the Legislature, may be liable to the objection of being an ex post facto law. That which a State cannot do because it is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States it cannot do in any form, whether in the form of legislation or in the form of the Constitution or organic law. Now, with regard to this, entire proposition, it proposes to disfranchise a certain class of persons for what? Not for offenses hereafter to be committed, and for which they may be tried and punished, but for past offenses, which have been long ago completed and consummated. If we adopt that proposition, we now prescribe and ordain a new punishment for an old offense, a punishment which could not be inflicted in any form according to any Constitution or law existing when the offense was committed. That is the very definition of an ex post facto law, and that is the objection to the entire proposition which ought to dispose of the whole of it. This exact question was not long ago decided by the supreme court of the United States in a case arising under the Constitution of the State of Missouri, as this would arise under the Constitution of this State if we adopt this amendment. The Constitution of the State of Missouri disfranchised certain persons for the very offenses named by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] in the amendment offered. The question whether that was a lawful disfranchisement went by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that provision of the Constitution of the State of Missouri was adjudged by that high tribunal to be null and void. Now, I say that this Convention should not run directly in the face of the solemn decision pronounced by the highest authority in the land.

Mr. McDONALD — After the statement of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], as to the decision of the United States Supreme Court, it may seem entirely useless to say anything on the other side; but the reason I am in favor of excluding men of the last two classes named, is not for a punishment, but for the reason that every one of these persons has shown that he is not fitted to exercise the elective franchise. They exhibited it at a time and in a manner that cannot be mistaken. I refer to the two latter classes. I am not in favor of excluding deserters, for this reason simply that a desertion may depend on circumstances. From those who were in the army, I understand that desertion often was to get rid of and to escape from cruel officers, or something of that kind, and for this reason it may not be well that those who did not go to the war to say that they would not have deserted if they had gone. But with regard to the other two classes, they stood like all persons who were at home, on the same foundation on which we all stood during that time of trial, and I say that any man who, during that time of trial, did not go to the war, and who either voluntarily joined the rebellion and took up arms against this government, or who to escape the ordinary burdens of citizenship, ran away to another country; that man showed beyond dispute that he is not fitted to exercise the right of a citizen of America and of the State of New York. That is the reason, and I put it upon that ground, and not as a punishment. Any man who will not stand by his government in the ordinary exercise of the duties of citizenship, at a time of trial, is not entitled to the highest prerogative that government can give.

Mr. HAND — I would ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] whether this decision of the supreme court was with reference to a constitutional provision; or a statute.

Mr. COMSTOCK — It was a constitutional provision. In the case to which I referred it was a clergyman who was disabled from preaching by his refusal to take the test oath.

Mr. HAND — That was a punishment. Now with reference to the constitutional provisions that we may make, I regard the matter as standing precisely in this condition. We proceed to organize the fundamental laws of this State precisely as though we never had a Constitution; all the powers that inure in us as a people are precisely as though no constitutional provision had ever existed in the world and we were beginning de novo. Now, let a people come together and form a government for themselves, they begin to look around (not under the natural law) to see what portion of the citizens may justly enjoy the elective franchise, and we exclude certain persons for certain reasons. We exclude the female for the reason that the best interests of society would not be promoted by allowing her to vote, we exclude idiots because they are disqualified from the exercise of it by their mental condition, we exclude criminals because they have forfeited the right of citizenship by their crimes and are unsafe persons to be intrusted with these important responsibilities, and so we may go on and exclude on various grounds every person we may deem unsafe as a citizen. This is in no sense a punishment for crime, it is in no sense judging judicially of a man's conduct, it is in no sense a penalty, it is in no sense like the case mentioned by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], but we proceed to examine the condition and character of every person presented before us with reference to his qualification for citizenship to see whether the interests of the State would be safe in his hands, and we pass upon them separately. Now, here is a great class of people who by deserting their country in the hour of their country's peril I deem unfit for citizenship; I think they have shown that disregard for our institutions, for the great principles of liberty intrusted to their care and keeping as to render them unfit to enjoy the privileges of citizenship, unfit recipients of that power, and for that reason we exclude them. It is no ex post facto law, it is no law at all, it is simply judging of the qualification of the citizens as though we were beginning anew, as though the existence of these persons had never been known, and we look at their qualifications to see whether we will intrust them with this power. That is the way I regard it, and I think it is perfectly legitimate. With regard to what the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] said about the rich men who bought off for $300, let me tell him that this $300 was not paid generally by the rich men, but by contribution to relieve the poor man (who had a family he could not leave) from the liability to that draft pursuant to law.

Mr. WEED — I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Did the rich men in your part of the country go in the army?

Mr. HAND — Some of them did. We have not many rich men there.

Mr. GRANT.—By section 21 of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1865, it is provided as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in addition to the other lawful penalties of the crime of desertion, from the military or naval service, all persons who have deserted the naval or military service of the United States, who shall not return to said service, or report themselves to a provost marshal within sixty days after the proclamation hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed and taken to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship and their rights to become citizens; and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof; and all persons who shall hereafter desert the military or naval service, and all persons who, being duly enrolled, shall depart the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, duly ordered, shall be liable to the penalties of this section. And the President is hereby authorized and required forthwith, on the passage of this act, to issue his proclamation setting forth the provisions of this section, in which proclamation the President is requested to notify all deserters returning within sixty days as aforesaid that they shall be pardoned on condition of returning to their regiments and companies, or to such other organization as they may be assigned to, until they shall have served for a period of time equal to their original term of enlistment."

Sir, no single word has fallen from my lips in the discussion of the suffrage question in Committee of the Whole. Indeed, sir, I did not call my friend from Jefferson [Mr. Bell], to account yesterday when he charged me with being absent for two weeks, for the reason, I suppose, that he had heard nothing from me in this discussion. Sir, in regard to the statement of the gentleman from Onondaga [Judge Comstock] as to the Missouri case, and of the Supreme Court of the United States having pronounced this proposition to disfranchise deserters and rebels as ex post facto and unconstitutional, my first answer to that is, that that case did not arise on the question of suffrage, but on an attempt to deprive a person of the enjoyment of a personal right to practice a certain profession—that of preaching for his support—unless he should first take a certain oath, that he had not at a time previous to the passage of a statute, penal in its nature, been engaged in rebellion. This was held to contravene a personal right to labor and support his family in a justifiable occupation. The doctrine that a law is unconstitutional by reason of its being ex post facto, is not applicable to the determination of the lodgment of the elective franchise in the formation of the Constitution. In framing the fundamental law we withhold the privilege from those who have heretofore shown themselves unfit to be intrusted with it, as well as from those who shall hereafter show themselves unworthy of it. We are not making laws to punish crime, but determining the kinds and classes of persons to be intrusted with the privilege of a voice in the government of the State. Now, sir, I am in favor of withholding the elective franchise from deserters and from those who voluntarily engaged in the rebellion. And it is upon these grounds, first, we demand that a person to be entitled to the privileges of a voice in the government shall be a man of integrity. The deserter is not a man of integrity. If a deserter from the service, he has disregarded and violated a most solemn oath of allegiance taken when he entered the service; and if a deserter from conscription, he has disregarded and violated the honor and obligations of a man, as a member of society, as a citizen, and as a defender of his home, his government and its flag. In both cases he proves himself false to the highest and most sacred duties and obligations of citizenship. He occupies a position far more detestable than an open enemy. He carries within his traitorous heart the evils of misplaced confidence, and in front of the enemy his crime deserves, and his punishment is, death by the military code. In the second place, we should demand of an elector that he shall be loyal to the government and have at heart the interest and welfare of that government. The stern and terrible lessons of the war admonish us to leave no power or responsibility of the government resting with traitors. The safety of the government, its power to protect, preserve and defend itself, depends upon the deep interest and unwavering determination of the governed, who must be both its supporters and defenders. Shall we say that the coward who skulks at the approach of war, the traitor who steals the guise of a friend, and with a heart blacker than a spy conveys vital information to the enemy, the voluntary rebel who stabs at the life of the nation, are to be clothed with citizenship and the elective franchise in this great and patriotic State? The voices of thousands of the loyal and brave answer, no. These deserters are criminals, vagabonds and bounty jumpers, and cowards, who have not the loyalty, integrity, courage or manhood to protect, preserve or defend the government or its flag, and for these reasons should be excluded from the ballot-box, that great fountain of purity and preservation. There are other reasons why they should be excluded. If we allow them to exercise the right of franchise we place them upon an equality with our good and brave men. Sir, when we determine that a deserter (and I care not who he is, for a deserter from the army and from conscription in principle are the same, the man is the same), shall be placed upon the broad level with a true and loyal American citizen, we do injustice to that citizen. The very moment we say to a hundred thousand war-worn veterans who came home from the war bronzed with southern suns, and swarthy with the smoke of battle, that they shall vote side by side with the deserters and rebels whom they have learned by the severe lessons of war to despise, we degrade those defenders of the Union; the very moment that we raise the deserter, the man who deserts his country, his army and his flag in time of war, and the unrepentant rebel guilty of treason and murder, to equal rights with all other American citizens, we degrade American citizenship. We should demand of a man to be a citizen and a voter of this State, that he be loyal to his country, loyal to his flag, and have courage to defend it when attacked by foreign or internal foes. Now, sir, there are many voices coming to us upon this question. We must recollect that in the war from which we have just emerged, three hundred thousand brave young men have been sacrificed; we must recollect that as we pass up and down the Mississippi, up along the valley of the Cumberland, and across the crimson fields of Virginia, the graves of Union soldiers are as thick as the leaves of autumn; we must recollect that from every one of those graves, from every one of those swampy, murky graves at Belle Isle and Andersonville, comes a voice to us saying that our lines were thinned by desertion, the enemy was informed of our position and strength by deserters; we ask you to exclude them from the rights of citizenship in the land where once we lived. We should recollect that the widow leading her children to-day, by one hand her little daughter, who can never clasp her arms around the neck of her father again, by the other the little son who inherits the blood of the patriot father, is asking us that that boy's vote, when he arrives at maturity, shall not be canceled by the vote of a deserter. Sir, the appeal of the lame and crippled heroes of the war comes to us in the person and voice of James Tanner, a doorkeeper of this Convention, both of whose legs were shot away in battle, praying us that "his vote shall not be canceled by that of a deserter." Why, sir, the examples that we set to the world should be taken into consideration on this occasion. While the Congress of the United States have enacted that the deserter from the army or navy has relinquished his right to citizenship of the United States, and have declared that he shall hold no office of power or trust under the United States by or under the laws or government of the United States; Sir, are we to be less patriotic, less wise, less vigilant, less careful than the Congress of the United States on this subject? Shall we set a different estimate on the value of integrity and loyalty? Sir, our record must answer this question. And here let me say, that a nice distinction is sought to be drawn in this discussion on this suffrage question, and from that nice distinction we are told that men may be electors and citizens of the State who are not citizens of the United States. I say this distinction, if it really exists, makes it the more important that we be careful to insert a provision in the Constitution of this State depriving deserters and rebels of citizenship, depriving them of that great power, the elective franchise, by which they may control the destiny of the State of New York, and, sir, it was in view of these provisions in the laws of the United States and in undertaking a manifest duty that we owe to the armies and navy of the United States, to our country, to the citizen soldier who is a resident and inhabitant of the State of New York. I have drawn this provision designing to suggest it, not as a subject of State action, but as an absolute provision in our State Constitution, upon the same subject to which the one under consideration refers. This provision is in these words:

"All persons who have deserted or who shall desert the military or naval service of the United States in time of war, and all persons who being at the time duly enrolled, have departed or shall depart the district in which so enrolled, or have gone, or shall go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft duly ordered, and all persons who shall have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States, shall be excluded from the right to vote in this State, unless pardoned either by proclamation of the President of the United States, authorized by law of Congress or by the Governor of the State, with consent of the Senate by a two-thirds vote."

Now, sir, in the absence of the provision in our Constitution that an elector must be a citizen of the United States, I am in favor of the pending amendment, suggesting and hoping, however, that the gentleman who offered that amendment will adopt this provision or one in its place which shall make a provision of our Constitution absolute in its terms, rejecting deserters and rebels from citizenship of the State of New York, as the law of Congress is absolute in its terms as to citizenship and the rights of deserters within the United States, so as not to leave it as the subject of future and doubtful legislation.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask whether the term "citizen of the United States" as used in the report of the committee would apply to those who were declared not to be citizens by this law of Congress, if not I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Clinton, [Mr. Axtell]. I am not in favor, however, of the second part of the proposition. I believe there is a difference between those who voluntarily take upon themselves a position in the army of the United States and those who ran away from the conscription; the circumstances under which the crime, as we so call it, was committed are different. We all very well know that when this conscription was ordered, and when its actual necessity existed, there were large numbers of persons all over the country who encouraged these people to avoid conscription, men who believed that in the process of putting down the rebellion the loyal forces would be beaten and that any sacrifices we could make would be useless, and they were encouraged also, by large numbers of persons remote from the scene of conflict, and away from those surroundings which would tend to stimulating any man, it seems to me, of loyal heart, to stand in defense of the nation, therefore there is some sort of excuse that they—many of them young—were influenced to go away. I would not put it upon this class; besides, it would be very difficult to determine judicially the class who absented themselves. But not so with those who deserted from the army, their names are a matter of record and can be definitely and clearly settled; and if the language of the Committee on Suffrage does not cover the case, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PROSSER—I move the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Prosser, and declared lost.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I am not prepared to say whether as a matter of expediency or policy I would vote to insert this clause, as proposed by the member from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], in the Constitution to be adopted by the people, but I cannot adhere to the doctrine advocated by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], that it would be in its nature an ex post facto law. Unless he claims, as the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], that this right of voting is a natural right, or that it is a divine right, or that it is an inalienable right, or some other than a political right, I don't see how he can sustain his position. Now as I recollect the case that came up in the United States court from Missouri, the proposition there settled was very correctly stated, as I remember it by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Grant]. A clergyman refused to take what was called the test or iron-clad oath, that he had not been engaged in the rebellion, or afforded aid or encouragement to traitors; refusing to take that oath he was debarred the privilege of practicing his profession; he appealed from that decision, and the United States court decided, as I understand the decision, whatever dicta there may have been in the language of the learned Justice Field, who delivered the decision, that that profession was a franchise, it was a right of property; without it this man could not support himself or his family, and when you took that away from him you took away a property franchise that belonged to him, and it was therefore an ex post facto law. To carry out the principle contended for by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], how can you pass a law that will prohibit a man from voting who has been convicted of the crime of larceny. You provide for that in the provision to be submitted to the people, those who have been or may be hereafter convicted of larceny or other infamous crime. Suppose the crime has been committed previous to the adoption of your Constitution and the man is convicted after you have adopted it, can he be set up ex post facto law as a reason why the people of the State of New York cannot deprive him of the right of suffrage. No, sir, deserters come under the same clause, and the people in their sovereign power have the right to exclude from suffrage any class of persons to whom in their discretion they think granting the privilege to, would endanger the right and the privilege that is conceded to us.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to say but a word or two upon this amendment, not to discuss the constitutional question, for there is a difference among the members of the bar in reference to its import, although it seems to me, as a very humble layman, that the fact that this amendment is introduced avowedly to punish a large number of citizens for an alleged offense against the State and against the government of the United States, and that offense committed during the war recently ended, proves it to be what may be fairly and properly, although perhaps not legally called an ex post facto law. The avowed object of this amendment is to punish men—for what? For desertion? When? During the war which has been ended some thirty months. Sir, it seems to me that it is punishment for an offense which has been committed during a period of time long passed. Sir, if there is any doubt that the State of New York is a progressive State, I think it is proved by the amendment now pending, as well as in many others which have been introduced during the session of this Convention. Sir, when will all these things end? Gentlemen time and again have arisen upon this floor and denied that this was a punishment. Sir, is it anything else? When you address our understandings and our hearts, does not every man that has a particle of common sense in him know that it is a punishment, moved in order that it may be a punishment and intended to operate upon thirty thousand people in this State. This is the purpose if not the motive of it. This is the precise effect of it if the amendment shall be adopted. I submit to the people of this State in Convention, that we cannot afford to indulge in this kind of punishment. What, sir, will be done if we adopt the report of the Suffrage Committee which has been introduced here? The original proposition was to disfranchise (let us speak the truth plainly) some forty or fifty thousand white men, one-half of them poor men or paupers and another class of them alien citizens who have filed their naturalization papers—to disfranchise, I say, some forty or fifty thousand white men and to give the suffrage to some seven or ten thousand colored men in this State. It is now proposed to add to those forty or fifty thousand, fifty thousand others. Sir, the people of this State are not so blind that they cannot see through the motive and object and the effect of an amendment like this. Sir, as a business man, I think it is not wise to adopt either this amendment or any of those that have been proposed, and which stand before the committee in connection with it. To disfranchise so many thousands of deserters and some twenty thousand other persons named, is to banish them from the State of New York practically, with all their industry, with all their wealth and with all the advantages of such a population. Sir, I had supposed after the long period that has transpired from the declaration of peace by the surrender of General Lee, that there would have been a period, and long ere this hour, when we should cease to indulge in that bitterness of feeling which will result, practically, in personal banishment, and which is proposed for purposes of punishment. All this shows the absence of every feeling of kindness and of mercy toward a class of men whom we know and feel to be wrong, but who have been most terribly punished for the crime of rebellion. Sir, in the history of the civilized world, there never was any rebellion like that just passed in this country. Yes, sir, never were a people so much punished as were those in the Southern States who engaged in this rebellion. Within ninety days past, in the county of Polk, in the State of Georgia, my attention was called to seventeen hundred white men willing to work, unable to find employment, and literally begging for bread, and most thankful to the people of the north, and of the great west for their contributions of corn which they made into bread at the commencement of the week and the only food which they enjoyed from the beginning to the end of that week. Thousands and thousands of these people literally starved and suffered as a punishment for the errors and crimes which they committed against the government. I submit to the mover of this amendment and to the advocates of this amendment that these people have been severely and terribly punished.

Mr. MERRITT—Does the gentleman regard this proposition as partisan in any sense?

Mr. BROOKS—Sir, I do regard it as partisan.

Mr. MERRITT—For what reason.

Mr. BROOKS—Sir, on the very face of it it is partisan. Every man knows it to be partisan. Let me go on. I know what the gentleman will say in answer to my assertion. Perhaps he thinks it may operate a little more upon the democratic party than upon the republican party. Let it be so.

Mr. MERRITT—I would say, it has been alleged by the democrats that they sent more men to the war than the republicans, and they think they are a little better off in that respect; but I am in favor of disfranchising them, no matter what their politics.

Mr. BROOKS—Whether they are republicans or democrats, I am against disfranchising them. I regard them as citizens of the United States, who, it may be, have committed the crime of desertion or rebellion, but all these may have repented in dust and ashes for the commission of their wrong. I speak, sir, in behalf of a class of persons in whom I have no more interest than any other gentleman, perhaps less than many others. I bespeak for them through our action here a little of that human kindness which it seems to me, in times like these, so long after the rebellion has ended, is eminently becoming, and which should animate the minds and hearts of all generous people. Forgiveness is a great example taught us by the Almighty himself. It is a sentiment implanted by God in the heart of every true man. The Son of God has said if you forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses, and let me say here in regard to this matter of mercy in the language of the poet that—

"The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from Heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd—
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His scepter shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:
But mercy is above this scepter'd sway:
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself,
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice."
* * * * * "We do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy."

Then in the name of mercy, and in the name of justice, I protest, against the disposition manifested in these various amendments, the end of which is to punish men for offenses committed so long ago in the past time.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I agree with the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] that this is a progressive age. I think that all persons who have progressed from 1855 to 1867, and have heard this most eloquent and touching appeal which the gentleman from Richmond has made in behalf of citizens of foreign birth, must feel at least that one portion of the State of New York has been making rapid progress. I congratulate the gentlemen of foreign birth upon their new advocate.

Mr. BROOKS—I said nothing of citizens of foreign birth. There were very many citizens who were not of foreign birth.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My friend is mistaken, as he will see. He spoke in most terrible condemnation of the committee who proposed to prevent a large number of persons of foreign birth—aliens, as I think the gentlemen called them, from becoming citizens in 1868 in season to vote.

Mr. BROOKS—I did not know they were deserters.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Not deserters. The gentleman was not at the moment speaking of deserters, but of foreigners? It was out of the line of his argument, I know, but his feelings were so glowing in favor of the citizens of foreign birth that he had to turn out of the line of his argument against excluding deserters from the elective franchise and bring them in and defend them. I congratulate them upon their advocate. I wish to say one thing more in regard to it. I think that gentleman will find in this case, as in every other where they undertake to lay down a rule of action based upon no principle, that it is perfectly uncertain where it will lead. I understand that the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] concurs with the majority of this house in the belief that I put forth strange doctrines when I said that man had a natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which he lived. Under that doctrine the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] would find himself fully able, to do what is proposed to be done in this case. But I understand that the gentleman believes that society has a divine right, to exclude people at the polls from exercising the elective franchise. I understand the gentleman from Onondaga finds full authority to exclude a black man, and that he finds full authority to exclude women, and full authority to exclude any one he wants to exclude, but he cannot find any authority to exclude deserters or any other man whom he does not desire to exclude. He cannot find any way to exclude traitors, why? He does not wish to exclude them. But a word with my friend from New York [Mr. Hutchins]. Let me tell him my doctrine does not create the necessity of allowing a traitor or deserter to vote if we can ascertain who a deserter is. I do not feel myself at liberty to vote for this amendment, not because of any difficulty in regard to my right to have them excluded, but because I consider that it is utterly impracticable to determine now who are guilty deserters and who are not. I should be very unwilling to take the muster rolls in our Adjutant-General's office to determine whether a man was a guilty deserter or not. I do not believe that those rolls would do justice to the men whose names are marked upon them as deserters. Did I know of any mode by which it could be ascertained who did desert their country in the field intentionally and were really guilty as deserters, I should vote for this amendment, but as I do not know of any mode by which it could be done, I shall not vote for it. In placing my action on this ground I think I act consistent with the principle which I understand underlies our government, and the question of whether a man has a natural right to participate in the administration of government, is one that has got to be determined in the court of morals. It is a moral question, and I am called upon to act under no other rule. This idea of its contravening the provision of the Constitution of the United States, that you should pass no ex post facto law, my legal friends will allow me to say is simply a legal absurdity. We are not putting a punishment on these men when we say they should not participate in the use of the elective franchise within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BROOKS—Why do you do it, then?

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I would not do it in this case at all. If I do it at all I would do it on the ground that such men had, in my opinion, in this moral court, called by the people, forfeited their right, and I have a perfect right to say, sitting here, forming one of the Convention, whether they shall participate in elections or not. This court of conscience is the court in which alone this Convention can try deserters, and the United States Constitution has placed no barrier in the way of the action of that court.

Mr. GOULD—I rise sir, to protest, as I do protest, against the cool assumption of the gentleman from Richmond that this is avowedly designed as a punishment. Sir, nobody has avowed that doctrine upon this floor, not a man with the exception of himself [Mr. Brooks]. No person who advocates this measure has an idea of advocating it in the nature of a punishment at all, and therefore the section from the bill of rights which declares that no ex post facto law shall be passed or no bill of attainder has any application whatever to this matter. Why, sir, we are sitting here as a Convention to say to whom shall be delegated the expression of the sovereignty of the people of the State of New York. We have a right to exclude from it those whose voice in such an expression would be used dangerously to society. Sir, let me ask any man here whether he supposes a man who deliberately and coolly, in the hour of his country's agony, and the hour of her peril, shall deliberately turn his back upon her, and go away out of the country with the express purpose of avoiding his share in her defense, the defense of her women and children, has a right to make laws? I ask, sir, if a man who has deserted his army in the very face of the foe, and when that desertion may cause the destruction of the army in which he is engaged, whether he shows a sufficient amount of patriotism and virtue to be intrusted with the expression of that sovereignty? Sir, there may be men who suppose that this is a right given to make voters.

But if there are those that entertain the conscientious belief that such patriotism as this is sufficient to make a voter, then, sir, I say "O, my soul, enter not into their secrets and into their assemblies mine honor be not united." Now, sir, in regard to what has fallen from my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] I see no difficulty whatever. You have only to incorporate into the oath, which may be offered to any person when challenged, a declaration that he has never left the country to avoid the draft, or deserted from the army, then you have proof that you require and as much as is necessary; you do not need to pass any law whatever for this purpose; if he shall falsely so swear, and it shall be found after inquiry that he has sworn falsely, then, sir, he is liable to the pains and penalties of perjury, and may be proceeded against. I see no sort of difficulty whatever in making this discrimination. We can deal with these deserters with perfect accuracy, and they can be sufficiently identified by the simple test which I have proposed.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—It strikes me that there is great force in the objection made by this distinguished gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], that it is utterly impossible to determine at the polls who those deserters are, who those individuals are that left their country for the purpose of avoiding the draft. It was stated by my friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould], just as he took his seat, that it could be put in this test oath, and that if they committed perjury they could be punished. I was about to ask him whether they are not now each and every one of them that you desire to exclude, liable to the pains and penalties of the statute referred to.

Mr. GOULD—I only hope it will be enforced against them.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—You are only accumulating the punishment against them. Now, sir, as to those who are sought to be excluded in this proscriptive article, that left the country, as charged here, for the purpose of avoiding the draft, how on earth is any man to tell what they went to Canada, or to Europe, or to France, for? Are the inspectors of elections to take up that challenge and call witnesses and examine it all day long, and until some objection is found, either to his heart or head, in respect to all these things that are in this constitutional provision contained. And does not my friend know in respect to those that are marked on the roster or muster rolls, or registered in the office of the Adjutant-General, that many and many a friend has had to go to that office and have the word "deserter" erased from the book for the purpose of protecting the tarnished reputation of a young soldier who had lost his life in battle. It is impossible for you to incorporate this provision in the article now to be passed by this body, not to do injustice. And I would ask my friend from Delaware [Mr. Grant], a question; I understood him to have asserted here, that no man who was not a man of integrity, no man who would not obey the call of his country in its hour of peril, ought to vote, then leaping away up into that wild region of fancy, and that great plain from which he and others have talked and kept us here for the last three weeks, instead of coming down to solid facts. I desire to ask him if he would include in this provision, and incorporated into the Constitution, the body of his anti-renter? Did they not violate law; did they not organize a rebellion in this State, until they had to be put down by the military power of this State, and was not more than one-half of them the gentleman's constituents.

Mr. GRANT—I would say that I had said nothing about law-breakers. My argument was simply based on the men that deserted the army and navy of the United States. I would like to say one other word—

Mr. HARDENBURGH—No; that answers me exactly. Is not a traitor a law-breaker?

Mr. GRANT—A traitor is a law-breaker; but a law-breaker may not be a traitor.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—A traitor of that description is a law-breaker, and is a traitor by the very Constitution you are about to make, and by the laws you have passed in this State, and it comes from the gentleman with more of an ill grace than from any other member of this Convention, that he should have made such a speech and such remarks as he did on this proposition.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I have a word to say in addition to the remarks made by my friend who has just sat down, in reference to the anti-renters of this State. It became necessary to declare, in the Congress of the United States, these people in a state of insurrection, in order to bring to bear upon them the laws of the United States, and any insurgents who are in arms against the laws of the United States are traitors. I have also one other matter to which to call the attention of the Convention. Just after the struggle of our revolution, upon the adoption of the first Constitution of the State of New York, when feelings ran as high as they ever have done during the recent contest, and after we had settled down in a condition to make the first Constitution of this State, even with the feelings of those who had been struggling against a powerful enemy—a band, although embittered against those of their fellow countrymen who had adhered to the parent country—they had been ridden to death by some of those who thus became traitors to the new State—no such proposition was inserted in the Constitution of this State. Looking back to that precedent, I think we can find no better or more merciful precedent than to follow that which was set by our ancestors.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I have some difficulty in voting on this subject, I have not one word to say in favor of that class of men who deserted their country in her hour of peril, but my difficulty here is how shall we determine that question. If they can be convicted, under an indictment, I should have something definite, and in that case they would stand like other criminals and they could be pardoned. Now, sir, there is no one to determine except the man himself to take his oath. We have a committee on pardons here, and we can, perhaps, give the power to pardon any criminal who may be convicted of any crime in this State. In the case of traitors, or men charged to be traitors, having deserted their country, how shall we determine it unless it is determined by the very action of the voter himself? How can we remedy it if we put it in the Constitution? Can we expect executive clemency to reach him? It seems to me we cannot. If we cannot reach him, should we put him beyond a man who takes the life of another. It seems to me not. A word or two more. I am not quite prepared to say we should make this sweeping declaration against that class of men. As I said before, I have no sympathy with them whatever; but we ought to do everything we can consistent with the laws of our common country to restore peace to this land and to this State. Now, these men have transgressed, with a grievous wrong. Let us forgive them if they ask to be forgiven, as we would other criminals, and not put them beyond the reach of a pardon by constitutional provision. On the simple question of excluding men that are traitors, if they are convicted of crime under an indictment, I would place them with other criminals—the man that steals your horse and breaks into your house, or takes the life of another. I would place them on the same footing, but I would not place them there unless they had a fair trial before a jury of their country, and were convicted of the crime they are charged with. Under these circumstances I believe I shall be compelled to vote against the amendment.

Mr. BATHBUN—I find in looking at the law under which delegates to this Convention are elected, that the provision contained in the amendment was inserted, and it further provides that deserters shall not be allowed to vote on the adoption of the Constitution. Sir, these persons that deserted were mostly young men, perhaps the large majority of them were young men, and although the crime was a very great crime, and one that is to be deplored by every man in the country, still there is to some extent an apology for these young men. We cannot any of us fail to remember that during that war, and during the trials under which the government was laboring for the purpose of obtaining men to put down the rebellion, that there were a great many men in this country, and all over the country, who were averse to the raising of men. They were hostile to enlistments and hostile to drafts,—these young men were in the habit of hearing, and had talks with, and were advised by this class of men. Many of the public newspapers in the country spoke wrongly on the subject of enlistment, and wrongly in regard to the object and purpose of the war. They spoke hostilely against the government, they attempted to bring it into ridicule and disgrace. These young men who read these papers, were educated in a measure by them. The voice was strong that came through those papers, and the voice from a large portion of the people was equally strong, and these young men were influenced. They were controlled in a great measure, and they have the apology to make that if they committed a great crime, it was done by the advice and under the influence of men that were older and were wiser as they supposed, and they acted upon their advice. Now, sir, I have to say, for them, although I regret exceedingly that they; should have failed in that hour—that they have an apology that is very strong, to make to this Convention. They have a right to appear here and to point to you the influence which controlled, and which made them commit that crime. While I would be willing to vote for a disfranchisement of men of mature age, if they could be selected and if they were known, so that they should go down with the mark of Cain forever, I would do it willingly. It cannot be done without including among them these young men, boys eighteen years of age, and from that to twenty-one, and not even entitled to a vote. Under the influence of their fathers, under the advice of influential men in the neighborhood, they ran away. Why, sir, should they be punished for it, for obeying their fathers, for obeying the voice of men in the neighborhood, for obeying the influences and doctrines of the papers they read? Sir, it would be monstrous; it would be cruel and inhuman that such a doctrine should be applied to these young men. Therefore, upon that ground, and upon that ground alone, I shall vote again: the amendment.

The question was then put on the first part of the amendment of Mr. Axtell, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the second part of the amendment of Mr. Axtell, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the third part of the amendment of Mr. Axtell, and it was declared carried.

The question was then put upon the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] as amended, which was declared carried.

Mr. POND—I wish to suggest that the amendment which I alluded to last night ought to go in the forefront of that section between the words "offer to" and the words "or terms." I move to amend it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Pond and it was declared carried.

Mr. BARKER—I move to amend the clause excluding persons engaged in the rebellion, by adding at the end "until they shall have been pardoned by the President of the United States, or the Governor of the State of New York."

The question was put upon the amendment of Mr. Barker and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the first section as amended and it was declared adopted, on a division, by a vote of 70 to 45.

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Ontario that the committee will not have time to ask leave to sit again. The committee will be dissolved in a few moments under the rule of the Convention.

Mr. BARKER—The hour of half-past seven having arrived, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman that no motion is needed under the order of business, as directed by the Convention.

The time having arrived the committee will now rise.

Whereupon the committee rose and the PRESIDENT resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; that that they had gone through with a portion of the same, and made some amendments thereto, and the hour fixed upon by a resolution of the Convention practically discharging the committee from further consideration of the report, they had directed their Chairman to report the fact to the Convention, and to submit their action to the Convention.

Mr. FOLGER—I offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage, etc., and the report of the Committee of the Whole upon the report of the said Standing Committee, if undetermined at this sitting, shall be the special order for to-morrow morning, immediately after the adoption of the journal, and for every succeeding morning at the same time, until the report of the said Standing Committee is disposed of in the Convention.

Mr. CHURCH—I move to amend the resolution that the report shall be printed.

Mr. FOLGER—I accept that.

The question was then put, on the resolution of Mr. Folger as modified, and it was declared carried.

The question was then put on agreeing with the report of the committee.

Mr. ALVORD—It strikes me, with due deference to the ruling of the Chair, that we have no report of the committee to agree to. We lay it before the Convention under the order of the Convention, and it is for them to act upon it.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state that this is an anomalous state of things, and will leave the Convention to adopt their own course of action.

Mr. ALVORD—It strikes me that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] as amended by the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] will cover the whole case. It now is in the power of the Convention to be acted upon as a special order immediately on the incoming of the Convention to-morrow, after the reading of the journal. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. FIELD—I desire to ask leave of absence for Mr. C. E. Parker, of Tioga.

No objection being made, leave of absence was granted.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

THURSDAY, July 25, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by REV. E. SELKIRK.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. N. M. ALLEN asked for a leave of absence until Wednesday next, which was granted.

The PRESIDENT announced that the special order of the day was the report of the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office in words the following:

SEC. 1. Every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been for thirty days a citizen and an inhabitant of this State one year next preceding an election, and for the last four months a resident of the county where he may offer his vote shall be entitled to a vote at such election in the election district of which he shall be at the time a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people; but such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election, a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote; Provided, That, in time of war, no elector in the actual military service of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from the State; and the Legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which, and the time and place at which such absent elector may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes in the election districts in which they respectively reside or otherwise; "Provided also, That until the first day of January, 1869, a citizen who shall have been a citizen for ten days and is otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote."

§ 2. No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer or promise to pay, contribute, or offer or promise to contribute to another to be paid or used, any money, or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm, before such inspectors, that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid, nor offered or promised to pay, contributed, nor offered or promised to contribute to others, to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote, to be given at such election. Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage, idiots, lunatics, and all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery, or of any infamous crime, and all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States, unless pardoned by the President of the United States or the Governor of the State of New York. Laws shall be passed for punishing and for depriving of the right of suffrage, and excluding on challenge, persons who shall pay or contribute, or agree to pay or contribute, or who shall receive or agree to receive any money, property or valuable thing to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket, or who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election.

The payment of the expenses of printing, of the circulation of papers and documents previous to any election, are excepted from the operation of this section.

§ 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State, of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum, at the public expense, nor while confined in any public prison. And the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which electors absent from their homes in time of war, in the actual military or naval service of this State, or of the United States, may vote, and shall provide for the canvass and return of their votes.

§ 4. Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established. And the Legislature shall provide that a register of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, shall be made and completed at least six days before any election; and no person shall vote at such election who shall not have been registered according to law; but such laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State.

§ 5. All elections by the citizens shall be by ballot, except for such town officers as may by law be directed to be otherwise chosen.

§ 6. No person who is not, at the time of taking the oath of office, an elector, shall hold any office under this Constitution. All officers shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of New York; and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of (the office he is to hold) according to the best of my ability."

The PRESIDENT announced the consideration of the first section.

Mr. MURPHY — I propose to offer the following amendment to the first section.

"Provided, however, That no colored man not hitherto entitled to vote, shall be so entitled unless the qualified electors of the State, shall, at the general election to be held in November, 1867, on a proposition in relation thereto to be separately submitted to such electors, at the same time with the submission of this Constitution, determine in favor of extending the elective franchise to all colored men."

Mr. MURPHY—Mr. President, I now offer an amendment, which I offered in Committee of the Whole, which provides substantially for the submission of the question of negro suffrage separately to the people. A resolution was adopted, offered by the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], to the effect that all questions of a separate submission of any part of the Constitution shall be deferred until the Constitution shall be framed by this Convention. I do not wish to infringe upon any rule or order of this Convention, nor do I do so in offering this amendment, in my opinion. I suppose that that resolution having been passed by a majority of the Convention, less than two-thirds of those present, it is in conflict with the rules of this Convention which entitle me to offer this amendment. I will state further, that I have somewhat modified the amendment in framing this, but it is substantially the same as it was before.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair thinks this amendment inadmissible under the resolution of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves]. It knows of no standing rule in relation to a separate submission pertaining to the Constitution, but thinks that proposition, as all other propositions arising in the order of business, is susceptible to the motions prescribed by rule 23. It is the province of this Convention to postpone indefinitely or to a day certain any order of business from day to day.

Mr. MURPHY—I submit to the decision of the Chair and, therefore, propose the following further amendment:

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MURPHY—I do not withdraw it, but I submit to the decision which I understand rules it out.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. MURPHY moved to amend the section as follows: After the word "every" in line 1, insert the word "white," and at the end of line 4, insert the words "and all colored persons qualified to vote by the Constitution of 1846."

Mr. MURPHY called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. VERPLANCK moved further to amend the section by adding thereto the following:

No property qualification for eligibility to office, or for the right of suffrage shall ever be required in this State; but no colored citizen shall have the right of suffrage unless a majority of the votes cast at the next general election in this State shall, in addition to stating whether the vote is for or against the adoption of the Constitution, state that the vote is in favor of extending the colored citizen the right of suffrage.

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules that that involves a question of separate submission and cannot be received.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not desire to submit my proposition against the wishes of this Convention or against the ruling of the President, because I am satisfied that no man has ever presided over a public body who desired more ardently than the President of this Convention to treat all persons who come before him with fairness. In reference to the question of giving the colored man the right to vote, I am entirely willing that they should have that right; if the electors of the State so decide, but the rule that has been imposed upon this Convention is a pretty severe one. Now, occupying the position that I occupy here, willing to submit this question to the people and to acquiesce in any decision they make; as an affirmative proposition I do not desire to put it in the Constitution. I am willing to put it in the Constitution with the proviso that the people shall separately pass upon this question. The amendment which I have the honor to offer is not that this question shall be separately submitted to the people, but that when they vote upon the question of adopting or rejecting the Constitution, they shall add to the ballot that they are for or against extending the right of suffrage to all colored men. This amendment rather prescribes the form of the ballot.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman cannot discuss his proposition upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair thinks the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck] is approaching the question.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I am very much obliged to the President for intimating that I am getting near it at all. I only desire to say that the gentlemen who feel as I do, desire that this question should be fairly represented here, and I submit that this amendment will give us a chance to be put properly upon the record, not that I would refuse absolutely, the right of the colored man to vote, but that we would give him this right, if the electors of this State so decide, and according to this amendment when the elector votes for or against the Constitution, he shall add to his ballot for or against negro suffrage. I submit that this is not a separate submission of this proposition to the people, and is therefore in order. Now, sir, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I ask for a division of the question so that we may vote upon the first part of the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], to insert the words "white male."

Mr. PAIGE—I vote for this amendment under the expectation that the question of the extension of unqualified suffrage to men of color will be submitted to the people as a separate proposition, and I submit an amendment to the first section which expresses my views on this subject. I am in favor of a discrimination in the extension of unqualified suffrage to men of color. I would allow any man of color to vote who has borne arms in the service of the United States, and is now in that service, or has been honorably discharged therefrom, or who are of sufficient intelligence to exercise with judgment the right of suffrage; and if the qualified voters of the State determine in favor of unqualified suffrage, I most cheerfully acquiesce in that determination.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Paige, as follows:

Insert immediately after first sentence of first section:

"Provided, That there shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the State, at the general election to be held in November, 1867, a proposition in relation to suffrage to men of color, and in case such electors on such submission shall determine against suffrage to such men of color, then no men of color except those who possess the qualifications to vote, required by the Constitution of 1846, shall be entitled to vote at any election."

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I merely wish to say that I shall vote for this amendment with the confident hope that when the proper time comes, under the resolution adopted by this Convention, a further provision will be adopted, submitting to the people the question whether colored men shall be entitled to vote. With that view I shall vote, hoping that the whole matter will be submitted separately.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—Mr. President—

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman has spoken before on this question.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—Is there such a limitation as that?

The PRESIDENT—There is.

Mr. FOLGER—I insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STRATTON—I ask to be excused from voting on this proposition, for the reason that I am paired off with my colleague, Mr. Gerry, who is unavoidably absent from the Convention to-day, but for this reason I would vote no.

Mr. BARTO—I am paired off with Mr. C. E. Parker, of Tioga county. I ask that I may be excused from voting.

Mr. JARVIS—I ask that I may be excused from voting; I am paired off with Mr. L. W. Russell.

Mr. MASTEN—I also ask to be excused from voting, having agreed to pair off with Judge Ketcham, who is now absent.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I would suggest that this system of pairing off on this question will have no particular effect one way or the other. I would suggest that the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] and the gentleman with whom he pairs vote the same way. That is a kind of pairing I do not understand.

Mr. MASTEN—I would inquire of the gentleman how he knows that fact, Judge Ketcham not having been here to discuss the question himself?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules the question is irrelevant in the order of business.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call on the amendment of Mr. Murphy, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champplain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Garvin, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hitchman, Kernan, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham, Young—48.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Astell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clark, Clinton, Cooke, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Laudon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, ~~Verritt~~, Merwin, Miller, Opdyke, Pond, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Williams—94.

Mr. CONGER—As I understand, sir, all amendments that were offered in the Committee of the Whole to the first section, ought to be offered now. I, therefore, move that the Secretary present the first of the series of propositions I submitted in the committee as an amendment to the first section.

Mr. MURPHY—I would ask the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] to withdraw his motion for the present.

Mr. CONGER—Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY—I propose now to amend this section by inserting the word "white" after the word "every" in line 1.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I suppose now that under the ruling of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] and the President, that I may now be permitted to occupy my limited five minutes (if I can hold out as long) upon this new amendment. I had supposed myself in order before, as several of the gentlemen who had then preceded me had merely risen for temporary inquiries.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman is now entirely in order.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—To resume then, sir, what I was interrupted in saying. I have listened, Mr. President, attentively to the prolonged debate upon the suffrage question in the Convention, and the Committee of the Whole, without noticing that a very important consideration that will in part influence my vote in favor of the amendment just proposed by my friend from Kings [Mr. Murphy] restraining an indiscriminate colored vote, has been brought before the Convention. Whatever inducements existed with our predecessors in 1777, 1801, 1821 and 1846 in recognizing a distinction as to this class of electors, have been many times manifolded by recent events in a portion of our country, that have placed in the views of many gentlemen upon this floor, a body of four millions of mainly illiterate, and in relation to all matters that concern the relation of voters in their enlightened knowledge of their duties to government, an ignorant people, on the same platform, after a years' residence, with the existing 800,000 voters in this State. My knowledge of this class of our population is drawn from more direct experience than perhaps any of those whom I am now addressing. If gentlemen will refer to that township of this State (which represents my post-office address) they will observe that we have among us as large a proportion as ten per cent of this colored element, indeed in my own school-district the proportion is even still greater. From such an opportunity of observation, although I recognize many of their estimable characteristics, I think that it is the duty of this body to interpose some barrier to the inroad, after a brief residence, of a mass of their still ruder brethren from the race that now people the disorganized plantations of our southern country, who, under some unscrupulous military leader, or at least his covert influence, shall neutralise your vote, Mr. President, or mine, and at the next election for our chief magistrates may, in our extended State, even—where a change of a few thousand votes would at this time reverse the political character of the State—then control the features of its electoral vote.

Mr. MURPHY—With the permission of the gentleman I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ENDRESS—I move to strike out the whole of the first proviso in reference to electors in the actual military service of the United States. Gentlemen will see that it is provided for in the third section, in the last five lines. Upon reading, you will see it more carefully expressed in section third than in section one. It is more carefully expressed in this respect. Gentlemen will perceive that it provides for the absence of persons in the service of the State and of the United States, though not out of the State. During the year 1864 this occurred in many instances; several hundred voters were at Elmira, not out of the State, not in the service of the United States, and in and about the bay of New York. There is another reason why it had better be in section three; it more properly belongs there as relating to the subject of residence. It will simplify section one very much. I move, therefore, to strike it out.

Mr. RUMSEY—I apprehend the gentleman has not considered the effect of the amendment he proposes to make. What he proposes to strike out is a constitutional provision for the preservation of the right of those who are absent from the State to vote. He proposes to simplify the provision which requires the Legislature to make laws to provide for the right of suffrage for the soldiers who have left the State, while he strikes out the only right they have to vote when away from home in service, for it will be observed that the section will stand, if this proviso is stricken out, with the declaration that voters shall vote where they reside and not elsewhere.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to say a word. The committee has very carefully considered this matter and have fixed section three as this bill stands, so we believe it answers every purpose; there may be twenty thousand people called away from their homes before election and they cannot vote at all under the proviso of the first section, but they can vote under the way we have fixed it. The Legislature provides for taking their votes when absent from their homes; they may be defending the coast or may be defending the northern frontier. This proviso does not give them the right to vote; but this proviso under section three does give those citizens who are constrained to stay away from their homes, defending their country, the privilege of voting.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Endress, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BURRILL—I beg leave to offer the following amendment, substantially the same as that which I offered in the Committee of the Whole. Add at the end of line 10:

"But no man of color other than those who have the qualifications required under the Constitution of 1846, and those who may be born in the State, shall be entitled to vote under the provision hereof."

I wish to say, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Seneca [Mr. Hadley], with reference to the amendment I introduced yesterday to prevent migration in this State, and giving them the right of the franchise before it shall be determined by actual experience that they can exercise that right. I ask for the ayes and noes on my amendment.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. MASTEN—I desire to be excused from voting for the reason which I assigned before, and I desire simply to say one word. I inadvertently voted before, forgetting my arrangement with Judge Ketcham. The reason of my voting was because I am opposed to this property qualification, and I shall, sir, here and elsewhere, vote against that proposition, whether it be boldly put forth or covertly concealed.

Mr. STRATTON—I ask to be excused from voting for the reason assigned before. Had it not been for that, I should have voted no.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Burrill, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Garvin, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham, Young—46.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axteel, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clark, Clinton, Cooke, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hiscock, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Opdyke, Pond, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Williams—96.

Mr. KERNAN moved to amend the section by striking out the word "thirty," in line 2 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ten."

Mr. KERNAN—This amendment will leave the proposed Constitution as to this subject precisely as the Constitution of the State has been for the past twenty years, and is now. I listened to the discussion in the Committee of the Whole on this question, and no good reason to my mind was given why we should require a man to be a voter to be a citizen longer than ten days. It seems to me that this answers all that is required to prevent the alleged struggling for naturalization immediately preceding the election. Every man must be naturalized at least ten days before the election. I think this is long enough; naturalization has been administered under the present Constitution; all have become accustomed to it; I have neither seen, nor have I heard that the length of time required before the election was not for all practical purposes, long enough. Persons have declared their intention to be naturalized with reference to this provision, and I trust that we will adhere to the present Constitution in this respect.

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] will prevail. As one of the Committee on Suffrage I voted, in connection with my associate, Mr. Cassidy, in favor of retaining this ten day clause. I would say, Mr. President, that there is no necessity even for that. In the Constitution of 1777 and the Constitution of 1821 no such clause appears. It is a blot upon the Constitution of the State of New York, and a direct stab at the adopted citizens of the State. It is suspending the functions of a citizen for ten days after he has acquired the rights of a citizen. You might as well say you will suspend the young man who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years ten days before he shall exercise the privilege of a citizen. And furthermore, no State in these United States has such an obnoxious clause in any of their Constitutions; there is no State but the Empire State among the whole number that has this blot in its Constitution, which suspends the right of a citizen after it has been honestly and fairly acquired by a residence here of five years. Mr. President, there is no reason, placing, as we do, the black man on an equality with the white man, why we should suspend the functions of this class of adopted citizens for any length of time. The chairman of the Committee on Suffrage in his report says, that it will prevent the raking up of unwilling and ignorant foreigners—reluctant foreigners. If the last day is thirty days previous to election, there will be just as much raking up as if the last day was ten days before election. We have seen that in our cities, and we will see it if we make it six months before the election. I was very much surprised when I heard my friend from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] extol the black man and the women, that he did not say one word in relation to this element in society—the adopted citizens of this country.

Mr. CURTIS — I would ask the gentleman whether the white men and women coming to this country are not already provided for in that respect?

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I would answer the gentleman and say that I do not think he apprehends what I meant. I mean to say, when he so eloquently extolled the rights of the women and the bravery of the black man, and said that he should be considered equal with the white man, that he did not say a word in relation to the adopted citizens in this country, whose functions this Convention are attempting to suspend for the term of thirty days. I would ask whether the adopted citizens in this country have not "marched abreast," as Mr. Greeley terms it, with the native white man and the native black man, in all the great wars of this country, from the time of the revolution down to the war to suppress the rebel- lion; whether he did not stand with the black man at Fort Wagner and Milliken's Bend, and whether they were not with the brave Butler [laughter] before Petersburg and Big Bethel [shem], fighting just as bravely, to say the least of them, as the black man and native white man, and why should this thrust be made at the adopted citizens. I expected to hear some argument from the eloquent gentlemen, in favor of not suspending the right of any particular class of citizens, white or black, in this particular. I say, Mr. President, that it is not in any Constitution of any State this malignant stab at the adopted citizens and it ought not to be, both on account of their bravery and their industry—for all our great improvements have been made by foreigners. The name of Clinton would never have been immortal if it had been left to the native white and native black men to dig the Erie canal; there would not have been water enough brought from Lake Erie to the Hudson river for a man to swim in.

Mr. GREELEY — Mr. President—I call time. The gentleman's time is up.

The PRESIDENT — The gentleman's time is not yet up.

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I am much obliged to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], who so much amused me in the committee and in the Convention by his frequent discussions on this report, for calling time. But he is not time-keeper in this battle, and, from his liberal, whole-souled nature, I am surprised that he should so quickly call time on me, more especially as I have taken no part in this gasconade up to this time, and when I would not have said one word but for this unfair, illiberal and unenlightened clause against the adopted citizen. Mr. President, this clause is in direct conflict with the naturalization laws of this country. We all know that five years is long enough for a man to understand the Constitution and the laws of this country, if he desires, and if he cannot do it in five years he never can. Under this clause, if a foreigner arrives in this country within thirty days before an annual election, he has to reside over six years before he can vote, he has to pass over six annual elections and cannot vote until the seventh annual election after his arrival in this country.

Here the gavel fell, the five minutes having expired.

Mr. GREELEY — No person is disfranchised by this proposition, naturalized or native, nor are those who have given notice that they propose to become citizens. As the clause stands in this article, with the proviso which has just now been retained, every person who has even given notice of his intention to become a citizen is protected. We require a man who comes here from Virginia, Ohio, Massachusetts, or any other State, to be a citizen of our State one year before he can exercise the franchise. We do not mean this to be invidious; we do not mean to disfranchise them; but we say that a little time is necessary. The principle is covered precisely by the Constitution of 1846, which first made the discrimination. The Convention of that year wisely considered the matter, and decided that it was not best to have voters naturalized while an election is going forward in order to carry that election; and they placed the time at ten days. Every man must be aware how the excitement of a contested election swells and swells as you approach the day of trial; how men are scrambled after, ran after, sent for, dug up, and hunted out from every quarter. We wish to have immigrants deliberately choose to become citizens—as many as will; but not, as they now are, hunted up by naturalization committees, who have packages of naturalization papers already made out to put the men through with, and who have agents in courts prepared to crowd them through by scores. Let us have time. We want six days on the registry before voting, and I think thirty days' citizenship short time enough. Let them be citizens thirty days before they vote. A learned judge said here that they stopped naturalizing in his court ten days before election. I do not see what right they have to do that. I think persons eligible to citizenship have a right to be naturalized at any time. It seems to imply that the object of naturalization is simply to vote, and I do not wish men naturalized for that express purpose; I would have men naturalized because they choose to become citizens and to assume all the responsibilities and discharge all the duties of citizens, the right of voting included.

Mr. CORBETT—There seems to be some doubt about the paternity of this amendment. I supposed that the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] had control of the original amendment, and yet the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] has accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews], requiring thirty days' citizenship to precede the exercise of the elective franchise. There is a class of men in this Convention who have assumed during the discussion of this subject, that all the ignorance, and all the wickedness in this country have come from the other side of the Atlantic, and that the whole purport of legislation is to guard against this element and prevent its being mischievous. The chairman of the Committee on Suffrage spoke yesterday about the wholesale manufacture of voters. For my part, sir, I am willing to throw all the dignity possible around the ceremony of making a man a citizen. And yet I have no faith in the subterfuges that are here introduced for the purpose of purifying the franchise in that direction. There are men from Europe landing on our shores every day, who understand our system of government, and are as well informed in regard to the politics of the United States, as men who are living here, and I would as soon trust a man who learned democracy from the O'Donoghue, as I would a man who learned democracy from Jefferson Davis. I am in favor, then, of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] inserting ten days instead of thirty, and of leaving the clause as it stands in the existing Constitution.

Mr. KERNAN called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and on Mr. E. A. Brown's name being called—

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I ask to be excused from voting, and desire to say that in view of the enlarged and patriotic views expressed by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Gross] on Friday, I came to the conclusion it would be right and proper to retain the Constitution as it is now. I withdraw my request to be excused and vote aye.

On Mr. Ludington's name being called—

Mr. LUDINGTON—I wish to say in giving my vote, that I am not aware of any existing abuse in the present Constitution in that respect, and, therefore, I vote aye.

On Mr. Roy's name being called—

Mr. ROY—I wish to state in explanation of my not voting, that I have paired off with Mr. Hale. The Clerk proceeded with the call, and the amendment was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Alvord, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Barnard, Barto, Beals, Beckwith, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burdick, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, C. C. Dwight, Ely, Evarts, Folger, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Gross, Hadley, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hitchman, Huntington, Jarvis, Kernan, Kinney, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Masten, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris Murphy, Nelson, Opyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schell Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Spencer, Stratton, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—87.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Archer, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Bell, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Case, Clark, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Hand, Hisecock, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Pond, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Sherman, Smith, M. I. Townsend, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—60.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I move to strike out in the fourth line the word "four" and insert the word "two," so that it will read "two months" instead of "four months." I know of no good reason why the term of four months in the county should still be required for an elector in this State, and who has a clear State residence of a year. I, for myself, would be satisfied with a less time than two months, but I make that proposition as a compromise between those who desire to reduce it to thirty days and those who are in favor of four months. Upon the discussion of this question last evening the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] said that one of the reasons for retaining the four months was that if a gentleman was moving from one part of the State to another it became necessary for him to become acquainted with the institutions of the county. I ask if the institutions of the counties are not all the same in the State; there is but one system in every county. I know of but one reason to make it necessary, and that is to become acquainted with the candidate, and that every gentleman can see is a matter which can be very easily overcome. Any gentleman can become acquainted with the character of the candidate presented for his suffrage in two months' time, and so far as the question of settling, as to his residence in any particular place in the State, in one county or another, two months' time is entirely sufficient.

Mr. KINNEY—I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the word "election" in line three, down to and including the word "county" in line four, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and for the last thirty days a resident of the election district."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Kinney, and was declared lost.

Mr. MERRILL—There is one simple, sufficient reason, Mr. President, why I hesitate to favor the proposition of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], although it seems to me reasonable enough, per se, and that is a reason which I have heard repeated, during this discussion, with what the great dramatist calls "damnable iteration." This reason, sir, is that "our fathers" fixed upon this period of four months, the "Convention of 1846," which the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] had the hardihood to decline to follow the other day, selected this term of county residence. It has stood for twenty years—a full score, and more, Mr. President. It has "received judicial construction." Think of that! The high legal tribunals have so "construed" the existing section that one could at any time, by merely consulting a lawyer or the reports, learn precisely how long a period of time four months is, and various other items of equally valuable information! [Laughter.] The value to the citizen of this "construction" of an article that should be about the simplest and clearest provision of the fundamental law, I will not attempt to estimate. But in view of all this, sir—standing in my place with twenty years looking down upon me, with fragrant memories of the Convention of 1846 constantly wafted under my nose—I shrink from disturbing this embalmed four months' requirement. [Laughter.] With my eyes turned conservatively backward, I ask if all the honest industry of delegates and judges and counselors, shall now be made of no avail? Boaring in my breast, sir, such respect for the traditions and the precedents of the past, I should almost expect that my sacrilegious tongue would cleave to the roof of my mouth, and my vandal right hand forget its cunning, if I dared thus to disturb this ancient instrument, to which we were sent here, at a thousand dollars per day, to pay homage. [Laughter.] Sir, I trust gentlemen will pause, will reflect, will at least view things from this stand-point, before they perpetrate such an unconscionable innovation.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Cattaraugus, [Mr. Van Campen] will prevail. There are a large class of the ministers of the gospel in the western part of the State that have to make a change in their residence along in the month of September, who are patriotic men, and will thereby lose their votes. I think they will be favorably affected by this amendment. There are large classes of that description, and I trust the Convention will take their wants into consideration by adopting this amendment.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Van Campen, and was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Axtell, Barto, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corning, Eddy, Endress, Ferry, Flagler, Frank, Garvin, Goodrich, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merrill, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, Potter, Prosser, Robertson, Rogers, Roy, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Sheldon, Smith, Stratton, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Weed, Young—74.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Evarts, Farnum, Field, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Fullerton, Gould, Grant, Graves, Hand, Harris, Hiscocck, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Kernan, Lapham, A. Lawrence, Lee, Lowrey, Ludington, Merritt, Merwin, Paige, Pond, President, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Silvester, Sherman, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, Van Cott, Wales, Wickham, Williams—74.

Mr. ANDREWS—I move the following amendment:

Strike out the word "provided" in line 11 and all after the word "also" in line 18.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I move a reconsideration of the vote which has been taken.

Objections being made, the motion was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "resident" in line 9, to and including the word "whom" in line 10, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of the election in which," so that it will read "a resident of the election district in which he offers his vote."

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer this amendment for the reason that from my own knowledge and experience, under the words now embraced, which are the same as the present Constitution, a difficulty often arises in determining for what portion of the officers to be chosen an elector may vote. I desire by this amendment to accomplish the result, to have the elector vote for every officer to be chosen by the people, when his right to vote in the election district exists, and to make the qualification of thirty days' residence universal in applicability to the right to vote for all officers.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I would like to inquire whether that has reference to the election district where there are more than two districts in the town—the election district referred to, whether for the particular district in which the voter offers his vote.

Mr. LAPHAM—He shall be a resident of the district in which he offers his vote.

Mr. WAKEMAN—That will work a hardship in some of the towns of this State. In my own town we have three or four election districts, and often men change their residence from one side of the street to the other within thirty days. It seems to me that would be a hardship to apply to the election district, in case a man moves across the street. In my town one part of the electors vote on one side of the hall, and the other portion on the other side, and they often change their residence from one side of the road to the other within thirty days.

Mr. KERNAN—At present, as it stands now, it prevents any attempt of affecting the election by changing the residence, because a man must be thirty days in the district in which the officer for which he votes is to be elected; but he must reside in an election district thirty days to vote at all; but if he must reside in an election district for thirty days to vote at all, all of which is in one assembly district, or any other official district, a man who changes his residence across the street (as a street very often divides an election district), loses the right to vote at all. I can see no good in the amendment. I think it will often lead to hardship, and will unnecessarily deprive a man of his vote, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—This is a blow at the "repeaters," and I hope it will be struck home—the fellows who vote six, or eight, or ten times at an election. If they are compelled to live thirty days in an election district, the people will be very likely to know who they are. I protest against any facilities being granted to the men who take contracts to give ten or a dozen votes in any election district, and I trust this amendment will prevail. While it prevents one honest voter from voting, it will keep out half-a-dozen fraudulent votes. Men will calculate and say, "I cannot move across the street, because the election is coming on, and I must stay here." It is perfectly easy for men to keep thirty days in one district, and I trust we will advise them to do so by letting this motion now prevail.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I propose to amend the amendment as follows: "Strike out the words 'election district,' and insert the words 'town or ward.'"

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Robertson, and was declared lost.

Mr. PRINDLE—I wish to propose an amendment of ten days instead of thirty.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Prindle, and was declared lost.

Mr. LAPHAM—If the Convention will pardon me, I would like to make a single suggestion.

Mr. FOLGER—I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman has already spoken.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. McDONALD—I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the word "and" in third line, and after the words "of the county" in fourth line, insert "and for the last ten days a resident of the election district."

Mr. McDONALD—With regard to that amendment I have but one remark to make, and that is this: you have made several requirements for the voter. You require him to be one year in the State, and you require him to be in the county four months, and you have required him to be a naturalized citizen for ten days. What I ask is, that you give some time in which you can enforce the law. How are we to determine whether men are voters? It is not a pleasant thing to challenge a man at the polls when you do not know anything about him. You ought to give us some time in which we can determine whether he is a voter or not.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—Under your registry law he cannot vote in the election district unless he is registered.

Mr. McDONALD—I ask this with regard to the registry law. Suppose a man comes from another part of the county, he is not registered until the last day, and we do not know anything about him, he comes into the election district on the morning of the election, and he is registered the day before and votes as often as he has a mind to. You thus have no chance to tell whether he is a voter or not. If you make the law, give the people a chance to enforce it.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that the Convention has passed upon the same proposition in the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews].

Mr. McDONALD—I will call the attention of the President to the fact that this amendment does not propose to strike out anything; it proposes simply another limitation. The Convention will see it is different from the amendment that has been offered.

Mr. ALVORD—I insist on my point of order.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I rise to a point of order, that the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] was distinctly disposed of by the vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Chenango [Mr. Prindle].

Mr. GREELEY—The proposition is not the same. It was then to limit to thirty days every man in the district, but this is to require him to be four months in the county, and also thirty days in the district.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the proposition to be a different one.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—If it is in order, I will move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] by substituting therefor the following: After the words "resident of the" in line 3, insert the words "town or ward, and for ten days of the election district in which he offers his vote."

Mr. LAPHAM—I accept that amendment.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—It is now debatable.

The PRESIDENT—The amendment is debatable, within the rule.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I am opposed to this amendment. First, I am opposed to any amendment of this kind here, when we are about finally to pass upon this thing, placing in our Constitution an article of this importance, when it is limited to a five minutes' debate and has been thoroughly discussed in Committee of the Whole, and when I know many of the gentlemen present are not thoroughly acquainted with the effect that such an amendment now incorporated into this section of the article will have. All the guards that are necessary to protect colonization of voters is in that thirty days that they are to reside in the district in which the officer, for whom they cast their votes resides, or where he resides. That is, he is to be thirty days in the district in which the officer resides, or from which the officer is a representative. Now, in my town, where we have five election districts in a little town, and probably twenty-five election districts in the assembly district, for which we perhaps have to send an officer or an Assemblyman to Albany, and they are divided, as the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Kernan] says, by streets. Now, then, a man moves across the street the day before election, into another election district. If he has not resided thirty days in the district in which he offers his vote, and which was, in the old Constitution, thirty days next preceding the election, a resident of the district from which the officer comes, he cannot vote under that restriction, and I can see no earthly reason for it, and you can scarcely conceive what an amount of injury will result from putting this in. It is no necessary guard, for you have it in the thirty days, and I am entirely opposed to it. If gentlemen will adopt, on a five minutes' discussion, this amendment, when you come, hereafter, to look at your article, you will find something that you will not be pleased with.

Mr. YOUNG—I said yesterday in this Convention, in regard to the election of supervisors, the town in which I reside, like most other towns in that part of the State, is divided into four or more election districts. The election for supervisors, and other town officers, occurs in the Spring, in most of these towns, shortly after moving time. Now, I ask any gentleman here to give me any reason why, if an elector moves from one election district across the street into another, he should be prohibited from voting for a supervisor of that town. I ask if there can be any fraud in permitting an elector from moving from one side of the street to the other, from one election district to the other in the same town, to vote for a supervisor or town officer of that town.

Mr. LAPHAM—I would ask whether in a town election the town is not the district in which the person votes.

Mr. YOUNG—That is a question which occurred to me. I think the phraseology of the amendment means election districts, and towns are made up of a number of election districts, and I fail to see any reason why a man that has spent his whole life in one town, is not competent to vote for any officer in that town; whether he lives in one election district or another election district of that town.

Mr. VEEDER—As I understand the amendment now proposed, it requires a residence of thirty days in a town or ward, and a residence of ten days in an election district. I am in favor of this proposition. In reply to the gentleman, in regard to the election of town officers at the spring election, I desire to state that the gentleman is very well aware that at those town meetings the whole of the electors of the town vote without regard to their residence in any particular election district. That is the way I regard it. Now, in regard to the proposition requiring a residence in an election district for thirty days to enable an elector to vote for any officer, I submit it is a hardship, for this reason. In our large cities many tenements are occupied, under agreements, from month to month, and it very often occurs that the landlords are enabled to secure an advanced rent, consequently they notify their tenants that their tenancy will expire in thirty days thereafter. This often may occur, and the tenants are obliged to leave the tenancy they occupy and move to some other election district. This change of residence is not of their own selection but is necessitated by the action of their landlord. Thus they would be compelled to lose their vote for every officer that may be upon the ticket. I shall oppose the original proposition. But if it be amended so as to require a residence for not more than ten days in the election district, I shall favor the amendment, yet I feel that ten days is even long enough a residence in the town or ward to entitle an elector to cast his vote for all officers.

Mr. LOEW—I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Strike out the words "town or ward," and insert in lieu thereof the words "town, ward or city."

Mr. LOEW—I really do not see why a party should not be entitled to vote if he moves out of the ward—why he should not be entitled to vote for supervisor or mayor that runs throughout the whole city.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Loew, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Lapham as amended, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Artell, Barker, Barnard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Noes—Messrs. Alvord, Ballard, Barto, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Comstock, Conger, Corning, C.

Townsend, Tucker, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—52.

Mr. CURTIS—I offer the following amendment:

In the first line strike out the word "male," and wherever in the section the word "he" occurs, add "or she;" and wherever the word "his" occurs, add the words "or her."

Mr. CURTIS—On this, sir, I ask the ayes and noes.

Mr. GRAVES—Are amendments in order?

The PRESIDENT—Amendments are in order.

Mr. GRAVES—I offer the following amendment:

"And all women of lawful age of like citizenship may vote for the same officers, if at an election to be held on the first Tuesday in June, 1868, at which women alone over the age of twenty-one years shall vote, a majority of all the votes given shall be in favor of exercising the elective franchise."

Mr. HAND—Can that be admitted under the rule?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair sees no objection to it.

Mr. BICKFORD—I rise to a point of order, that that is a resolution which requires a separate submission.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] whether this is the same proposition which was ruled out yesterday, in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRAVES—It is.

The PRESIDENT—I would say, with all due deference to the opinion of the chairman of the committee, that I understand this to be a proposition to be inserted in the body of the Constitution, and it will be wholly inoperative unless, after the adoption of the Constitution, an election shall be had and a vote taken, as provided by this. I think it is in no case a separate submission.

Mr. GRAVES—I ask the ayes and noes on that proposition.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. GREELEY—I have not been allowed a hearing in this case. I desire to say a word. The Committee on Suffrage considered this whole matter deliberately, and decided to enfranchise black men, and not to enfranchise women, because black men want to be enfranchised and women do not. If any man doubts this, let him ask the next twenty black men he meets and the next twenty women, indifferently, and he will be assured of its truth. I object to this proposition, because it compels women to vote in order to avoid voting. I am willing the question of black suffrage should be submitted to black men, and let all that do not vote count in the negative; and so in regard to women. I am in favor of such a submission. Let the women who do not choose to vote abstain from voting, and, by abstaining, affirm their desire not to have the right of suffrage extended to them. I believe in the principle that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed;" and whenever the women of this State shall say that they desire the right to vote, I am in favor of conceding it. I do not believe it will be wise in them so to indicate; I do not believe that one-tenth of our women desire to exercise the right of suffrage; and I think all these propositions inapplicable to the existing state of facts. Whenever the women shall choose to exert a decided influence in politics—at I hope they may—I want them to act as women, not as persons. I wish the women of this State to be heard as women, and not to be mixed up with and commingled with men in caucuses, on nominating committees, and at the polls, but allowed to have their views heard as the women of the State. I would be very willing to commit to them all questions connected with the domestic relations—with marriage, separation, and divorce, and all questions touching the care of families, of inheritance, and of dower; but the proposition does not come before us in such shape as to commend itself to the women of the State; and, when they shall be heard, as I trust they may choose to be heard, let them be heard as women. If they are ever to exercise the elective franchise, let them meet as women, and elect delegates as women, and have Legislatures or Conventions to which only women shall be admitted, either as spectators or officers; and let them therein state their wishes in regard to the legislation of the State. I am sure they will be heard. I am very sure they will be heard as women; but this demand for a common right with men is the voice of a very few women; and the claim that they act for women I repudiate. The gentleman who offered the last proposition, asked how the Committee on Suffrage acted thereon. I have had no opportunity to answer him until now. When he made that proposition, the lady who leads this woman's rights movement, Mrs. Stanton, at once protested against it, and said she would have no appeal to women—would not allow women to vote on the question—but insisted on our adopting her proposition, pure and simple, that women should be treated as all men are treated. When the eloquent gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtiss] spoke for women, he pointed to Queen Elizabeth as having been a great sovereign. Did Queen Elizabeth select a Cabinet, or did she call a Parliament, of men and women indiscriminately? I appeal to all the female rulers, from Semiramis to Victoria—to the Empress Catharine of Russia, to Maria Theresa of Austria. Not one of these great women has ever proposed the commingling of men and women in legislation or governments.

Mr. GRAVES—I have endeavored to speak at length upon this subject, and in presenting the amendment which I offered to-day, owing to the peculiar condition of this Convention I have not been able to present this amendment, so that it should meet with appropriate consideration. Yesterday, under the rule made by the Chair, I was prevented from discussing the question. Sir, it is the very question to which the gentleman objected who has just sat down, that I desire to call the attention of this Convention to. It is said by many, that the women do not desire to vote, that it is only a few of what are called strong-minded women, that desire to exercise the elective franchise. I desire to submit the question to the women alone, to let them determine whether they do desire to exercise the elective franchise or not, and I desire to do it upon this amendment. I have never regarded the right to exercise the elective franchise as existing in men rather than women; I hold the right of one to vote just as old as the right of the other, and if at the organization of our government, our revolutionary mothers had desired to exercise the right of going to the ballot-box and voting, or of aiding in the enactment of any laws which were instituted for the purpose of re-organizing our government; there was no law, there was no code, civil or divine, which would have prevented the mothers from going to the ballot-box, or of assisting in framing the laws. But that right has been assumed by men, and quietly acquiesced in by the women. Women have permitted the men to make the laws and vote upon all important questions, and now I ask because the women in that peculiar condition of the country when the population was sparse, and when the country was poor and their wants small and easily satisfied, because they consented that men should exercise all the law-making powers and the elective franchise, and because they quietly acquiesced in that, is it any reason, in the present condition of our country, that they do not desire to exercise the elective franchise now. That is the question I desire to submit to them. They know that by the change in the condition of our country they have acquired a power and an influence to be felt, and their improved position in society is of such a character that it has become important for the perpetuity of our government, that their influence as citizens may be the means of sustaining a government that seems to be fading away under the immoral influences that surround it. It is quite important. Why is it, I ask, that the fathers to-day are educating their daughters, believing it is important to give the daughters just as good an education as the sons, for the ordinary duties of life? Does it disqualify a woman for the exercise of all the domestic relations, for all the kind, sympathetic properties of her nature, because she is educated equally now with the male sex? Does it render her less fit for all the domestic relations and agreeable duties that surround her? Certainly not. And because she is educated in all the substantial sciences so important to her as a woman, does it disqualify her for any of these social relations? Let the question be put to them. The gentleman says the women do not want to vote. He is mistaken. This has never been discussed between the women in sober earnestness; they never have examined the question for themselves. Their husbands and those who have desired to retain power and influence, have advised them that they do not desire to exercise this power, but let them examine it themselves, and you will find ninety-nine out of every hundred at the ballot-box voting either in favor of exercising the elective franchise or against it, and with that result certainly we ought to be satisfied.

MR. GOULD—I think it must be very obvious to the Convention that this proposition is exceedingly crude. What is a woman? Is a girl of eighteen years of age a woman? We have no law regulating what a woman is. We have no law regulating whether an Indian woman or a foreign woman who happens to be in the country, may vote or not. There is no legal provision here that surrounds this thing, and the amendment is so strong that if only ten women in the State vote upon the resolution that the gentleman has offered, and six of them vote in favor and the others against it, the thing is carried. The gentleman must see how exceedingly absurd would be the result which would follow from the adoption of his resolution. He says the subject has not been discussed among the women. It is a most extraordinary assertion. It has been discussed among them, and discussed for a long time, and the women of the State are opposed to this matter. When we see that the true womanhood of the State will not vote on the question at all, and when only the looser portions of the community will vote upon it, I think gentlemen must see that the whole proposition is fraught with mischief and danger. I hope that no gentleman here will be weak enough to vote upon a question of this kind, unless some very much greater safeguards are thrown around it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Graves, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barto, Beals, Eddy, Farnum, Fowler, Graves, Hammond, M. H. Lawrence, Seaver—9.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Beadle, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Folger, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Greeley, Groes, Hadley, Hand, Harris, Hiscock, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Pond, President, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Root, Roy, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Campen, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Williams, Young—133.

MR. MORE—I offer the following amendment, to be added to the amendment of Mr. Curtis. "This proviso shall not apply to women of color."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. More, and it was declared to be lost.

MR. MERRITT—A few days since I defined my position upon the question of female suffrage,

I then stated, that I now believe it inexpedient to make the change proposed by the Constitution which it is proposed to submit. I shall favor any proposition having in view a submission of the question to the electors, at such time in the future as will give full time for discussion before the people, when the decision shall not be embarrassed by other and different propositions. With my present views, I should at such election favor and vote for such an extension of the right of suffrage. But on the pending motion, to make the change in the article now before the Convention, I shall be constrained to vote against it.

Mr. CURTIS—The chairman of the committee, the honorable gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] says he has no evidence that the women of this State desire the franchise. I will point the honorable gentleman, and his friends in this Convention, who are so anxious to extend the franchise to a certain class of the population, that they have not in this Convention, at least, presented themselves by petition, whereas I have had the pleasure of presenting the petitions of more than one thousand persons of the adult population of this State, being women, who do desire the extension of this franchise. He also speaks of Queen Elizabeth: well, sir, Queen Elizabeth's will was the government of England; and at the most crucial moment of her life, when the question was whether she should marry the French Prince, after all her courtiers and advisers, Essex, Walsingham and all her great advisers had plead against the match, it was only by a letter from a gentleman not connected, as we may say, with her government at all, that her will was changed, and her will was the law of England. The proposition that is pending by my amendment is not to force a single woman in this State to do anything she does not wish to. It is simply to remove the disability from women to-day. Women to-day go into the auction room, women go into the stock exchange, and she may plead her own cause in court if she chooses, and all that I ask is that the disability which now rests upon her may be removed—a disability the scope of which was described by my friend from Richmond [Mr. Brooks], when he said that not to grant suffrage is a punishment, and to deprive fifty thousand Union deserters of the franchise was practically to banish them from the State; and I ask, not that one single woman, but that all the intelligent women who may wish to exercise the same right shall not be debarred. If no woman wishes to do that thing, why then women will refrain, and the whole force of the arguments which have been adduced against the proposition I had the honor to submit reduce themselves to two, namely, that it is inconsistent with the female sex, and that it will subvert the family. In regard to the functions of the sex; as I said the other afternoon, we deprive ourselves of knowing what its just limits are, so long as we assume arbitrarily to coerce it. In regard to the subversion of the family and her disregard of the functions and duties of her sex, nothing can be plainer than if a woman is not a woman by the instincts of her nature and by the natural laws of her sex, all the disabilities that may be heaped upon her by man will not keep her a woman. This chamber has rung with the eloquence of gentlemen who have celebrated the charms, the delicacy, the softness, the superiority, the high and holy mission of women, and yet logically they all insist that women will not fulfill their high and holy mission; that woman will not remain a woman, but insist upon plunging into what is called the foul pool of politics, unless we insist upon continuing this political disability. Gentlemen, one after the other, have arisen here and made eloquent appeals in favor of the loveliness of woman, but have arrived at the most disastrous conclusion. I think it was Shenstone who described the polite debtor who showed his creditors down stairs so gracefully: "He kicked them down stairs with such a sweet grace, that you would think he was handing them out," and so here it has been with gentlemen who oppose this motion. They have pleaded the instincts of man. The instincts of man are pleaded against every amelioration of the laws that have oppressed woman. Those gentlemen who have frothed and foamed at the mouth with compliments to woman, let me remind those gentlemen, that the literature of England was the most lavish in its compliments to women at the time that the laws of England were brutal and disgraceful, by the confession of the law makers. Instinct, sir—instinct is the name under which every prejudice masks itself. Nobody knows better than my honorable friend from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that the long time opposition to the right of the black men in this country has been what was called an instinct. Within a day or two, I have seen an illustration of that, almost in the precincts of this hall, which I believe prefigures the action, if not in this Convention, yet very soon in this State. I was coming from my residence on the north slope of the Capitol hill, and was passing what is called the reservoir around which is a high wall. Upon that wall were two little Irish children playing, and upon the sidewalk at its foot was a little black child of the same age. The two children upon the wall were elated with their position, and the little "image of God in ebony" as old Fuller has it, looked up with his smiling, merry face and said, "lift me up! lift me up!" Sir, these young Irishmen had not been manipulated by the politicians of this country; they had not been taught that there was an instinct which separates the white from the black, and one of them giving his hand to his fellow, reached down and took the hand of the little black child, and instantly he was by the side of the other children on the wall. The motto of the State is "Excelsior," and I see in these little children, who will one day become citizens, the inspiration of the great feeling that underlies that motto, and sir, I am disposed to go beyond my prophecy of the other day, and say that there are many of us living who will see the class, who are privileged in this State now, stoop down to raise every other class to the same height. I ask for the ayes and noes on this motion.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Sir, I am opposed to the amendment of my colleague [Mr. Curtis], and it is because, to use his own illustration, I desire to lift up the women of this State, that I oppose it. I do not believe that by the adoption of this amendment you will secure their moral, their social, or in any way their personal elevation. There are 750,000 adult women in the State of New York, and it is proposed by one fell swoop or blow to intrust these 750,000 women with the grave privilege of the franchise. Sir, I have said once before during this discussion, that we live in a progressive age, and this is but another evidence of the fact. We live in a sort of transcendental age, when men are disposed to break up, disturb and overthrow all those landmarks of society upon which our government and society have rested since its formation. I am unwilling to make this innovation. I see in measures like these, and other measures which meet with more favor in this Convention, a disposition to disturb those solemn and sacred relations of society which have been our security during the past, and which are our only sure hope in the future. The 750,000 women, and that class of colored people to whom the franchise may soon be given, now number seven-twelfths of the entire population of the State of New York, and it is proposed to extend this franchise to this large class of people; not, sir, to secure any natural right, moral right or social right which now belongs to the female sex, but in order to cultivate, or rather to pander to that feeling of excitement and revolution incident to the age in which we live. Sir, this is a great age of unrest, for I can find no other word to express the idea I wish to convey to this Convention; an age in which society is disturbed and States disturbed, and in my judgment he is the best and truest statesman, and the best friend of mankind, who will do all in his power to restore the whole people to those social, political and solid relations under which this government of ours was formed. The ambition on the part of certain women, and of a very few women, propose this great change in our political and social life. Sir, there are in this Convention one hundred and sixty household gods, so to speak representing our homes and firesides. All these are represented by us in our respective heads of families. How many of these homes, how many of our wives and daughters and sisters desire to be intrusted with this right of franchise. In my judgment if you analyze this Convention not one-twentieth part of its members nor one-twentieth part of these 750,000 adult women in the State of New York, probably not twenty thousand, desire that the franchise shall be thus given; and even if it should be granted it would make such a revolution in the politics of this State, as would lead many who now desire to give the franchise to this class of people to repent of the act all the days of their lives. We have been agitating this question and kindred questions year after year, and what is the effect upon society? The gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould] stated what the effect was upon certain women of the State when he said there was twenty years ago in our county jails but one woman in twelve, whereas within the two years past upon an examination of the same State jails, there were four women out of every twelve persons. In the increase of crime, sir, if we will see the truth as it is, and speak the truth as it is, every man must admit that we are passing from bad to worse. But while we are talking of progress here, society was never so much demoralized as it is during this, the year of our Lord, 1867, and it was never more demoralized in the old world, I am sorry to say, than in the new. Every man sees this in the great increase of crime, in the corruption of our public offices—

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Curtis, and declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Beals, Bell, Corning, Curtis, Duganne, Farnum, Field, Folger, Fowler, Graves, Hadley, Hammond, Kinney, Lapham, M. H. Lawrence, Pond, Tucker, Veeder, Wales—19.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Beadle, Beckwith, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebrough, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Kndress, Evarts, Ferry, Flagler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Greeley, Gross, Hand, Harris, Hatch, Hiseock, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Krum, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbur, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Root, Roy, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Verplanck, Wakeman, Weed, Wickham, Williams—125.

Mr. MORRIS—I move that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Morris, and declared carried.

So the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock and resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to strike out of the first line of section one the words "twenty-one," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen." The object of the amendment is, of course, to grant to all persons of the age of eighteen years the right to vote on the same terms as others; in other words, to alter the age at which men shall become entitled to exercise the elective franchise from twenty-one to eighteen. It differs very materially from the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole, which included only those persons born in this State, and who also had always resided in this State, who had attained the age of eighteen years. I will not repeat the arguments I advanced yesterday in favor of allowing that extent Justice Curtis (who dissented from the judgment of the court) concurred that a colored man was not, within the meaning of the Constitution, a citizen of the United States. And, sir, as I understand the law to be, it is entirely well settled that, although the State surrendered to the general government the power over naturalization so that aliens naturalized pursuant to the law of Congress become citizens of the United States, that nevertheless, as to all other classes of persons, those were citizens of the United States only who were citizens of any individual State, and that the test by which you are to determine who are citizens of the United States in the present state of judicial authority is to determine who are citizens of a State. Now, as showing that the gentleman upon the other side [Mr. T. W. Dwight] is mistaken when he claimed that it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a colored man was not a citizen of a State, but that the court did not decide that such a person could not be a citizen of the United States, I beg leave to refer to a few sentences of the prevailing opinion in that case. Judge Tancy says:

"The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. The question before us is, whether the class of persons described in the plea in abatement compose a portion of this people, and are constituent members of this sovereignty. We think they are not, and that they are not included, and were not intended to be included, under the word 'citizens,' in the Constitution, and can therefore claim none of the rights and privileges which that instrument provides for and secures to citizens of the United States."

And, sir, in respect to the other point to which I adverted, that doubt had been entertained, as to the power of Congress to declare and determine who should be citizens of the United States, I beg leave to refer for a moment to the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Curtis in the same case. He goes on to state that the only power granted to Congress is the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and then he says:

"It appears, then, that the only power expressly granted to Congress to legislate concerning citizenship, is confined to the removal of the disabilities of foreign birth."

And it was upon the strength of this opinion that the civil rights bill—which undertook to declare, through an act of Congress, that all persons born upon the soil shall be citizens of the United States—has been questioned, and, as I, stated the other day, one of the objects of the pending amendment to the Constitution is to remove this doubt.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Can I say a word in explanation?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair cannot permit an infraction of the rule without unanimous consent.

Mr. DUGANNE—If there were any one reason more than another which should impel me to vote for this amendment, it would be to set at rest as far as our Constitution can, the "prevailing opinion" which the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] quotes, but which I consider the pestilent heresy, that would put the sovereignty of the State above the sovereignty of the nation. I have nothing to do with the opinions of gentlemen who derive the authority of our Federal Government from any State sovereignty, nor do I believe in the assumption of any State which claims State rights as belonging to it, or any State claiming that right. It was that claim which lay at the bottom of our struggles during the last twenty years. It was that which gave us a war, and it is that which must always be an embroiling subject, unless we can settle it by the acknowledgment, on the part of States, of their dependency, as States, in subordination to the nationality. I, therefore, shall vote for this amendment, because I deem it proper that it should enter into the organic law of our State.

Mr. RATHBUN—By looking at the Constitution of 1846 it will be seen that the term "citizen of the United States" is not to be found there and that the term citizen of the State of New York is there. Can any man conceive of any good reason except to take a shot at the Dred Scott decision, or something else, for putting in words that have never been there before? Is it worth while to be voting upon such a question and to impose unnecessary words upon the Constitution, which have not been there for the last twenty years, and I am told by members near me, have never been there and which never need be, and for this reason, that any man in the State of New York may be made an elector as the Constitution and the laws of the State shall determine. It does not depend at all upon the question, whether he is a citizen of the United States or not. That has nothing to do with it. It depends upon the Constitution of the State alone. Now, if you look at the Western States, it is notorious that they have been in the habit for many years of allowing aliens to vote after a residence of a single year. Why? Because they were citizens, or were regarded so, of the State, and by the Constitution and laws of those States, they were authorized to exercise the elective franchise. If they have a right to make such a provision there, we have a right to do it here. They have done it and we have done it—that is we have allowed men to vote without at all requiring that they should be citizens of the United States. It is a matter wholly immaterial, therefore, in my judgment, and the proposition should not be inserted in the Constitution.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. T. W. Dwight, and it was declared lost.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I offer this amendment: The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN moved to amend the section by striking out the words, "and a citizen for ten days," and inserting in place thereof the following, "and shall then be a citizen."

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I stated on a previous social, or in any way their personal elevation. There are 750,000 adult women in the State of New York, and it is proposed by one fell swoop or blow to intrust these 750,000 women with the grave privilege of the franchise. Sir, I have said once before during this discussion, that we live in a progressive age, and this is but another evidence of the fact. We live in a sort of transcendental age, when men are disposed to break up, disturb and overthrow all those landmarks of society upon which our government and society have rested since its formation. I am unwilling to make this innovation. I see in measures like these, and other measures which meet with more favor in this Convention, a disposition to disturb those solemn and sacred relations of society which have been our security during the past, and which are our only sure hope in the future. The 750,000 women, and that class of colored people to whom the franchise may soon be given, now number seven-twelfths of the entire population of the State of New York, and it is proposed to extend this franchise to this large class of people; not, sir, to secure any natural right, moral right or social right which now belongs to the female sex, but in order to cultivate, or rather to pander to that feeling of excitement and revolution incident to the age in which we live. Sir, this is a great age of unrest, for I can find no other word to express the idea I wish to convey to this Convention; an age in which society is disturbed and States disturbed, and in my judgment he is the best and truest statesman, and the best friend of mankind, who will do all in his power to restore the whole people to those social, political and solid relations under which this government of ours was formed. The ambition on the part of certain women, and of a very few women, propose this great change in our political and social life. Sir, there are in this Convention one hundred and sixty household gods, so to speak representing our homes and firesides. All these are represented by us in our respective heads of families. How many of these homes, how many of our wives and daughters and sisters desire to be intrusted with this right of franchise. In my judgment if you analyze this Convention not one-twentieth part of its members nor one-twentieth part of these 750,000 adult women in the State of New York, probably not twenty thousand, desire that the franchise shall be thus given; and even if it should be granted it would make such a revolution in the politics of this State, as would lead many who now desire to give the franchise to this class of people to repent of the act all the days of their lives. We have been agitating this question and kindred questions year after year, and what is the effect upon society? The gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould] stated what the effect was upon certain women of the State when he said there was twenty years ago in our county jails but one woman in twelve, whereas within the two years past upon an examination of the same State jails, there were four women out of every twelve persons. In the increase of crime, sir, if we will see the truth as it is, and speak the truth as it is, every man must admit that we are passing from bad to worse. But while we are talking of progress here, society was never so much demoralized as it is during this, the year of our Lord, 1867, and it was never more demoralized in the old world, I am sorry to say, than in the new. Every man sees this in the great increase of crime, in the corruption of our public offices—

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Curtis, and declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Beals, Bell, Corning, Curtis, Duganne, Farnum, Field, Folger, Fowler, Graves, Hadley, Hammond, Kinney, Lapham, M. H. Lawrence, Pond, Tucker, Veeder, Wales—19.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Beadle, Beckwith, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Ferry, Flagler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Greeley, Gross, Hand, Harris, Hatch, Hisecock, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Krum, Landon, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbur, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Root, Roy, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Verplanck, Wakeman, Weed, Wickham, Williams—125.

Mr. MORRIS—I move that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Morris, and declared carried.

So the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock and resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to strike out of the first line of section one the words "twenty-one," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen." The object of the amendment is, of course, to grant to all persons of the age of eighteen years the right to vote on the same terms as others; in other words, to alter the age at which men shall become entitled to exercise the elective franchise from twenty-one to eighteen. It differs very materially from the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole, which included only those persons born in this State, and who also had always resided in this State, who had attained the age of eighteen years. I will not repeat the arguments I advanced yesterday in favor of allowing that if no other gentleman wishes to speak in favor of the amendment than the gentleman who has obtained the floor [Mr. Kernan], and he yields to me, I have the right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not put that construction on the rule.

Mr. KERNAN—I do not know, Mr. President, what may happen in the future, but I shall greatly regret on account of the welfare of this republic, founded on the Constitution of the United States, if the time ever comes when the people of the several States shall deem it wise to surrender to the federal government the right to declare who shall exercise the right of suffrage in each of those States. When that time shall have arrived, I submit that we will have entirely changed the form of our government, and will have progressed very far toward making a consolidated government rather than the one which has worked so well. But, sir, as yet no such thing is claimed to have occurred. It is conceded that to-day, at least, under the Constitution of the United States, as it now is, the people of this State have this right, and that Congress has no authority to declare who shall be electors in the State of New York, or any other State. That being true as constitutional law, and this body being here as delegates of the people of this State to frame a Constitution to be submitted to them, declaring who shall exercise the elective suffrage in this State, it seems to me that we fail in our duty if, in view of the agitation here and elsewhere, we do not at least affirm that the people who sent us here have that right, and that we do not propose to abdicate it. I say this not only in reference to what is agitated elsewhere, but in reference to a resolution which, to my surprise, I find printed and upon our tables, although it has not been called up for consideration. One of the delegates of the people of this State, sitting in this body [Mr. Wales], under a Constitution and laws which vest in the people of the State, the trust of regulating the right of suffrage, has put before us a resolution which reads in this wise, is a portion of its preamble:

"WHEREAS, The Executive and the Legislature of each State are, for certain purposes, the agents of the United States."

When and how did the Legislature of the State of New York, intrusted by the people of the State with the power to make laws, and being amenable to them, become an agent of the Federal government. If it be an agent of the Federal government, it is bound to do the will of that government, instead of being the law-making power of the people of this State, subject to the Constitution of the United States. Under that extraordinary preamble, a resolution is proposed which instructs the Committee on the Right of Suffrage of this body to inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by a constitutional provision, the Legislature of the State to accept a system of suffrage which shall be prescribed and promulgated by the Federal government. When and how did this Convention derive authority to invite the Federal government to take from the people of this State their clear and exclusive power to regulate the exercise of the elective franchise in this State. This power is essential to the good government of the State. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of the people of the State reserved to them by the Federal Constitution, and it is essential to the perpetuity of the union of the States as it was formed. I trust we do not propose to surrender this power [Here the gavel fell].

Mr. E. BROOKS—I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. CARPENTER—I move that the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], be referred to the Committee on the Preamble, and the Bill of Rights.

SEVERAL MEMBERS—No! No!

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] insist on his motion to refer?

Mr. CARPENTER—I withdraw it.

A sufficient number seconding the call for the ayes and noes, they were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Comstock.

The name of Mr. Barker was called.

Mr. BARKER—I desire to be excused from voting. I do not regard the preamble or the resolution as necessary to protect our rights or define them. Nor do I think it necessary for this Convention to instruct the Senate of the United States as to how and wherein they shall amend the Federal Constitution. But when that proposition comes to this State to be ratified, I shall be found as I now am, advocating the unqualified right of the people of this State to define who are its electors. I withdraw my excuse and vote no.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman cannot withdraw his excuse without the consent of the Convention. Is there any objection. There being no objection, the gentleman will be recorded in the negative.

The amendment of Mr. Comstock, was declared lost by the following vote.

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Garvin, Gross, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Jarvis, Kernan, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Artell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Wickham, Williams—106.

Mr. CASSIDY—I offer the amendment which I offered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows :

Add to the section the following :

This section shall not apply to any man of color who shall not be an actual resident of this State, at the time when this Constitution shall go into operation, unless such man of color, at the time when he may offer his vote, shall have been for five years immediately preceding, an actual resident of the State.

Mr. CASSIDY—The object of this amendment is not to require of any of the present colored population of the State of New York, but the future colored population, the same conditions that are exacted of foreign born citizens. I desire to say nothing in advocacy of this amendment for it speaks for itself. Whatever of equity or propriety there is in it will be apparent on the mere face of the statement. I desire to say, however, on this occasion, in reference to my vote on the question of suffrage for women, that it was controlled by the consideration, that under the ruling of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the question was not in a shape to be submitted separately. Whenever those who have charge of that measure shall place it in a shape where it may be submitted to the popular vote, I shall redeem the pledge I made in the early part of the debates on this subject, and vote for such submission. I call for the ayes and noes on my amendment.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Cassidy, and the Secretary proceeded with the call.

The name of Mr. Masten was called.

Mr. MASTEN—Mr. President, as this amendment is to affect the colored gentleman, it is within the agreement I made with Judge Ketchum, and I ask to be excused from voting.

The amendment of Mr. Cassidy was lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Corning, Garvin, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Jarvis, Kernan, Larremore, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy Nelson, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, A. D. Russell, Schell, Tappen, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham—38.

W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Harris, Hitchcock, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—34.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I offer this amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

In the first line insert after the word "citizen," the words "of the United States," so that it will read, "every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been for ten days a citizen," etc.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—The reason why I offer this amendment is that I think it is desirable that we should fix in this Constitution the fact that citizens of the United States are entitled to suffrage. Now the mode, as I understand it, in which, practically, a person becomes a citizen of a State is through citizenship of the United States, and that may be either through birth or naturalization. The only objection I have heard urged to the insertion of this clause is a dictum in the Dred Scott case, in which it has been thought that there was something said by the court adverse to the colored man having a citizenship of the United States. But, if I remember that decision, the precise point decided was that the colored man was not a citizen of a State, and that was the only point that was really decided in the case. Scott brought an action against Sandford, in the United States Court, in the District of Missouri, for his freedom, on the ground that he could sue in that court, being a citizen of one State suing a citizen of another State, in accordance with the well known provision in the United States Constitution. The court decided that he could not sue on that ground for he was not a citizen of a State. There is no decision that the colored man cannot be a citizen of the United States, nor is there likely to be one, because Chief Justice Taney pronounced that decision on the theory that the colored man was degraded. But that has been changed by the war, and no court will in my opinion ever decide that a colored man is not a citizen of the United States. If I understand the provisions of the civil rights bill, it was one of its objects to establish the citizenship of the negro. I am unwilling that the Convention by striking out the clause reported by the committee shall indorse the idea that a colored man cannot be a citizen of the United States. More than this, I desire that this clause be inserted, as we thereby recognize our paramount allegiance to the United States, and repudiate the doctrine of State rights. For these reasons I am desirous that this amendment should prevail.

Mr. ANDREWS—As I understand the decision in the Dred Scott case, referred to by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], it was decided by the court, and in that decision to some

United States. Now, you remember, Mr. President that when I spoke first on the question of suffrage, I brought to the attention of this Convention a law of the State of New York, passed in 1825, and not yet repealed, that a person of foreign birth, having declared his intentions, was permitted to hold real estate, was held subject to military duty, though he was not by that act permitted to vote. Such a person is now, under the laws of the State of New York, for aught I know to the contrary, still liable to military duty, and the great reason has been urged for the extension of the elective franchise to a certain class of the population is that they have been held subject to military duty. Therefore I can see no objection whatever on constitutional reasons to the passage of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gross] with this proviso in it. And as I do not desire to detain the Convention save to rectify the ground of the opinion on which I gave my vote, I shall not ask for the ayes and noes but will be content with a count.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Conger, and was declared lost.

Mr. WALES—I offer the following amendment to the first section and move that it be inserted at the end of the tenth line:

"Provided that every woman of the age of twenty-one years who shall possess the other qualifications of male citizens, and whose name shall appear upon the assessment roll, and who shall have paid a tax on personal property or on real estate, shall have the same right to vote, that male citizens have." [Laughter.]

Mr. WALES—I do not ask, Mr. President, that this amendment be adopted, because suffrage is or is not a natural right, nor because it is or is not a conventional privilege; but I do ask the members of this Convention to place it in the Constitution as an act of justice to those for whose benefit I offer it; and in honor of the fathers who, in the primal days of the republic, nay, before the foundations of the government were cemented by the blood of its martyrs, made it a fundamental principle of American statesmanship, that there should be no taxation without representation.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I must say, Mr. President, I have been not a little pressed with these propositions to allow women to vote, and to allow the nice boys of eighteen years of age also to vote. But, I feel somewhat relieved by the proposition of the gentleman from Sullivan [Mr. Wales], for if I understand the amendment, it removes one of my main objections to women voting. It provides that when they come to possess all the "other qualifications of men." [Laughter] That is to say, when they become men they shall vote. When that change comes about, my objection to their voting will cease. I desire to say further, that the only objection that I have to their voting, is that they are women. I object because they are women and for no other reason. As women, they are intrusted by nature with providing for the renewing of the race of men; they are called upon to take charge, not only of the tender infant, from the time of its birth, but they are by necessity intrusted with its development before that time and under circumstances which require in the very nature of things a separation from, a relief from, as many cares as it is possible to withdraw from them. And, sir, it is impossible for scientific men, for naturalists, or for any class of learned people to determine what a terrible effect would be produced upon the rising generation of this country, if we were to add to the burdens, responsibilities, and the distractions of women's life the burden and the distractions, and the responsibilities of voting. Now, sir, if the amendment removes the difference between man and woman, I am decidedly in favor of it. [Laughter].

Mr. GRAVES—I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry whether that part of the amendment offered, was not intended to have the woman's residence the same length of time as that of a man's, and does it not mean that, when it says "possess the other qualifications of the men;" was not that the intention of the mover?

Mr. WALES—The intention was to have the woman's qualification to vote the same as those of the male citizen, and I did so express myself, notwithstanding the merriment that was made. I will, however, withdraw the word "other."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Wales and was declared lost.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the second section as follows:

"SEC. 2. No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer or promise to pay, contribute, or offer or promise to contribute to another to be paid or used, any money, or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm, before such inspectors, that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid, nor offered or promised to pay, contributed, nor offered or promised to contribute to others, to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing, as a compensation or reward for a vote, to be given at such election. Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage idiots, lunatics, and all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery, or of any infamous crime, and all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States, unless pardoned by the President of the United States or the Governor of the State of New York. Laws shall be passed for punishing and for depriving of the right of suffrage, and excluding on challenge, persons who shall pay or contribute, or agree to pay or contribute, or who shall receive or agree to receive any money, property or valuable thing to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket, or who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election. The payment of the expenses of printing, of the circulation of papers and documents previous to any election, are excepted from the operation of this section.

Mr. GRANT—I offer the following amendment to the second section:

Any person convicted of receiving a bribe to influence his action, or failure to act, in the discharge of his duties as member of the Legislature or of any other public office or trust to which he has been elected or appointed, shall not be allowed to vote in this State, unless pardoned by the Governor, with the consent of the Senate by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GRANT—I offer this amendment at the end of the first section. It is designed, mainly, as will be discovered from its terms, to reach cases of members of the Legislature who have been bribed. Sir, bribery in legislative action is one of the greatest and growing evils of which men of all parties constantly complain. That members of our Legislature are bribed, not singly, but by working majorities, is no longer disputed, and by the provisions of this report as amended so far, the whole subject of bribery is submitted to the action of the Legislature. The first point I make is that it is folly on the part of this Convention to submit the subject of bribery in the Legislature to legislative action. When the Legislature itself is corrupt do we expect it to punish its own corruption? Why, sir, we might as well submit it to the scholars in a school, who are constantly transgressing a rule or law of the school to provide and inflict punishment for the violation of that law; we might as well submit the question of punishment of misdemeanors to classes of the community who are alleged to be constantly guilty of those misdemeanors. Again, sir, the amendment I offer proposes to disfranchise the men only who receive the bribe. Sir, so long as we shall depend upon loose legislative provisions to put an end to bribery in the Legislature whereby the man who offers the bribe and the man who receives it are to be considered alike guilty, and neither compellable witnesses to testify against his partner in guilt, under the rule by which he need not furnish evidence for his own conviction, the bribery acts will remain a nullity on every statute book. So long as our laws provide that the man who offers the bribe shall be in the same category with the man who receives it, so long you put an end to the chances for judicial conviction, you put an end to even a prospect that you may ever reach the man who receives the bribe. Self protection locks the mouth of each as to all judicial inquiry against the other. Sir, I believe it to be necessary that we should turn loose one of the guilty pair, that we may use him against the other, and I select from the two, for disfranchisement the one most guilty, I select the one whose honor and trust, and oath have all been violated. He is the member who has taken the office, he is the man in whom we have reposed a trust. He is the man whose vicious act constitutes the injury, the wrong, and the guilt of which we complain. Now, sir, I think that we should carefully consider this amendment and adopt it as a part of our fundamental law, so that the members of the Legislature may read from their Red Books not that they may pass laws punishing bribery, but that members of the Legislature may be convicted of bribery by allowing the man who pays the bribe to testify against them on the trial without criminating himself, and that if proved guilty, they shall be forever disfranchised, and we will do more than has yet been done to eradicate corruption from the legislative branch of the government.

The five minutes having expired the gavel fell. The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Grant, and it was declared lost.

Mr. FIELD—I offer the following amendment: "After the end of the twelfth line insert—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that that line has been stricken out.

Mr. FIELD—The twelfth line of the third section—

The PRESIDENT—We have not yet reached the third section.

Mr. DWIGHT—Before completing the third section, I move to reconsider the vote by which the part of the first section was stricken out.

The PRESIDENT—That can only be made by unanimous consent.

Objection being made, the motion was laid on the table.

Mr. CHURCH—I offer the following amendment:

Amend the section by inserting after the word "people," in the seventh and eighth lines, the words "and upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people."

Mr. CHURCH—This section prescribes the qualifications of voters for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people. It seems to me proper that the same qualifications should exist upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people. There are a great many questions that the Legislature may submit—questions provided in the Constitution, such as questions of debt, and others. Unless we insert this provision it will be in the power of the Legislature to prescribe qualifications for electors for that particular election, and they may enlarge the elective franchise or restrict it at their pleasure. It seems to me we should have the same rule applied to the election of all officers, and to all other questions on which the people will vote.

Mr. FOLGER—It seems to me that the case suggested by the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] may very well occur; that some Legislature, desirous of procuring the indorsement by the people of, for instance, a debt proposed to be incurred, may provide that the question shall be submitted to the consideration of the people differently than the Constitution provides for the election of officers, and in my judgment it is proper to guard against that. But I should wish before voting for it to restrict the application of the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] to such questions as are provided for in the Constitution itself to be submitted, and therefore I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the words "are required by the provisions of this Constitution to."

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I wish to remark that any article which provides for submitting a question of debt should provide that such questions should be submitted to the legal voters of the State. The Constitution does not now authorize the Legislature when it authorizes it to submit such questions, to submit to any other than the legal voters of the State. It seems to me the amendment is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. COMSTOCK—I wish to ask the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] to accept a slight amendment by adding the words "of the State at large" so as to avoid the question of municipal charters.

Mr. CHURCH—Certainly; I did not think there was any doubt under my amendment. If there is I accept it.

Mr. SMITH—I do not quite understand the object of the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and before voting should like to do so. I suppose all questions to be submitted to the people relate to the administration of the affairs of the State, and we are now determining a rule as to who shall participate in the government of the State. Why should one class vote upon questions submitted by a provision in the Constitution, and another class vote on questions submitted by act of the Legislature? I do not quite understand the reason of the distinction.

Mr. FOLGER—If I may be allowed to answer, I will, though perhaps the reason may not be a good one. It is just the same reason I stated in reply to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] when he offered his amendment in the Committee of the Whole, to wit: that I considered the Legislature, in passing an enabling act for the calling of a Convention to revise the Constitution, has a right to include in the electoral body persons who are not authorized by the Constitution to be amended to vote for delegates. I wish especially to except that power from the restrictions proposed to be inserted in this Constitution by the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], although perhaps it is not necessary.

Mr. SMITH—I asked the question for information, and will say that the reason given for it is the reason why I shall vote against it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Folger and it was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. Church.

The name of Mr. Folger was called.

Mr. FOLGER—I ask to be excused from voting. Without the amendment which I proposed as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], I conceive it to be mischievous and dangerous; with this explanation I ask to withdraw my request to be excused, and if allowed to vote I will vote no.

There being no objection, Mr. Folger was recorded in the negative.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I ask to be excused on the ground that I have not heard this question discussed and do not understand its bearings.

The question was put on granting the request of Mr. M. I. Townsend and it was declared carried.

The amendment of Mr. Church was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Bergen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Ferry, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Gross, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Jarvis, Kernan, Larremore, Law, A. B. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merritt, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, President, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Seymour, Smith, Tappen, Tucker, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham, Young—70.

Noes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Ballard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bickford, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Cooke, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Field, Folger, Fowler, Francia, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Merrill, Merwin, Opdyke, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—61.

Mr. ALVORD—I move a reconsideration of the vote just had in the passage of the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church].

Mr. CONGER—I object.

The PRESIDENT—The objection being made, the motion lies over under the rule.

Mr. GRANT—I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

"No person shall become a voter in this State after 1872, unless he can read the Constitution of the State of New York, except such person be prevented from reading by physical disability only; Provided, however, That no person who shall have the right to vote under the existing Constitution at any time up to and including 1872, shall thereafter be deprived of the right to vote by reason of disability to read.

Mr. GRANT—It will be discovered from the provisions of this amendment that I do not propose to disfranchise any man who is now a voter nor any man who may become a voter up to the year 1873 a period of more than five years from this time. Sir, with the opportunities for education that we now have in this State, with our common school system, and with our thousands of school-houses that are found on the hill-sides and in the valleys throughout the entire domain of our State, open for the education of every person, I cannot believe that after 1872, more than five years from this time, with this prospective provision in the Constitution from which all will hear and know that ability to read is made a necessary qualification before they can vote, there will be within the State of New York, twenty-five native born citizens who cannot read the Constitution of the State. Again, sir, we are to look at the effect of this amendment upon foreign born citizens. Let us take two examples. An ignorant Chinaman, is thrown upon our shores, without any knowledge of our institutions. Whether in a republic or monarchy, whether voting for Governor of a State or postmaster he does not know. He cannot read. He has neither ability nor desire to improve. He has no admiration for our government, yet we make him a voter. Again, an charge of his duties as member of the Legislature or of any other public office or trust to which he has been elected or appointed, shall not be allowed to vote in this State, unless pardoned by the Governor, with the consent of the Senate by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GRANT—I offer this amendment at the end of the first section. It is designed, mainly, as will be discovered from its terms, to reach cases of members of the Legislature who have been bribed. Sir, bribery in legislative action is one of the greatest and growing evils of which men of all parties constantly complain. That members of our Legislature are bribed, not singly, but by working majorities, is no longer disputed, and by the provisions of this report as amended so far, the whole subject of bribery is submitted to the action of the Legislature. The first point I make is that it is folly on the part of this Convention to submit the subject of bribery in the Legislature to legislative action. When the Legislature itself is corrupt do we expect it to punish its own corruption? Why, sir, we might as well submit it to the scholars in a school, who are constantly transgressing a rule or law of the school to provide and inflict punishment for the violation of that law; we might as well submit the question of punishment of misdemeanors to classes of the community who are alleged to be constantly guilty of those misdemeanors. Again, sir, the amendment I offer proposes to disfranchise the men only who receive the bribe. Sir, so long as we shall depend upon loose legislative provisions to put an end to bribery in the Legislature whereby the man who offers the bribe and the man who receives it are to be considered alike guilty, and neither compellable witnesses to testify against his partner in guilt, under the rule by which he need not furnish evidence for his own conviction, the bribery acts will remain a nullity on every statute book. So long as our laws provide that the man who offers the bribe shall be in the same category with the man who receives it, so long you put an end to the chances for judicial conviction, you put an end to even a prospect that you may ever reach the man who receives the bribe. Self protection locks the mouth of each as to all judicial inquiry against the other. Sir, I believe it to be necessary that we should turn loose one of the guilty pair, that we may use him against the other, and I select from the two, for disfranchisement the one most guilty, I select the one whose honor and trust, and oath have all been violated. He is the member who has taken the office, he is the man in whom we have reposed a trust. He is the man whose vicious act constitutes the injury, the wrong, and the guilt of which we complain. Now, sir, I think that we should carefully consider this amendment and adopt it as a part of our fundamental law, so that the members of the Legislature may read from their Red Books not that they may pass laws punishing bribery, but that members of the Legislature may be convicted of bribery by allowing the man who pays the bribe to testify against them on the trial without criminating himself, and that if proved guilty, they shall be forever disfranchised, and we will do more than has yet been done to eradicate corruption from the legislative branch of the government.

The five minutes having expired the gavel fell. The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Grant, and it was declared lost.

Mr. FIELD—I offer the following amendment: "After the end of the twelfth line insert—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that that line has been stricken out.

Mr. FIELD—The twelfth line of the third section—

The PRESIDENT—We have not yet reached the third section.

Mr. DWIGHT—Before completing the third section, I move to reconsider the vote by which the part of the first section was stricken out.

The PRESIDENT—That can only be made by unanimous consent.

Objection being made, the motion was laid on the table.

Mr. CHURCH—I offer the following amendment:

Amend the section by inserting after the word "people," in the seventh and eighth lines, the words "and upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people."

Mr. CHURCH—This section prescribes the qualifications of voters for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elected by the people. It seems to me proper that the same qualifications should exist upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people. There are a great many questions that the Legislature may submit—questions provided in the Constitution, such as questions of debt, and others. Unless we insert this provision it will be in the power of the Legislature to prescribe qualifications for electors for that particular election, and they may enlarge the elective franchise or restrict it at their pleasure. It seems to me we should have the same rule applied to the election of all officers, and to all other questions on which the people will vote.

Mr. FOLGER—It seems to me that the case suggested by the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] may very well occur; that some Legislature, desirous of procuring the indorsement by the people of, for instance, a debt proposed to be incurred, may provide that the question shall be submitted to the consideration of the people differently than the Constitution provides for the election of officers, and in my judgment it is proper to guard against that. But I should wish before voting for it to restrict the application of the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] to such questions as are provided for in the Constitution itself to be submitted, and therefore I move to amend the amendment as follows:

Strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the words "are required by the provisions of this Constitution to."

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I wish to remark that any article which provides for submitting a question of debt should provide that such questions should be submitted to the legal voters of the State. The Constitution does not now authorize the Legislature when it authorizes it to submit such questions, to submit to any other than the

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I would like to ask the gentleman if political offices are included in his suggestion?

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to suggest the propriety of dropping the word "engagement." It is a very general and hardly a legally defined word. Let the whole rest upon the word "promise." It seems to cover the point, and is a very proper amendment, I think. I do not understand what the gentleman means by the word "engagement."

Mr. ANDREWS—I think there is no objection to withdrawing that word, and I will consent to do so.

Mr. PRINDLE—I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] whether his amendment would cover the case of a man running for office, where the candidate makes a promise to act in a particular manner, if the party will vote for him.

Mr. ANDREWS—I so understand it.

Mr. PRINDLE—It strikes me that it embraces too much, because if a person should be running for office, and a member of his own party should be distrustful of him, the candidate might promise to him that he would act with his party or vote upon any question in a certain manner. I am not positive that this amendment would include that case, but it strikes me there is danger it would.

The question was then put on the amendment proposed by Mr. Andrews, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I offer the following amendment: After the words "United States" in line 17 of section 2, add, "or in defrauding the government of this State or of the United States during the late rebellion."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Verplanck and it was declared carried.

Mr. KRUM—I offer the following amendment: "After the word 'expect,' first line, insert the words 'or offer.' Also after the word 'received,' 8th line, insert the words, 'has not offered.' My object in inserting the words 'or offer,' in the first line, after the word 'expect,' and the words 'has not offered,' in the eighth line, after the word 'received,' are as follows: As the section now stands it reads like this: "No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer or promise to pay, etc." The word "offer" in the second line applies to the person who has paid, and not to the person who has received, and I desire to make the provision apply to the person who has offered to receive as well as to the person who has offered to sell his vote. I desire to make the offer to sell a ground of challenge, equally with the offering to buy. I propose to put both upon the same footing. I propose that the oath a person offering to buy shall take, shall also cover the case of a person offering to sell by the words I propose to insert.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Krum, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HARRIS—I move to strike out from lines, 15, 16, 17, 18, the provision in relation to the disqualification—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that as long as it is desired to perfect the section, the motion to strike out cannot be entertained.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I renew the motion to adjourn. The question was put on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks, and it was declared carried. So the Convention stood adjourned.

FRIDAY, July 26, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. RUFUS W. CLARK.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. HADLEY—I ask for leave of absence until Tuesday evening next. I make the request on the ground of illness in my family.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. MERWIN—I ask for leave of absence for three days on account of business engagements of long standing.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. RATHBUN—It has become necessary that I should be absent. I therefore ask leave of absence until Monday.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. SILVESTER—I wish to ask for leave of absence until next Wednesday.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I will ask for leave of absence until Tuesday morning.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. ARCHER—I ask for leave of absence for Mr. Larremore for five days on account of sickness in his family.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. AXTELL—I ask for leave of absence for my colleague Mr. Cheritree, until Tuesday next.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. SHERMAN—I ask for leave of absence until Monday next.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. E. BROOKS—There are a considerable minority of this Convention asking for leave of absence for several days. I therefore move that when this Convention adjourns it adjourn to meet again on Monday evening next.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that the motion cannot be entertained under the rule of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—Objection being made the motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I submit it is a privileged question.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair recognizes the question of an immediate adjournment as privileged.

Mr. BALLARD—I ask for leave of absence until Wednesday morning next.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. SEAVER—I ask for leave of absence until Tuesday morning next.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. OPDYKE—With a view to enable the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] to offer his resolution, I move that the order of business be laid on the table temporarily.

The PRESIDENT—That would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. FOLGER—I would ask leave of absence for myself and colleague, Mr. McDonald, until Monday evening.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. SMITH—I ask for leave of absence until Tuesday morning.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I ask for leave of absence until Tuesday morning.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. ALVORD—I feel compelled, sir, now to object to granting any further leave of absence unless a vote shall be taken, and gentlemen give their reasons why they desire these leaves of absence. I am entirely willing to grant a leave of absence to gentlemen who stand up here and desire it, not for their own personal convenience, but from some absolute necessity, not otherwise.

Mr. MATTICE—I desire a leave of absence until Monday evening next, and I will state that I have immediate business to transact to-morrow which will render my attending the Convention an utter impossibility.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. KERNAN—I ask for leave of absence for Mr. Sheldon, of Dutchess, on account of sickness in his family, until Monday evening.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. OPDYKE—I rise to a point of order, that I made a motion to suspend the order of business and to temporarily lay it on the table; that motion ought to be taken up and acted upon.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Opdyke and it was declared carried.

Mr. E. BROOKS—That motion having prevailed, I move that when the Convention adjourns it adjourns to meet on Monday evening next.

The PRESIDENT—I would say that motion cannot be entertained without the consent of the Convention. There being no objection the motion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] will be entertained.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Then I move that when this Convention adjourns this evening it adjourns to meet on Monday evening at seven and one-half o'clock.

Mr. MILLER—I move to amend that "when this Convention adjourns to-morrow it adjourns to meet on Monday evening at seven o'clock."

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Miller and it was declared lost.

Mr. GREELEY—I move to amend "providing the article on suffrage shall in the meantime be disposed of."

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. GREELEY—I call for a division.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] did not ask for a division until after the Chair had announced the result.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. GREELEY called for the ayes and noes on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. DUGANNE—I desire to be excused from voting upon this question of adjournment, on the ground that I have not yet had an opportunity to consult with the chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, in order to learn how I should be permitted to vote, and I will briefly explain my reasons for asking to be excused. After the final vote was taken last night I passed up this aisle quietly, and was accosted coarsely and profanely—

Mr. TAPPEN—I rise to a point of order—

Mr. DUGANNE—I am explaining—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair thinks the explanation is scarcely parliamentary.

Mr. DUGANNE—Well, then, sir, I was accosted in a gentlemanly manner by an honorable member on this floor in these words—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman what transpired out of the Convention can hardly be alluded to in this chamber.

Mr. DUGANNE—I was merely explaining—

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. DUGANNE—I wish to ask permission to withdraw my request, to be excused from voting and to vote aye.

Mr. GREELEY—I object to his voting.

The PRESIDENT—It is for the Convention to say whether the gentleman shall vote or not.

The question was put on granting permission to Mr. Duganne to vote, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SEAVER—I ask to be excused from voting, for the reason that I have already obtained leave of absence. If I vote I would have to vote no.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Seaver to vote, and it was declared lost.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call of the roll, on the motion of Mr. Brooks, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Astell, Baker, Ballard, Barnard, Bell, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Cassidy, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Daly, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Eddy, Evarts, Ferry, Field, Francis, Fuller, Garvin, Goodrich, Gross, Hadley, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Jarvis, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Merwin, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Pond, President, Prindle, Rathbun, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—88.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, Case, Champlain, Clark, Comstock, Conger, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Flagler, Fowler, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Potter, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Spencer, Van Campen, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—50.

Mr. ALVORD—Under the order of resolutions I desire to offer to the Convention a resolution that seems to me must strike every one as eminently proper at this time, and I trust there can be no objection entertained to it. It will largely facilitate the business of the Convention in the right direction.

Resolved, That the President appoint a committee of five, whose duty it shall be, from time to time, to arrange the form and phraseology of each article as the same shall be agreed to by the Convention, and report to the Convention, but in so arranging the form and phraseology of the article they shall not alter the substance or meaning of the same as adopted by the Convention.

Mr. CONGER—I would suggest to the honorable gentleman from Onondaga that this is quite unnecessary, as we will have soon a committee of revision on every article in the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands this resolution to call for such a committee.

Mr. ALVORD—It calls for a committee of arrangement on each of the different articles, as each article may be proposed from time to time. It does not interfere at all with the other committees.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Alvord and it was declared adopted.

The PRESIDENT announced the special order, being the report of the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, as amended in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I call up for consideration the resolution offered by me on Saturday last.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that it has already announced the special order of business.

Mr. VEEDER—Was not the special order laid on the table?

The PRESIDENT—It was, for a specific purpose. The Chair understands that purpose to be accomplished. The question now is upon the pending section of the report.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I offer the following amendment: I propose to strike out these words, "And all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States unless pardoned by the President of the United States or the Governor of the State of New York." It proposes to disqualify a class of persons from voting that are not disqualified under the Constitution as it now is. It is in fact, therefore, imposing upon them a punishment enacted after the offense has taken place and is ex post facto in effect. I think it objectionable upon that ground and I also think it impolitic, as it must drive from this State all who have been engaged in this rebellion, no matter how penitent they may be, for the crime they have committed. I believe too, that it would be very impolitic to condemn a great class of persons, and to deprive them of the right of suffrage who have not been convicted of an offense. The previous portion of the section covers the case of all who have been convicted of crime, including of course treason; but if you are to deprive of the right of suffrage those who have been supposed to be guilty but have not been convicted, it would be always an open question at the polls whether the person had been voluntarily engaged or not, and thus you change the inspectors of election into a tribunal to decide upon this most important question, the guilt of a person in regard to an offense punishable with death. It is also objectionable for the reason that appears from the amendment first offered by the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. E. P. Brooks]. They are to be excluded from voting unless pardoned by the President of the United States or Governor of the State of New York. Now the offense alleged is rebellion against the United States. It is certain that the Governor of the State of New York has no power over an offense against the general government. It is not proposed to disqualify those who have been engaged or may be engaged in rebellion against the State of New York; that is a felony of itself, provided for by our statutes and punishable as a capital offense. Of an offense of that kind, this Convention might take cognizance, but certainly not of anything relating to offenses against the general government. For these reasons, believing that it is wrong in principle as well as unpolitic to adopt the proposed new provisions, I move that these words be stricken out.

Mr. COOKE—Two days ago the distinguished gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] when this question was before the Committee of the Whole informed the committee that the United States supreme court had decided against the right of States to exclude from the elective franchise any citizen for disloyalty, and warned the committee against adopting this provision lest it should be found in conflict with the highest judicial authority in the land. Yesterday the same gentleman proposed to this Convention a preamble which asserted the undoubted right of the people of this State, by virtue of their sovereignty, to establish and regulate for themselves the elective franchise, without interference or control of any other authority whatever. Now, I would like to know on which side the gentleman stands to-day, whether he stands upon the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States or upon his preamble, which denies all authority in the Federal courts or the Federal government in the matter. I, sir, for one, am not in favor of punishing offenses by disfranchising offenders, particularly for light offenses. I think it should be resorted to only in extreme cases. I notice on the part of gentlemen all around me, a good deal of sensitiveness on this subject of the rebels, and the manner in which they should be treated. Gentlemen inquire, is this persecution never to end? And yet these same gentlemen voted in a body in favor of disfranchising the speculator who had defrauded the government to the amount of a dollar.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I voted against it.

Mr. COOKE—The gentleman says he voted against that proposition. That is only an exception which proves the rule. Why is this so? Is it so much worse for a man to have wrongfully pocketed a few paltry dollars that belonged to the government, than to have sought by armed treason to destroy the government? Is the former class of offenders to be utterly disfranchised and

Mr. E. BROOKS—That motion having prevailed, I move that when the Convention adjourns it adjourns to meet on Monday evening next.

Mr. ALVORD—Under the order of resolutions I desire to offer to the Convention a resolution the rebellion, I supposed that, in his mind and in the mind of the Convention, the fact of desertion would be considered a crime as worthy of pursuit and punishment by our constitutional provisions, as any other offense that he reprobated by his amendment; and when the sense of the Convention, in which I concur, had refused to sanction this first general proscription, and the second clause, having affinity to it, in respect to fugitives from a draft; I assumed that this last clause—which in great part, if operative at all, must be supposed to be operative upon persons who hitherto have not been parts of our population or subject to our laws, and have committed, therefore, no crime within our State—would have been rejected; and when, by a small majority, it was announced by the count as carried I confess I was surprised. Mr. President, if there be in our own population any considerable number of persons who, without the excuses of popular agitation and fervor which obtained in the States that have been carried into actual rebellion, have given voluntary aid to the rebellion they certainly long before this should have been prosecuted, if not for treason, at least under some of the minor offenses punishable by the laws of the United States. I must consider therefore, that in the mind of the Convention and in the mind of the people of this State, if this clause shall be adopted, with the purpose of its having a practical operation, it must be intended, to reach, either for the purpose of repelling from our community or for the purpose of disfranchising, if they should settle among us, emigrants from other States, who there have been engaged in the rebellion. I do not, Mr. President, consider that it is fairly within the province of proscription,—even if proscription should be rightfully indulged in towards classes without prosecution, trial and conviction—thus to proscribe citizens of other States, who while such citizens shall have committed offenses of any complexion whatever. Least of all, Mr. President, am I disposed to place myself on the record as having refused to disfranchise deserters in our own population, and cowardly fugitives from the duty of soldiers in our own population, and having limited my proscription for faults in times passed by, to those who shall become members of this community, by removing from those States where alike the occasion and commission of the proscribed offense occurred.

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. FERRY—I rise to inquire whether it would be in order to make a motion to amend this proposition?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that two amendments are already pending.

Mr. FIELD—I would inquire whether it is in order to offer on amendment?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that two amendments are already pending.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. A. J. Parker, and it was declared adopted by the following vote.

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Baker, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Lawrence, Lee, McDonald, Merrill, Miller, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Wales—35.

Mr. TAPPEN—I offer the following amendment to the second section:

Strike out the words "right of suffrage," wherever they occur, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "elective franchise."

Mr. TAPPEN—I shall not detain the Convention by remarks on my particular amendment. There has been abundance of discussion in this Convention as to the right of suffrage as distinguished from the elective franchise. Gentlemen have gone into the question of natural rights and of individual rights, but no word of mine would affect the subject in any manner. I think it is right in substance, and right in spirit, and in accordance with the privilege we are now disposing of.

Mr. MERRILL—With the same "regard for the landmarks of the past" which the gentleman who has offered this amendment [Mr. Tappen] manifested when he made substantially the same motion early in this discussion, I cannot favor the proposition. When the titles of the committees were read the gentleman moved to substitute "the elective franchise" for "the right of suffrage," and referred to the action of the Convention of 1846 as sustaining his choice of phraseology. But reference to that "landmark" shows precisely the opposite use of words; and, reverencing "the fathers," I must prefer the term they uniformly employed, namely: "the right of suffrage."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Tappen, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VEEDER—I move to amend the second section as follows:

Strike out all after the words "New York" in line eighteen, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Laws shall be passed for punishing and for depriving of the right of suffrage, persons who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election."

Mr. VEEDER—The committee will observe the words I propose to strike out are so broad in held not fit to participate in the administration of the government, while the latter class are received into full fellowship and allowed to come here and participate in measures calculated for the protection and for the good of the government? My friend from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] asserted the day before yesterday that this was a party question. All I have to say is, I thank God that I belong to no party that discriminates in favor of traitors. I shall vote against striking out.

Mr. HARRIS—Is not that the same amendment that was ruled out of order last night?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is not aware that it is.

Mr. HARRIS—It is precisely the same, word for word.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair desires to state upon examination and reflection, it is satisfied it was wrong in its ruling last evening, and will endeavor to correct its error. The gentleman moved last night to amend to strike out a particular paragraph. It did not understand at the time it was a paragraph and ruled that it was out of order while amendments were being made to perfect the section.

Mr. GOULD—What is it that the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker] requires us to do, and in what position does he propose to place this Convention? The other day, sir, after due deliberation and ample discussion, this Convention decided that treason was odious and that traitors should take the back seats. Now, sir, the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker] deliberately rises and asks us to reverse that decision and decide that treason is not odious; that traitors shall not take the back seats. Now, sir, if the Convention decide in accordance with his wishes, the muse of history will drop a tear upon those words—would to God that those tears might blot them out forever. But, sir, that decision will remain as a standing memorial through all time, and I wish to ask gentleman whether they desire thus to record themselves and place themselves and the Convention in this position. Why, sir, two young men, neighbors of mine, with the most sincere and patriotic motives, entered into the army of the United States during the late rebellion. They were captured, sir, and placed in the prison-pen at Salisbury. I saw them when they came back, and heard their stories. They came back living skeletons. They had been fed upon a quart of rice water per day for a week together. Their intellects were hardly sufficient to tell their stories, and yet they did tell us. While in that starving pen the rebels would man the walls and fling meat and other provisions, just so in order to reach them, the prisoners had to go over the dead lines, as they were called, and the instant they did so, men stood with leveled muskets and shot them dead.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair desires to ask the unanimous permission of the Convention, inasmuch as by its ruling the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] has been deprived from speaking, that he may be heard upon this question.

Mr. HARRIS—I am grateful to the Chair, and also to the Convention for its courtesy. I had desired to present this same motion last evening and to make a few remarks upon it. I believe, sir, that this clause ought to be stricken out. I think that we should confine ourselves in the amendments we propose to the Constitution, to such amendments as are called for, and shown to be necessary by experience, and that will have some practical effect. I do not think that it is necessary for this Convention to put into the Constitution a record of its patriotism, or to require the Legislature to institute an inquisition to determine the loyalty or disloyalty of those who may ask to vote. Sir, the effect of this will be one or the other of two things. No man has yet been convicted of treason, and no man expects that any one will be convicted of it, in respect to this rebellion. Therefore, if it means to disfranchise a person who has been convicted, of course it will be a dead letter. Then the only other construction to be given to it is that the officers who are charged with the registry shall inquire into the loyalty or disloyalty of a voter who applies to be registered. That would be a most dangerous thing for the inspectors of election in every election to institute an inquisition as to what course the voter has pursued during the rebellion, and if it is to have any practical effect it is that. It seems to me that would be dangerous, and very objectionable. I hope we shall let the dead bury the dead, and we shall not undertake to perpetuate during the next twenty years this inquisition in relation to the course citizens may have taken in reference to the rebellion.

Mr. BICKFORD—I rise to make an inquiry. It is whether if this amendment prevails, it carries with it the amendment adopted yesterday, on the motion of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], to disfranchise those who committed frauds against the government.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is unable to answer the question.

Mr. CONGER—I wish to suggest to the Chair, having seen the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] rise for the first time to participate in the discussion of this Convention, that inasmuch as he obtained a hearing by special request for the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], that he will not include him in the number who have spoken.

The PRESIDENT—Four gentlemen had spoken before the gentleman from Albany.

Mr. CONGER—I think not. I think he was the fourth. I will ask the unanimous consent of the Convention that the gentleman from New York be allowed to speak.

The question was put on granting permission to Mr. Evarts to speak, and it was granted.

Mr. EVARTS—I feel greatly embarrassed in accepting the courtesy thus extended to me, for there certainly seems to be no good reason for it. Yet I feel disposed to say what I would have said when this amendment was before voted upon if I had supposed there was the least chance that the Convention would adopt it. When the learned and gallant member from Clinton [Mr. Artell] proposed a series of predicaments which should exclude from the right of suffrage in this State, to wit: deserters, fugitives from conscription, and those who had been voluntarily engaged in

Mr. VEEDER—The Chair will recollect that my motion is to strike out.

Mr. BARKER—I am very glad the gentleman introduced this amendment, although I shall vote against it, for I think it will tend to bring to the attention of this Convention how unnecessary it is to embrace in the Constitution merely legislative provisions. A Constitution, as I understand it, is an instrument that creates a government, and that government makes, expounds, and executes the law. Now, I apprehend there is no gentleman in this Convention but believes that the Legislature, which we authorize, can define the crime of perjury just as they should define and make the laws which we are intending to incorporate in this section. There are a hundred lawyers in this Convention, and yet there are not enough of them to expound and explain the section of the Constitution which we are at this hour making. It is confusion worse confounded, and as soon as we begin to vote down these senseless, unmeaning amendments we will be where we can begin to arrive at an understanding, and get clear and concise language in the Constitution which we are making.

The PRESIDENT.—The Chair took the decision of the Secretary on that matter.

Mr. VEEDER—I now move to strike out lines twenty-six, twenty-seven and twenty-eight, which are connected, but if the other is to prevail, the provision inserted on the motion of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson], perhaps it is better to have it in, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw so far as it extends to those three last lines.

Mr. Veeder's motion was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. SPENCER—For the purpose of allowing an amendment to be offered which will cover the whole ground in this section, I withdraw the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—If the Secretary will be kind enough to read the amendment which I have offered, I desire to say one word in regard to it.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after line twelve and insert, "The Legislature shall have power by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this section and to preserve and secure the purity and freedom of elections."

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—It will be seen, I think, that this amendment accomplishes the object of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer], in authorizing the Legislature, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article. Such legislation appropriate to that point would be the passage of a law making the violation of an oath prescribed by that section, perjury. It also accomplishes very fully the design of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] in the amendment offered by him, and which is now incorporated in this section, but which will be struck out by this amendment, to wit, to authorize the Legislature, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the preceding provisions of this section; and I think that no gentleman has failed to observe, who has examined this section as a whole, that the language employed in the latter part of the section by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten] is precisely identical with that employed by the gentleman from Schoenectady [Mr. Landon], which forms the first part of this section. That is to say, you have first put into the Constitution a law forbidding, and denouncing a penalty for certain offenses against the franchise, and then you have gone on and authorized the Legislature to pass laws to precisely the same effect. My amendment, it will be observed, leaves in the section a constitutional provision for challenge at the polls, for any act of bribery either in giving or receiving, offering to give or offering to receive, etc., and it then authorizes the Legislature, by appropriate legislation, to enforce all these important provisions to secure the purity of the elective franchise, so far as legislation can accomplish it.

Mr. FOLGER—The debate has shown so much as this, that there is a unanimous desire to reach and redress the evils complained of here, and it has also shown another thing, that there is a distrust of the Legislature, which should have the power to enact laws to secure that end. I think that distrust is unfounded. I think if we look back to the requirements of the Constitution of 1846, and the legislation succeeding it, that we shall find that a Legislature never refused to pass laws to secure the purity of elections, going as far as they had constitutional power to do. Now, then, let us compromise on this ground. Let us place some enactments which shall be clear and lucid in the Constitution, and leave it to the coming Legislature to enact laws to carry it out; not only leave it to them, but make it their imperative duty at the next session after the Constitution to pass such laws. And I have prepared a section which I propose to offer at the proper time, and which is as follows:

SEC. 2. The Legislature at the session thereof next after the adoption of this Constitution shall enact laws excluding from the right of suffrage idiots, lunatics, and all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime; and for depriving every person who shall make, or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, of the right to vote at such election. It shall also, at the same session, and from time to time, enact laws for preserving the purity of elections, and for depriving, upon challenge at the polls, every person who shall violate such laws of the right to vote at an election.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and I will withdraw the amendment offered by me in order to allow the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to offer his.

Mr. FOLGER—I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the second section:

SEC. 2. The Legislature, at the session thereof next after the adoption of this Constitution, shall enact laws excluding from the right of suffrage idiots, lunatics, and all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime; and for depriving every person who shall make, or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, of the right to vote at such election. It shall also, at the same session, and from time to time, enact laws for preserving the purity of their character and in their import, that it will practically exclude any political organization from holding any meeting, or having even a general committee. The committee will observe the words are "and excluding on challenge persons who shall pay or contribute, or agree to pay or contribute, or who shall receive or agree to receive any money or valuable thing to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket." Thus, any public meeting called, speakers invited, expenses incurred for music, or for any other purpose of getting together a company for the purposes of an election, the objects of which are undoubtedly for the advancement of some particular ticket or candidate, are entirely precluded from any such purpose whatever; and I submit the balance of the section is quite broad enough, that precedes this proposition. I propose to cover all possible cases of corruption at the ballot box, thus leaving in the provision which excludes parties from voting that have made any bet or wager.

Mr. NELSON—I desire to amend the section, or offer a substitute for it, so that it will read as follows:

"Laws shall be passed for punishing and for depriving of the right of suffrage, or excluding on challenge, persons who shall corruptly pay or contribute or thus agree to pay or contribute, or who shall corruptly receive or thus agree to receive any money, property or valuable thing to promote the election of any candidate or ticket, or who shall make or be interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election. The payment of the expenses of printing, of the circulation of papers and documents previous to any election, are excepted from the operation of this section."

Mr. NELSON—I offer this amendment, and it seems to come in connection with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder], for this reason. In the statute of the State the purity of elections, to secure the provision is as follows: "Whoever shall pay or contribute any money to promote the election of any particular person or ticket." Our statute provision says, "promote the election of any person or ticket." The provision of this instrument is "to promote the election of any particular candidate or ticket," so that you will see the only change between our statute and the provision in this instrument is the change of the word "candidate" for "person." Under the provision of the statute, as it existed in the State, the Supreme Court in the case of Jackson v. Walker, which was a case of allowing a log cabin to stand in a certain place until after election, the agreement was like this; "You allow this log cabin to remain until the day after election for the use of the whig party, and if not taken down I will be personally responsible to pay you one thousand dollars." In a suit brought upon that contract, the question arose whether it came within the prohibition of the statute. "Was it a contract," the court asked, "to promote the election of any person or ticket?" Judge Bronson, in delivering the opinion, although the man lost his money, although it was not a corrupt purpose, used this language:

"The statute, after forbidding several things, declares that money shall not be contributed 'for any other purpose intended to promote an election of any particular person or ticket.' It requires no argument to prove that this money was to be paid to promote the election of particular persons, to wit, General Harrison and the whig candidates for Congress, etc.; and a particular ticket, to wit, the electoral ticket in favor of General Harrison for President, and the ticket for whig members of Congress, etc. The parties intended to accomplish the very thing which the statute declares to be illegal. No one can wink so hard as not to see it." * * * "It is said that the statute only forbids the contribution of money for corrupt purposes. But the statute says nothing about corruption. It declares that the thing shall not be done. With two specified exceptions, it provides that money 'intended to promote an election' shall not be contributed. The Legislature evidently thought that the most effectual way 'to preserve the purity of elections,' was to keep them free from the contaminating influence of money."

In the court of errors, in 7th Hill, the judgment in this case was affirmed by a tie vote of the court.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Nelson, and, on a division, it was declared carried by a vote of sixty-one to thirty.

Mr. SPENCER—I offer the following amendment to the substitute, by adding at the end of line twelve the following: "And every person who shall willfully and corruptly swear or affirm falsely on such challenge, shall be deemed guilty of willful and corrupt perjury." I am opposed to including in the Constitution of the State a code of criminal law. But, if it is to be there, I think it necessary and essential that it should be so complete that it may be effectual. We have, as this section now stands, provided that the elector who is challenged for certain causes, shall be required to swear; but it is not provided by the same section, or elsewhere in the Constitution, so that any penalty may be affixed to false swearing, nor is there any statute law of the State which would punish false swearing in that particular, the only provision being, upon this subject, that wherever an oath may be required by any officer, judicial, executive, or administrative, a false oath taken before such officer shall be deemed perjury. It is to be doubted, at least, whether this provision of the Constitution can be so construed that it can be said that the officer is authorized to require an oath, but it is only to be taken by the elector as a condition for the allowance of his vote.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I quite agree with the views of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and I desire to say it is my purpose, when it shall be in order, and I have attempted for some time to get the floor for that purpose, to offer the following amendment, which I shall read as a part of my remarks, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer].

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that his amendment is now admissible.

Mr. BARKER—I rise to a question of order, that two amendments are now pending.

The PRESIDENT—The motion of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] has been disposed of.

Mr. VEEDER—The Chair will recollect that my motion is to strike out.

Mr. BARKER—I am very glad the gentleman introduced this amendment, although I shall vote against it, for I think it will tend to bring to the attention of this Convention how unnecessary it is to embrace in the Constitution merely legislative provisions. A Constitution, as I understand it, is an instrument that creates a government, and that government makes, expounds, and executes the law. Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and I will withdraw the amendment offered by me in order to allow the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to offer his.

Mr. FOLGER—I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the second section:

SEC. 2. The Legislature, at the session thereof next after the adoption of this Constitution, shall enact laws excluding from the right of suffrage idiots, lunatics, and all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime; and for depriving every person who shall make, or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, of the right to vote at such election. It shall also, at the same session, and from time to time, enact laws for preserving the purity of elections, and for depriving, upon challenge at the polls, every person who shall violate such laws, of the right to vote at an election.

The PRESIDENT—If there is no objection, the amendment will be received as a substitute for the entire second section.

Mr. MURPHY—My objection to this amendment is to the latter part of it. I concur in the views which have been expressed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], that we may so far leave to the Legislature the enactment of laws as provided in the first part of his proposition. But the latter part does not restrict the Legislature to pass laws upon such specific points as we have thought worthy of consideration in that respect, or as requiring some enactment, constitutional in its character. He provides generally in the latter part of his amendment, that the Legislature may pass laws for securing the purity of the elective franchise. Where and how far may the Legislature go under such a general provision as that? Is it not our duty to point out in what particulars this franchise shall be protected, and to require the Legislature to pass laws for that purpose, not for the general purpose of securing the purity of the elective franchise? Under that they may disfranchise everybody. Securing the purity of the elective franchise will enable them to pass any kind of law they may deem necessary for that purpose, which may act very harshly and not as intended by this Convention. Let us see specifically in what way they may pass laws for the purpose of securing the elective franchise, and not leave it to them to judge what shall be deemed necessary by them to secure that franchise. I move, therefore, to strike out the last paragraph of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PAIGE—The objection I propose to this subject is, that it strikes out from this article the right of challenging a voter at the polls. In my judgment, there are but two effective remedies for this crying evil of bribery and corruption at elections. One is the right of challenging a voter for offering to purchase a vote, and putting him upon his oath, and the other is to impose the oath upon the successful candidate, that he has not used money for any corrupt purpose to secure his election. Sir, the result of it is to strike out of the Constitution where it should be, that provision in the original report of the Committee on Suffrage of allowing a challenge to the voter upon the ground of having sold or purchased a vote.

Mr. SMITH—I trust the amendment will not prevail. This corruption has reached a point where the people absolutely demand that there shall be a remedy provided in the organic law. They are not willing to turn this matter over to the Legislature. They lack confidence in the Legislature. They believe that for years back the Legislature of this State has been corrupt. They are not willing to trust men to enact laws against bribery and corruption, who have themselves secured their places by corrupt practices. I agree fully with the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] that this provision, which enables you to challenge a man at the polls, and there put him upon his oath, is one of the most efficient provisions that can be made to meet the exigency. It is self-executing.

It is not subject to be defeated by the inefficiency or corruption of courts. It does not fail from a lack of evidence, delay, or want of the necessary machinery to secure the conviction of a party. But the question is decided at once, upon the oath of the challenged party, and before he is permitted to vote. I would not, by any means, lose this provision. On the contrary, I am in favor of adding to it another provision, making it the duty of the Legislature to enact such laws as may become necessary, not only to carry out this provision, but in other respects to purify our elections. I beg that we may not turn this whole matter over to the Legislature; for, by so doing, I greatly fear that we should fail to obtain what is absolutely necessary to secure the purity of our elections, and the stability of our government.

Mr. RUMSEY—Is an amendment in order now?

The PRESIDENT—An amendment is in order.

Mr. RUMSEY—Then, sir, I propose the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Folger.

Sec. 2. No person who shall receive, expect, or offer to receive, pay, or offer or promise to pay, contribute, or offer or promise to contribute to another to be paid or used, any money, or other valuable thing, or make any promise to influence or as a compensation or reward for a vote to be given or to be withheld at an election, shall vote at such election; and upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm, before such inspectors, that he has not received, has not offered, does not expect to receive, has not paid, nor offered or promised to pay, contributed, nor offered or promised to contribute to others, to be paid or used, any money or other valuable thing, nor made any promise to influence or as a compensation or reward for a vote, to be given or to be withheld at such election.

Mr. RUMSEY—I do it for the purpose of having retained in the Constitution, as it shall pass from our hands, this provision, that allows us to challenge for the causes mentioned in the first part of the provision of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon]. But I desire to have inserted in that provision, suggested by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], that the officer elected shall swear before he takes his office that he has done nothing to violate the provisions of that section. I will vote for it by way of perfecting the amendment, and leave it to the Legislature to pass such other laws as shall be necessary to guard against other evils which may arise under it, and which we do not now take cognizance of or cannot call to our minds.

Mr. GREELEY—I only rise to ask the mover to allow the first twelve lines of this section to stand as they are.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state what he understands to be the pending proposition. He understands this substitute was received by consent of the Convention for section two. He will receive any amendments.

Mr. GREELEY—It was received, but not adopted.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands that. The pending amendment is the proposition proposed by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey].

Mr. CHESEBRO — Is another amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT — The Chair will inform the gentleman that another amendment is not in order, as two are now pending.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Rumsey, and it was declared carried.

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following amendment:

Insert at the end of line twelve the words, "or for a nomination of himself or any other candidate at such election."

Mr. DUGANNE — I am more impressed every day that I live with the necessity of providing that corruption shall be intimidated or repressed in the matter of nominations as well as in the matter of elections. It is thence, generally, that evil springs. In a county where a nomination is equivalent to an election, the venal and the corrupt man has only to see to it in the caucus that his nomination is successful, and if he can succeed in influencing by any means that nomination, an election is sure. I wish to strike at this generic evil—I do not wish to leave it to a challenge at the polls, of the voters. I wish to strike at the corruption which makes the candidate, which sets him before the people, and which commands the people to vote for him blindfolded —

Mr. MILLER — I rise to a point of order; that this amendment just offered, refers to a part of the section which we have just stricken out.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair will inform the gentleman he is not in order.

Mr. KERNAN — I submit we can hardly recognize in the Constitution, caucuses and nominating conventions.

Mr. DUGANNE — I ask the gentleman if we cannot recognize corruption in the Constitution?

Mr. WEED — By a statute of the State, any corruption in convention, or nominating caucuses, or anything of that kind is punished now, I think, and made a felony, or pretty near felony.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Duganne, and it was declared lost.

Mr. CHESEBRO — I had drawn for the purpose of submitting to the Convention a proposition substantially like the one offered by my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Folger] embracing essentially his amendment in section two of this report, and I will send it to the Secretary to be read. I move it as a substitute for section two as proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

The PRESIDENT — It cannot be received until the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] is disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS — I move the adoption of the following amendment as an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Folger:

Strike out the words "idiots, lunatics and," in the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. MERRILL — I would inquire whether it does not require a motion to reconsider that, it having been acted upon?

The PRESIDENT — The Chair understands not. The Chair understands that the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], was received by consent of the Convention, and now stands in all respects as section 2 originally stood. The proposition of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] is in order.

Mr. HARRIS — As I have already said, I desire that this Convention should address itself to such amendments of the Constitution as experience has developed to be necessary or wise. No man has ever known an idiot to vote. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] spoke the other day about a lunatic having attempted to vote.

Mr. GREELEY — "Having voted" —

Mr. HARRIS — "Having voted," he says: but I apprehend that that is a single case. To my mind this provision is belittling the Constitution in attempting to exclude idiots and lunatics from voting, when no man has any apprehension that they will ever do any damage in that respect. It seems to me to be an idle thing, to require the Legislature to go on and inquire as to the sanity of every individual. Every man who is familiar with legal proceedings knows that it is a pretty difficult thing to determine whether a man is insane or not, and I have sometimes thought there were very few men whose minds were in all respects entirely sound. To determine whether a man is a lunatic or not seems to be very objectionable. I hope those words will be stricken out. They are unnecessary. No man supposes the purity of elections will be secured or promoted by retaining these words in the Constitution.

Mr. McDONALD — In regard to the propriety of excluding insane persons, there can be no doubt. The only objection the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] makes is this, that it is impossible to tell who are idiots and who lunatics in some cases. We admit that. In my own town they have a lunatic there, whom one party makes vote one year and another party another year just as they happen to get possession of him, and there is no possibility of ruling him out. I live in a town where the election is pretty close; if it should be turned by one vote, then the lunatic would elect the whole ticket. I do not believe in that. Let us declare our position plainly; let us not be afraid to say lunatics and idiots should not vote as we believe, and leave it to the Legislature to find out the mode of determination. I might suggest that it be determined in this way—that no person be excluded unless the board of registry unanimously exclude him, and they would not exclude any one about whom there was any doubt. It seems to me this provision should be retained, and although it would not be, yet in some cases it may turn out that lunatics and idiots may elect the whole ticket when it is elected by a small majority, and without this provision there is no mode of prohibiting lunatics or idiots from voting.

Mr. ROBERTSON — I would be glad to know where any authority is found for an idiot or lunatic to exercise any civil right or perform any act for the benefit or injury of others recognizable by law; and when the law has been changed by which every inspector of an election in this State has always had the power to reject the vote of any animal destitute of reason, although he presents himself before him in the form of a man, for the purpose of offering a vote, is there any inability of the law of this State to exclude idiots and lunatics, and will inspectors of election be so derelict to their duty as to receive the vote of a human being in that condition who would undertake to exercise this right of suffrage by doing a mere imitative act, which might be performed as well by well trained animals as by man, in full possession of his faculties. To be a citizen a human being must be possessed of reason. The mere human form does not give citizenship. The right of political citizenship is suspended during the temporary absence of reason; the mere possibility of a return of reason, joined to the ties of humanity, constitutes the only ground for including idiots and lunatics in the body politic. It is absurd to imagine a public officer elected by the votes (so called) of the inmates of a mad-house. The very word "vote" implies a rational selection, and I see no reason for excluding those destitute of reason from voting by a constitutional provision.

Mr. McDONALD—I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Robertson] to the first section; "every male citizen of the age of twenty-one." I suppose that would include an idiot.

Mr. CONGER—I will draw the attention of the Convention very briefly to what is proposed in the fourth section which follows, which is precisely what is in the fourth section of the Constitution as it now stands; "Laws shall be adopted for ascertaining by proper proofs, the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage." The gentleman who inserted this clause in regard to idiots and lunatics merely anticipated what will follow in the subsequent clause. In regard to this whole matter permit me to say to the Convention that this process of legislation has been sufficiently extended. When the Convention will have the opportunity of looking at the amendment proposed, by my honorable friend from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro], I think they will be satisfied that every constitutional provision will be compassed by his amendment, and then we will have substantially the second section of the Constitution of 1846, as was proposed to be amended by the Legislature of 1853, with all the suitable safeguards enabling this Convention to provide for the exclusion of improper votes by the right of challenge.

The question was put on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Harris, and, on a division, it was declared carried, by a vote of 76 to 29.

Mr. DUGANNE—Is an amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT—Amendments are now in order.

Mr. DUGANNE—I offer the following amendment, to the amendment of Mr. Folger, by adding thereto the following:

"And the Legislature may provide by law that records shall be kept under proper restrictions, by the police authorities of districts or cities, of all persons known by them to be engaged in illicit pursuits hostile to the community; and persons so engaged and being so recorded, under due provisions of law, shall be excluded from registration as voters."

Mr. DUGANNE—I do not wish to argue this. I sufficiently stated my reasons for offering such an amendment some days ago, but I wish to know the sense of the Convention on what I regard a very important reform, and I respectfully ask the ayes and noes.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were refused.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I was about to state that I had drawn an amendment which I believed comprised all that is necessary for section two of this article. I agree with the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] in the remarks he has made in regard to the proceedings of this Convention for the last few days, that we have been engaged here in a system of legislation and have nearly forgotten the duty which is imposed upon us as members of this Convention. If we are to frame a fundamental law it must be in view of the fact that the Legislature, is to carry out by laws, the Constitution which we shall establish.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Chesebro, as follows:

Sec. 2. Laws shall be passed, excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, larceny or of any infamous crime, and for depriving every person who shall by any act, directly or indirectly impair or corrupt the purity or freedom of any election, or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, from the right to vote at such election; and every such offense shall be made a ground of challenge at such election.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Chesebro] that unless there be further propositions to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] it will now be considered. The Secretary informs the Chair that the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has not yet been passed upon.

The question was then put on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Murphy, and, on a division, it was declared adopted, by a vote of 52 to 43.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will first state the proposition as he understands it. It is to substitute the amendment which was now read for the substitute of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], as amended.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—If it be in order, I will move to reconsider the last vote taken.

Objection being made, the motion was laid on the table.

Mr. CHESEBRO—Now, on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] to the substitute offered by my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Folger], it will be seen that our propositions are substantially alike, and I cannot from my recollection of the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] see much difference between them except that mine is a little more brief. I am opposed to any addition to this proposition I have made, for the reason that has been so well suggested on this floor this morning, of an opposition to anything like legislation. I think we have had enough discussion now to convince the Convention that time has been wasted. We are here to frame a fundamental law, but not to enact laws for the punishment of crime; but the proposition of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey], which has received an affirmative vote, as an amendment to the proposition of my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Folger] is, in my judgment, nothing more than legislation. If gentlemen will turn to the statute book they will see that nearly all the offenses which are charged to have been committed against the purity of elections, are already provided for in the statute book, and that many of the propositions which we have been discussing for many days are now classed as misdemeanors and felonies. My proposition leaves this whole matter of punishment of offenses against the purity of elections, to the Legislature—where it legitimately belongs.

Mr. GREELEY—I wish to inquire if this is another proposition to strike out the first twelve lines.

The PRESIDENT—This is a proposition as an entire substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. GREELEY—If it is to strike out the first twelve lines, I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. MASTEN—I desire to say a few words on this subject. I find myself somewhat responsible for the confusion in which this second section seems to be. In the Committee of the Whole I maintained the doctrine which has been maintained here this morning, that we should not put a code of laws in the Constitution, but only confer certain general powers in clear and explicit language. I offered a substitute for the whole section substantially like the one now offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro]; I discovered that it would not be carried in Committee of the Whole, and I therefore had to add it to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Landon]. If this amendment should not be carried, if I can get an opportunity, I will move to strike out from the section this matter I myself put in and perfect the section by adding a sentence.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I hope this substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro] may not be adopted. I do not agree with him at all, in the opinion he expresses, that we therefore waste our time in matters of legislation. On the other hand, I think we are making the best possible use of our time, and that we have made great progress yesterday and to-day in framing an article on this subject which perhaps may be acceptable to the people. At all events, we are wasting no time. Now, the effect of adopting this substitute will be that we will lose the first twelve lines of this section as it now stands.

Mr. CHESEBRO—Cannot the Legislature as well punish for this crime as for any other?

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I will not say they have not the power to punish, but I am doubtful whether they will do so. I am not one of those who are willing to trust to the Legislature. They have had the power heretofore but failed to use it, and I am not willing to trust them in the future. I am confident that no provision can be drawn either by the Convention or the Legislature more full or more precise or more explicit than the first twelve lines of this second section, and I trust we shall not abandon it, for I think the whole merit of the section rests on that. I hope that this substitute may be voted down, and I only regret that the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] was adopted, as it strikes out another important portion.

Mr. SEYMOUR—It seems to be conceded on all hands, that something is necessary to be done either under the law or the Constitution, to stay that flood of corruption which every one deplors. It has been the effort of this Convention to prepare and modify in this second section, provisions that we hope and believe will do it. Now, sir, I am not prepared to say that these provisions are in the exact language that would be best; I am not prepared to say but that they might be improved, and I am willing to wait and permit that committee which has been resolved upon this morning, to examine and if possible improve them without losing the benefit of their efficiency. I believe we need something in the Constitution, and I am unwilling to trust any longer to the wisdom, at least, of the Legislature to provide the remedy. We have seen this stream of corruption rolling through this State at every general election, for a period of more than ten or twenty years, and we have now confessedly, upon the statute book, no provision that can in the least restrain it. I shall regret if this Convention shall strike out or shall pass any substitute for these twelve lines, that embody so much toward preserving the purity of the elections in this State; and I hope, sir, that this repeated effort to accomplish that result will fail.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put upon the substitute offered by Mr. Chesebro, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Chesebro, Church, Conger, Hardenburgh, Masten, Mattice, More, Spencer, Verplanck—9.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Ballard, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Comstock, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Daly, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Livingston, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Morris, Murphy, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, President, Prindle, Prosser, Reynolds, Rogers, Rolfe, Root, Roy, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Cott, Veeder, Wakeman, Wales, Wickham, Williams, Young—106.

Mr. AXTELL—I offer the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

The Legislature may pass laws excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who have deserted or may desert from the military or naval service of the United States in time of war, all persons who have left or may leave this State in time of war for the purpose of avoiding conscription into the military service of the United States, and all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States.

Mr. AXTELL—I have not offered this amendment in behalf of the bleeding eagle and I trust that "the quality of mercy" will not be badly "strained" if it shall be adopted. This whimpering about "mercy" to men who have forfeited every claim to citizenship, is not inspired by the spirit of true mercy, and its only practical effect is to degrade citizenship. It says that there is no difference between a manly performance of the duties of citizenship and a cowardly shrinking away from them.

Mr. MURPHY—I rise to a point of order. This Convention has by a vote disposed substantially of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. AXTELL—There is this difference. This provides that the Legislature may pass laws; the other amendment which was offered in Committee of the Whole required that the Legislature shall pass laws.

The PRESIDENT—If there be that difference, the Chair will recognize the distinction.

Mr. AXTELL—No people can afford thus to degrade the elective franchise. No people can afford to strike such a blow at the pride of citizenship. The very life of this nation depends upon cherishing in the minds of the people a sense of the sacredness and dignity of the duties and privileges of citizenship. There must be cultivated that public virtue, that sensibility of principle, that "chastity of honor"—as some one has called it—which feels a stain like a wound; that which is the unbought grace of life, the nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise, the real defense of the nation—that spirit which led out our triumphant heroes to their baptism of blood and their death of honor, that which marshaled our mighty hosts, who were ready to do and to die that the nation might live. To refuse to incorporate this amendment is to strike a blow at this spirit of honor. It is in effect to say that there is no difference, as to the privileges of citizenship, between the brave man and the coward—between the man who keeps his oath and the man who has perjured his soul. Sir, the military is perhaps the most sacred of oaths. Every soldier has sworn an oath as solemn as that registered in Heaven by that immortal man, whose words are emblazoned in our sight, an oath to defend the nation. The deserter, with this oath hot upon his lips, deserted his colors, perjured his soul, and left his comrades to be overborne for the lack of that service he was sworn to perform. This amendment is entirely practicable. Men can be challenged and thus excluded from suffrage, as in the law under which this Convention is assembled. Some gentlemen are greatly alarmed at that terrible Latin phrase, ex post facto. That was the phrase that was hurled at us all the way through the rebellion. It was ex post facto to do this and to do that. With some classes it is always ex post facto to do right. I suppose the compelling of Robert E. Lee to surrender was ex post facto, and unconstitutional. It was done, however.

Mr. GRANT—When this subject was under consideration by an amendment proposed by the gallant Colonel from Clinton [Mr. Axtell]—

Mr. VERPLANCK—I rise to a question of order—that this is a change in the phraseology simply between the words "may" and "shall." Now suppose this amendment shall be voted down, and I should rise and propose that the Legislature, upon the application of ten citizens, might do the same thing, would that be a different proposition? And then somebody else might propose it on some other application; that of some distant State, for instance, and thus it might be brought up interminably. Now, I think the duty of the gentleman was to have moved to change the word when it was under consideration in the committee, and I think, therefore, it is out of order at this time.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair must respectfully differ from the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck]. He thinks the amendment is different. One is permissive and the other is imperative.

Mr. BARKER—I rise to a point of order. This has been once voted down, and the introduction of the word "shall" in place of the word "may" does not change the meaning. There is no power above the Legislature which can compel them to act, consequently there is no difference in legal effect between the words "shall" and "may."

The PRESIDENT—The Chair having received the amendment will allow it to take the usual course, unless there is an appeal. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BAKER—No, sir.

Mr. GRANT—The gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Hardenburgh], said it came with an ill grace from one whose constituents are anti-renters to speak in favor of this amendment. I was sorry to hear that fling made at so large a number of voters of this State; gentlemen who are citizens not only of Delaware but of Schoharie, Albany, Rensselaer and Columbia county, comprising a large portion of the electors of this State, who are men of integrity and as honorable, loyal, patriotic and brave, as any within its borders.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair must call the gentleman to order. He must discuss the pending question.

Mr. GRANT—This amendment proposes, not that deserters shall be disfranchised, not that rebels shall be disfranchised, but it places the whole power to disfranchise them or any class of them, in the hands of the Legislature, giving the Legislature the power to select, in their discretion, the classes of deserters the more guilty and dangerous, for instance—men who have received thousand dollar bounties, and jumped them ten times; men who have taken the oath of allegiance to the government of the United States in the State of New York, and then deserted their State and the army of the United States, and joined the rebellion. It provides that the Legislature may disfranchise that class. It allows the Legislature to disfranchise the men, if you please, who starved our prisoners, who added to the crime of treason that of the murder of prisoners of war by slow, consuming famine; leaving with the Legislature the entire power to disfranchise and restore, as justice shall dictate. Can there be a doubt but that we should at least leave authority with the Legislature to disfranchise the more guilty classes of these offenders against the government? I go farther, and say, that the man who voluntarily engaged in rebellion, and stabbed at the life of our nation—the man who violated his oath of enlistment, deserted his ranks and fled to the enemy—should be absolutely expelled from any voice in our government, and forever disfranchised. And I ask gentlemen on this floor to recollect that as representatives of the people of a State, the great masses of whom are loyal, brave and true; we are making a record on this subject, a record to which the friends and enemies of our free government are looking with interest and anxiety, a record from which the supporters and defenders of the Union, and posterity who follow, may read the estimate in which we hold cowardice, desertion and treason, the estimate in which we hold integrity, loyalty and bravery. And to recollect that we are, this day, in recommending fundamental law to a people fresh from the stern lessons and realities of war, declaring to the world our judgment as to whether treason to republican government and desertion from its armies are qualities to be rewarded with citizenship and privileges of franchise. The question comes home to us, shall we clothe the traitor, the deserter, and the unrepentant rebel, with the same political power as the patriots and defenders of the Union? I implore gentlemen to reflect upon this subject, for our votes must answer this grave question.

At this point the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. EVARTS—It is entirely competent, Mr. President, for the Legislature under the suffrage clause as it at present stands before the Convention, to make either of the offenses alluded to by the gallant gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] a crime, and to carry as one of the consequences of that crime the loss of suffrage. If there is any principle that this Convention has adopted and will adhere to, it is this, that there shall be no double opportunities of exclusion from the franchise, one under the head of crimes, the other under the name of mere proscription. I shall oppose all efforts to provide for exclusion from the franchise for any less definite, less determinate blemishes of character or conduct, than such as shall be designated as crimes, and ascertained and punished as such, with the single exception of the constitutional ground of challenge at an election for bribery or corruption in reference to that election which stands, in the opinion of the Convention, and in my own, as a proper subject of constitutional provision. When we have determined that the Legislature may affix as a penalty for crime, exclusion from the suffrage, we have given to the Legislature power to designate and punish as crime desertion of the forces of the United States in time of war, evasion of the draft in time of war, and giving voluntary aid to rebellion in time of war.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. Axtell.

Mr. AXTELL called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number not seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Axtell and it was declared lost.

Mr. MASTEN—I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that section No. 2 is not now before the Convention, having been struck out and the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] substituted in its place.

Mr. SPENCER—I now renew my motion to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 12 the following:

"And every person who shall willfully and corruptly swear or affirm on such challenge, shall be deemed guilty of willful and corrupt perjury."

Mr. PRINDLE—I move to insert the word "falsely" so that it shall read "falsely swear."

Mr. SPENCER—I accept the amendment;

Mr. ROBERTSON—I would like to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] by inserting the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "election," in the fifth line, insert the words "or employ any threat or other means to prevent or influence any one from voting at such election;" and after the word "election," in line twelve, insert the words "and has not employed any threat or other means to prevent or influence any one from voting at such election."

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Robertson, and it was declared lost.

Mr. PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Spencer.

Mr. KRUM—I oppose that amendment, Mr. President, because it is entirely unnecessary. It has been decided over and over again in the books that, under the statute quoted by the gentleman, every oath or affirmation falsely taken in a proceeding, when such oath or affirmation is required by law, is perjury; and when the oath or affirmation shall be taken as required by this section, or falsely taken, that oath or affirmation is perjury without anything further being necessary.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Spencer, and was declared lost.

Mr. MASTEN—I offer the following amendment. I propose to offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the end of line 12, and insert

the following: Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery or any infamous crime, to prevent illegal voting, and to secure the purity and freedom of elections. All challenges shall be determined on the oath of the person challenged.

Mr. MASTEN—All I shall attempt to do on this occasion is to show to the Convention how this section will then read, and if gentlemen will run their eyes down to the end of line 12, they will then find that what is proposed to be added to this: "Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who may have been convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime, and to prevent illegal voting, and to secure the purity and freedom of elections; all challenges shall be determined on the oath of the person challenged;" and that will constitute, if adopted, the whole of section 2, unless further amended.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I desire to offer a further amendment which I think the gentleman will accept.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

"But all such laws shall be general and uniform in their requirements throughout the State."

Mr. MASTEN—I will accept that.

Mr. SMITH—I would like to say a single word, though, perhaps, it is unnecessary. I heartily approve of this amendment. As the section stands without it, the only provision it contains is the one allowing a challenge at the polls. There is no provision whatever left permitting the Legislature to pass any laws upon that subject, and something of the kind is absolutely necessary. It seems to me that the amendment offered judiciously supplies that defect.

Mr. ALVORD—I do not know but what I would have been perfectly willing to have gone for the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], as well as the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and I do not conceive that there is any particular difference, but it is an entirely different proposition now, as amended by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston], and I do not believe it is understood by the body of this Convention. Now, sir, I hold that so far as it regards all laws affecting the right to exercise the elective franchise they should in the main be uniform, while I hold at the same time there may be details in regard to the measuring out of the registry law, which would be applicable to incorporated cities and villages, that would not be applicable to the country, and would result in great damage and detriment to the country, whereas it would not affect injuriously the cities. Why, sir, take for instance the law as it at present exists in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. I am in favor of extending it to every incorporated city of the State, but I am not in favor of extending that uniformly to the rural portions of the State, for then it becomes onerous and burdensome, and it becomes in fact and truth, a stifling of the vote of the people. In a rural portion of this State, where men are known throughout the length and breadth of the district, each to the other, and where population changes not from year to year, there is no necessity for an annual return of the registration by the appearance of the voter at the registry poll, in order to be registered. But in your cities, where there is a constant changing of population, tiding in one day and tiding out the next, there is a necessity for a registry every year, in order to determine who are entitled to vote, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], as amended by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston], because it contemplates having a strict unbroken law throughout the State, without permitting these necessary alterations and modifications according to the surrounding circumstances of the population which shall be entitled to vote. I trust the amendment as it is now, as amended by the gentlemen from Kings [Mr. Livingston], will be voted down by this Convention.

Mr. MATTICE—Cannot the question be divided? I call for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the gentleman to call for a division of the question, so as to first include the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten]. If there is no objection, the question will be so divided.

The question was then put upon the first portion of the amendment of Mr. Masten and it was declared lost.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—Since the main proposition has been voted down, the section is left as amended by the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario, and I do not see that it is necessary for me to offer this amendment, so I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT—It cannot now be withdrawn, having been acted upon.

The question was then put upon the second portion of the proposition of Mr. Masten, being the amendment of Mr. Livingston, and it was declared lost.

Mr. EVARTS—I rise to suggest a verbal amendment to the clause under consideration as proceeding from the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]. He provides that the Legislature "shall at its next session pass laws." I move to amend so that it may read: "Shall at its next session, and may from time to time thereafter pass laws."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Everts, and it was declared carried.

Mr. McDONALD—I propose to amend by adding after the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Everts] the following:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Amend the substitute by inserting after the words "excluding from the right of suffrage" the words "any person who shall violate any provision of this section."

Mr. McDONALD—The law as it now is provides that the only punishment for a person who violates this section is this—that he shall be deprived of his vote at that election. My amendment proposes that the Legislature shall enact a law which shall deprive him of the right of suffrage, so that any person who violates the first twelve lines shall be deprived by the Legislature of the right of suffrage, after being convicted of corrupting an elector. The object of it is this: a person will be unwilling to buy the vote of a venal scoundrel who may the next day go before a grand jury and deprive him of the right of suffrage; and that will do more to prevent this corruption than anything else.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. McDonald, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VEEDER—I move the Convention do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT announced the appointment of the following Committee of Revision provided for by the resolution of the Convention adopted on motion of Mr. Alvord:

Mr. ALVORD,
Mr. TILDEN,

Mr. EVARTS,
Mr. T. W. DWIGHT,

Mr. WEED.

Mr. MERRITT—I move the committee take a recess until four o'clock.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Veeder to adjourn, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock.

In the absence of the President, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, occupied the chair as President pro tem.

Mr. SEAVER—I ask unanimous consent to submit two reports from the Printing Committee.

Mr. CORBETT—I object.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Before we pass to the consideration of section 3 of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, I desire to call up the motion made by me to reconsider the vote of—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair wishes to explain in reference to the reports of the Committee on Printing. It is a matter of necessity that they be received now, in order that the matter referred to in them may be printed during the recess.

Mr. CORBETT—In view of the facts stated by the Chair, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SEAVER from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following Report:

Your Committee, to whom was referred the resolution for the reprinting of document No. 30, with the amendments of the committee thereto, and that the lines be numbered as in the case of bills reported in the Legislature, respectfully report in favor of the adoption of said resolution, and would recommend that all future reports of committees, embodying proposed amendments to the Constitution be printed in the same manner and therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That document No. 30 be reprinted, with the amendments of the committee thereto, and that the lines be numbered as in the case of bills reported in the Legislature.

The question was put on agreeing with the report of the committee and it was declared carried.

Mr. SEAVER from the Committee on Printing, also submitted the following report:

Your committee, to whom was referred the question of printing the petition of the New York

State Workingmen's Assembly, praying that this Convention will engraft in the proposed new Constitution, to be prepared by this body, certain amendments set forth in said petition for the better protection of the interests of the workingmen of this State, in view of the importance of the reforms suggested, and of the duty of the State, by all just and feasible measures, either of constitutional provision or legislative enactment, to protect and advance the growing interests of this important and deserving class of its citizens, would respectfully report in favor of printing the usual number of copies of said petition; and while your committee are of the opinion that most of the reforms suggested by this intelligent assembly will fall more properly within the province of statutory enactment, yet we cannot refrain from expressing the hope that, while this Convention will not fail to make all proper provision for protecting and elevating the workingmen of this State, it will also so shape the Constitution to be prepared by them for submission to the people, that future Legislatures may find authority, under its beneficent provisions, to extend to this class the most ample protection and encouragement consistent with the best interests of all the people of this State.

The question was then put on agreeing with the report of the committee, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed by the Secretary that he desires unanimous consent, as Clerk of the House of Assembly, to make a report in compliance with a resolution of the Convention, dated June 26, calling for the titles of bills introduced in the Assembly relating to the city of New York.

No objection being made, the report was received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROOKS—I move that the document reported be referred to the Committee on Cities.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It will take that reference if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the pending question to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. McDonald, by inserting in the substitute after the words "excluding from the right of suffrage" the words, "any person who shall violate any provision of this section."

Mr. WEED—My recollection is that a vote was taken on that subject, and it was lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Secretary informs the Chair that such is not the case.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment by adding at the end these words: "and every person violating the provision shall, on conviction, be deprived of the right of suffrage for such a number of years as the court shall determine." I think that would very effectually remove and prevent the evil spoken of.

Mr. McDONALD—I accept the amendment.

Mr. POND—It seems to me that it is objectionable to submit this question to any judge to determine how long an offender shall be deprived of the right of suffrage in consequence of his violating this law. It seems to me it would be a good deal better to permanently disfranchise him, and leave it to the pardoning power, or some other power, to relieve him of that penalty. For the following: Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who may have been or may be convicted of bribery or any infamous crime, to prevent illegal voting, and to secure the purity and freedom of elections. All challenges shall be determined on the oath of the person challenged.

Mr. MASTEN—All I shall attempt to do on this occasion is to show to the Convention how this section will then read, and if gentlemen will run their eyes down to the end of line 12, they will then find that what is proposed to be added to this: "Laws shall be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who may have been convicted of bribery or of any infamous crime, and to prevent illegal voting, and to secure the purity and freedom of elections; all challenges shall be determined on the oath of the person challenged;" and that will constitute, if adopted, the whole of section 2, unless further amended.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I desire to offer a further amendment which I think the gentleman will accept.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

"But all such laws shall be general and uniform in their requirements throughout the State."

Mr. MASTEN—I will accept that.

Mr. SMITH—I would like to say a single word, though, perhaps, it is unnecessary. I heartily approve of this amendment. As the section stands without it, the only provision it contains is the one allowing a challenge at the polls. There is no provision whatever left permitting the Legislature to pass any laws upon that subject, and something of the kind is absolutely necessary. It seems to me that the amendment offered judiciously supplies that defect.

Mr. ALVORD—I do not know but what I would have been perfectly willing to have gone for the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], as well as the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and I do not conceive that there is any particular difference, but it is an entirely different proposition now, as amended by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston], and I do not believe it is understood by the body of this Convention. Now, sir, I hold that so far as it regards all laws affecting the right to exercise the elective franchise they should in the main be uniform, while I hold at the same time there may be details in regard to the measuring out of the registry law, which would be applicable to incorporated cities and villages, that would not be applicable to the country, and would result in great damage and detriment to the country, whereas it would not affect injuriously the cities. Why, sir, take for instance the law as it at present exists in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. I am in favor of extending it to every incorporated city of the State, but I am not in favor of extending that uniformly to the rural portions of the State, for then it becomes onerous and burdensome, and it becomes in fact and truth, a stifling of the vote of the people. In a rural portion of this State, where men are known throughout the length and breadth of the district, each to the other, and where population changes not from year to year, there is no necessity for an annual return of the registration by the appearance of the voter at the registry poll, in order to be registered. But in your cities, where there is a constant changing of population, tiding in one day and tiding out the next, there is a necessity for a registry every year, in order to determine who are entitled to vote, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], as amended by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston], because it contemplates having a strict unbroken law throughout the State, without permitting these necessary alterations and modifications according to the surrounding circumstances of the population which shall be entitled to vote. I trust the amendment as it is now, as amended by the gentlemen from Kings [Mr. Livingston], will be voted down by this Convention.

Mr. MATTICE—Cannot the question be divided? I call for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the gentleman to call for a division of the question, so as to first include the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten]. If there is no objection, the question will be so divided.

The question was then put upon the first portion of the amendment of Mr. Masten and it was declared lost.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—Since the main proposition has been voted down, the section is left as amended by the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario, and I do not see that it is necessary for me to offer this amendment, so I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT—It cannot now be withdrawn, having been acted upon.

The question was then put upon the second portion of the proposition of Mr. Masten, being the amendment of Mr. Livingston, and it was declared lost.

Mr. EVARTS—I rise to suggest a verbal amendment to the clause under consideration as proceeding from the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]. He provides that the Legislature "shall at its next session pass laws." I move to amend so that it may read: "Shall at its next session, and may from time to time thereafter pass laws."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Evarts, and it was declared carried.

Mr. McDONALD—I propose to amend by adding after the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] the following:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Amend the substitute by inserting after the words "excluding from the right of suffrage" the words "any person who shall violate any provision of this section."

Mr. McDONALD—The law as it now is provides that the only punishment for a person who violates this section is this—that he shall be deprived of his vote at that election. My amendment proposes that the Legislature shall enact a law which shall deprive him of the right of suffrage, so that any person who violates the first twelve lines shall be deprived by the Legislature of the right of suffrage, after being convicted of corrupting an elector. The object of it is this: a person will be unwilling to buy the vote of a venal

Mr. BICKFORD — I have reduced my amendment to writing. Amend section two by taking in after the word "promise," where it occurs the second time in line two, the words "or expect or intend."

Mr. VERPLANCK — I hope the amendment will not prevail. I suppose that when a person intends to commit an offense, and he concludes not to do it, it is not proper to charge him with doing what he may have intended to do but does not do.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared lost.

Mr. SPENCER — I offer the following amendment: Strike out in the seventh and eighth lines the word "inspector" and insert "officers authorized for that purpose shall;" and strike out the word "inspectors" where it next occurs and insert "officers." The object of the amendment is to provide for the contingency of the Legislature in reforming the election laws, not adopting the words "inspectors of election" as the persons to receive the vote. It may be competent for them to designate the supervisors, and the purpose of my amendment is to leave it general.

Mr. TAPPEN — I think the object of the gentleman [Mr. Spencer], could be accomplished by inserting after the word "inspector," the words "or officer authorized for that purpose."

Mr. SPENCER — I accept the amendment.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Spencer, and it was declared carried.

Mr. AXTELL — I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment offered by me disfranchising deserters and certain other persons was declared lost, and I ask that the motion lie upon the table.

Mr. CONGER — I offer the following amendment to take the place of the first part, of the first sentence, so that it will read as follows: strike out all down to and including the word "contribute," and insert in lieu thereof "no person who shall receive, pay or contribute, or shall agree, or offer directly or indirectly so to receive, pay or contribute, as aforesaid." The object of this amendment is by the terms "agree, or offer directly or indirectly," to apply as well to one who pays as to the one who receives, and is to get rid of the distinction which I alluded to yesterday, between the offering to pay and the expectation of receiving. I think that with fair consideration it will be found to cover all the ground, and get rid of what may be a nice distinction between the expectation of receiving and the offering to pay, for there must be under any circumstances an agreement or offer, either direct or indirect.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Conger and it was declared lost.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I would like to inquire whether the exception to this provision, to wit, that which referred to the expense of circulating papers and documents has been stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will inform the gentleman that it does not now form a portion of the section.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I move then that it be inserted. I had supposed that this provision would remain in the section. My attention has just been called to the fact that it has been stricken out, all-though it was sustained in committee after full discussion. I will not take up the time of the Convention by any discussion of the merits of the subject because they must be understood; but I think it would be desirable that it should be retained in the section. It merely excepts from the provision the legitimate expenses incurred by the printing and circulating of documents during the canvass.

Mr. GREELEY — The clause now moved by the gentleman [Mr. Seymour], to be re-inserted, has become totally unnecessary by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario.

Mr. SEYMOUR — If that is understood then the adoption of the provision—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Under the rule, the gentleman [Mr. Seymour], cannot again speak on the subject.

Mr. SEYMOUR — All I desire to say is that I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I offer the following amendment by adding at the close of the section the following: "But no test oath founded on causes of exclusion from suffrage, other than those in this article mentioned, shall ever be prescribed." I had intended to offer this as an independent section of the article, but on the whole it seems to me that its proper place is at the close of the second section. I certainly entertain the opinion that without this amendment the Legislature never would have the power which the amendment is intended to prohibit forever. I think myself if the Legislature should undertake to disfranchise me on some ground of exclusion, from suffrage, other than the grounds mentioned in this article, I might appeal for my protection to the bill of rights, and to the Constitution of the United States. Such is my own opinion. I know, however, that others may differ from me upon that proposition. I know that legislative bodies might differ from me in regard to it. Some Legislature, less intelligent possibly than this body, in some hour of partisan passion and excitement, might enact a disfranchising test oath founded upon disqualifications or causes of exclusion other than those which this Convention has deliberately adopted. But my intention is simply to make clear and to fix forever, what I believe to be the undoubted meaning of this Convention in establishing a law of suffrage, which enumerates the causes of exclusion from that right. We certainly intend that no other cause of disfranchisement shall ever exist, and I simply propose to make that clear forever.

Mr. LAPHAM — I trust this amendment will not prevail. It is obvious enough that causes may hereafter exist which would require the imposition of an oath of that character in order to preserve the interests and rights of the people. It is well known to members of this Convention that an oath somewhat of the nature indicated by this amendment, was embodied in the organic act, by virtue of which the delegates to this Convention were chosen, and the authority of the legislature to pass and prescribe that oath has been denied by distinguished gentlemen of the State, and is now, I am informed, a question pending in the courts of the State. If this Convention should adopt a deliberate expression of this character it might look like the trial of that cause and the establishment of a precedent which would have some influence in the trial of that issue. It is entirely unnecessary to incorporate in this section of the Constitution any such provision as that suggested in this amendment. If the question should be discussed at all, I respectfully submit for the consideration of the Convention, it will arise under the sixth section, which is before us, and where the form of the oath which is to be taken by the elector is prescribed, and for that reason it should not be appended as an amendment to this section.

Mr. COMSTOCK—That is the oath of office. I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered, and the Secretary commenced the call of the roll.

Mr. CHURCH—Mr. President, I would like to inquire—if I am in order—I think I rose before the Clerk commenced the call. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], whether he holds that it is competent for the Legislature—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] is out of order, as the Clerk had commenced the call of the roll before the gentleman arose.

Mr. CHURCH—I think I addressed the Chair first.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair distinctly heard the call of the Clerk before it recognized the gentleman.

Mr. VAN COTT—I hope the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] will have unanimous consent—

A DELEGATE—I object. Let us have a vote.

The call of the roll was proceeded with on the amendment of Mr. Comstock, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, E. Brooks, Cassidy, Champplain, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Gross, Hatch, Jarvis, Kernan, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Roy, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham—38.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Axtell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beckwith, Bickford, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Clark, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Houston, Huntington, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, Prindle, Prosser, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Schoonmaker, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—65.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I move to amend by striking out the clause which provides that all challenges shall be determined upon the oath of the challenger.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that that can only be reached by a motion to reconsider the vote which placed the clause in the section, it just having been placed in the section by action of the Convention.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—A motion to reconsider has been made already, and it lies on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Upon either ground the motion of the gentleman is not now admissible. The question now is on the adoption of the second section as amended.

Mr. LOEW—I believe the first section was not adopted as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the gentleman's statement is correct. The Chair will therefore follow the course pursued by his predecessor. The next question is upon the third section, which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I call up my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the Convention must go through with all the sections, and then the motion to reconsider can be taken up, and not till then.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State, of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum, at the public expense, nor while confined in any public prison. And the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which electors absent from their homes in time of war, in the actual military or naval service of this State, or of the United States, may vote, and shall provide for the canvass and return of their votes.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I desire to offer an amendment, which I find is left out of this section, which, being contained in the Constitution of 1846, I presume was left out through inadvertence by the committee.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows:

"Insert after the word 'seas' in line five, section three, the words, 'nor while a student of any seminary of learning.'"

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I hope that clause will not be inserted. A similar provision came up before the Supreme Court of California, which State had clauses of this kind in its Constitution, as we have in ours, and it was decided it had no effect whatever, that the question of residence was to be determined on other grounds than whether a person was in college or not. Residence depends on the fact and the intention, and should be decided on general principles. Such a clause only tends to complicate the decision of questions arising before inspectors, and at the same time it is inoperative, as the Supreme Court of California decided.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope this clause will be restored. It has been in the Constitution since 1846, and has received a practical construction. If it is left out now, it may be misconceived. I have a little feeling about it. My first vote, after returning home, after being two years absent in college, was challenged on the ground that I had lost my residence. I felt reluctant to swear my vote in because I had not been at home, but I did so. I know now that I did right. To leave out this clause might create some embarrassment, and certainly it can do no harm to leave it in.

Mr. GREELEY—The committee very carefully considered this matter, and decided that a man's residence was what we could not here determine. Here is a young man who goes to school, perhaps, his home is where he has lived all his lifetime, and his residence is there. He has a right to go home and vote. Here is another young man who is sent to college, who has no other home than where he is living as a student; he makes that place his home. He may be there four years, having no other home than that; and, if you restore this article, he cannot vote at all. I hope no such proscription ever will be permitted, of those who are trying to get an education. We have decided that ignorance shall not disqualify a man from voting, and I trust we shall not enact a provision which shall disqualify a person because he is seeking an education. I hope this clause therefore, will be allowed to stand.

Mr. ANDREWS—I am in favor of the restoration of this clause, and I do not think the suggestion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is well founded, because, in the case which he last supposes, if a student had no other residence than where he is attending college, and if the intention was with him to remain in that place although he might be a student, there, he would have a right notwithstanding the insertion of this clause to vote there.

Mr. MERRILL—Does the gentleman understand that by the provision of the present Constitution a man may gain a residence by being a student in college?

Mr. ANDREWS—Oh, unquestionably. It simply determines that, while a young man is at school, the fact of his being at school shall not affect the question of his residence. That, as I understand it, is the entire scope of the section. Now, striking out this section is not objectionable on the ground taken as I understand it, in the minority report, because if struck out then it would not allow students temporarily away from home at school to vote in the place where they might happen to be; but I agree with the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], that this has furnished heretofore the rule in such cases, and it had better not be abandoned, although I do not suppose it protects any substantial right, whether it is in or out.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Chesebro, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. RUMSEY—I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the last clause of the section. It provides that the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which the electors engaged in the military and naval service of the United States shall vote. The first section prescribes that all electors shall vote in the town where they reside at the time of the election, and not elsewhere. We have made a mistake in striking out the proviso that was in that first section, and I propose to remedy that by inserting these words: Add after the word "elsewhere" line 6, section 1, "except as hereinafter provided," and that will give it effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman [Mr. Rumsey] that his amendment will be in order when amendments generally are announced.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Before we proceed to the next section I want now to move a reconsideration of the vote just taken, by which the language was inserted in reference to students attending the seminaries of learning.

Mr. C. C. ALLEN—I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, and I move that for the present it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Objection being made, it must lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. McDONALD—In line three I ask if the words "or of this State" are not omitted before the words "the United States." In line nine it is provided that "the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which electors, absent from their homes in time of war in the actual military or naval service of this State or of the United States, may vote," while in the upper clause they only provide for those in the service of the United States. I, therefore, for the purpose of testing that, propose to amend by inserting in line three, before the words "United States," "or of this State," so that it will read as follows, "for the purpose of voting no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the military service of this State or of the United States."

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would ask the gentleman whether he has reference to the first section?

Mr. McDONALD—This has reference to the third section, now under consideration.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I would like to ask the gentleman where the troops would be in the service of the State of New York outside of the State?

Mr. McDONALD—I do not know that they would be outside of the State, but they could vote where they were instead of being compelled to come home to vote. One thing or the other is certain, either those words ought to be inserted in the first clause, or the latter clause ought to be corrected, for that provides for absence from their homes in the actual military or naval service of this State, or of the United States. One or the other ought to be corrected, and I see no reason why a person who is engaged in the military service of this State, when he is in a different part of the State, should not be allowed to vote.

Mr. AXTELL—The gentleman evidently misapprehends the meaning. This line does not refer to the military service. It refers to the fact that a man may be absent from the State in the service of the United States other than the military service.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. McDonald, and, on a division, it was declared carried, by a vote of 45 to 37.

Mr. LANDON—I offer the following amendment:

"Insert in line ten after the words 'United States,' the words, 'or in a seminary of learning out of the State.'"

As students while attending a seminary of learning do not lose their residence, I do not and the establishment of a precedent which would have some influence in the trial of that issue. It is entirely unnecessary to incorporate in this section of the Constitution any such provision as that suggested in this amendment. If the question should be discussed at all, I respectfully submit for the consideration of the Convention, it will arise under the sixth section, which is before us, and where the form of the oath which is to be taken by the elector is prescribed, and for that reason it should not be appended as an amendment to this section.

Mr. COMSTOCK—That is the oath of office. I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered, and the Secretary commenced the call of the roll.

Mr. CHURCH—Mr. President, I would like to inquire—if I am in order—I think I rose before the Clerk commenced the call. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], whether he holds that it is competent for the Legislature—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] is out of order, as the Clerk had commenced the call of the roll before the gentleman arose.

Mr. CHURCH—I think I addressed the Chair first.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair distinctly heard the call of the Clerk before it recognized the gentleman.

Mr. VAN COTT—I hope the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] will have unanimous consent—

A DELEGATE—I object. Let us have a vote.

The call of the roll was proceeded with on the amendment of Mr. Comstock, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, E. Brooks, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Gross, Hatch, Jarvis, Kernan, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe Roy, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham—38.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Artell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beckwith, Bickford, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Clark, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Fowler, Francis, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Houston, Huntington, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, Prindle, Prosser, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Schoonmaker, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Mr. E. A. BROWN—I move to amend by striking out the clause which provides that all challenges shall be determined upon the oath of the challenger.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that that can only be reached by a —“to reconsider the vote which placed the clause in the section, it just having been placed in the section by action of the Convention.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—A motion to reconsider has been made already, and it lies on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Upon either ground the motion of the gentleman is not now admissible. The question now is on the adoption of the second section as amended.

Mr. LOEW—I believe the first section was not adopted as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the gentleman's statement is correct. The Chair will therefore follow the course pursued by his predecessor. The next question is upon the third section, which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I call up my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the Convention must go through with all the sections, and then the motion to reconsider can be taken up, and not till then.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State, of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum, at the public expense, nor while confined in any public prison. And the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which electors absent from their homes in time of war, in the actual military or naval service of this State, or of the United States, may vote, and shall provide for the canvass and return of their votes.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I desire to offer an amendment, which I find is left out of this section, which, being contained in the Constitution of 1846, I presume was left out through inadvertence by the committee.

The SECRETARY read the amendment, as follows:

“Insert after the word “seas” in line five, section three, the words, “nor while a student of any seminary of learning.”

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I hope that clause will not be inserted. A similar provision came up before the Supreme Court of California, which State had clauses of this kind in its Constitution, as we have in ours, and it was decided it had no effect whatever, that the question of residence was to be determined on other grounds than whether a person was in college or not. Residence depends on the fact and the intention, and should be decided on general principles. Such a clause only tends to complicate the decision of questions arising before inspectors, and at the same time it is inoperative, as the Supreme Court of California decided.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope this clause will be restored. It has been in the Constitution since 1846, and has received a practical construction. If it is left out now, it may be misconceived. I have a little feeling about it. My first vote, after returning home, after being two years absent in college, was challenged on the ground that I had lost my the State, which would be about one hundred thousand, and if it is one-fifth, you have two hundred thousand. If they lose two days in attendance, at two dollars a day, there would be four hundred thousand dollars wrung from the industrial interests of the State, and for what? Because, perhaps, some vagabond is enabled in the city of New York to run the outposts of the commissioned police, the loyal leagues, the clubs and the vigilance committees, and put in a vote, this visitation is put upon the tax payers and upon the innocent citizens. I warn gentlemen if such a provision as this is incorporated into the organic law, it will raise a storm of indignation throughout the State and country and the rural districts where the people are honorable and are guilty of no crime, that will sweep this Constitution out of existence. Increase the penalty for the crime; throw other safeguards around the proof that shall be offered on election day, but do not visit nor let the indiscriminate hand of vengeance lump together the innocent and the guilty in this enormous infiction.

Mr. ANDREWS—I trust this Convention is not to be frightened from its propriety by the threats which have been heard from the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], because if the only storm which the work of this Convention has to withstand, is a storm to be raised by a provision for a fair registration of the voters of this State, then I think the work of this Convention can pass that ordeal. And, sir, while I am in favor of all proper and legitimate economy in carrying on the operations of this State, that economy is most expensive which shall refuse to provide the means necessary to the ascertainment of the persons who are entitled to exercise the elective franchise, the dearest right possessed by citizens of this State, and at the same time one which should be most vigilantly and sacredly guarded. I do not understand that the estimates of the gentleman of the expense of these proceedings are at all in accordance with the fact. But whether so or not, I submit that under color of regard for the laboring people of this State, we are not to allow the system of franchise to be invaded by the frauds of persons who might desire that it should be exercised by those who are destitute of the proper qualifications. I trust, sir, that this present provision will be retained.

Mr. MERRILL—I submit the following amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Substitute for the last clause of section four, in lines seven and eight, the following: "But such laws shall be uniform in their application to all the cities in the State."

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope, sir, there is to be none of this discrimination as between city and country. I heard with a good deal of regret this morning, from the gentleman now occupying the chair [Mr. Alvord]—the acting President of this body—remarks like this: that a registry law was very well for villages and cities, but very improper for the country districts. Sir, I do not know what ideas the gentleman has of the cities of this State.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Will the gentleman [Mr. E. Brooks] permit the Chair to state that he entirely misunderstood what was said by the member now occupying the chair when on the floor? He used no such language.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I know I understood the present occupant of the chair [Mr. Alvord] to say this morning that a registry might be convenient to villages and cities, but that it was not proper for the rural districts.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair wishes to inform the gentleman that he is mistaken, as no such language was used.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Then I am glad I did not rightly understand the remarks of the President, for they grated rather harshly on my ears. But it is not the first time that discriminations of this kind between the city and country have been attempted, and these propositions remind me of that old remark of the poet who said, "God made the country and man made the town." Now, sir, as between the town and the country, whatever may be the opinion of gentlemen from the country, taking the population at large, I think there is about as much virtue in the city as in the country. I remember a resolution like this, said to have been adopted some years ago, by that class of jurists which prevailed very extensively in this country, and it read something like this:

"Resolved, first, That the earth, and the fullness thereof, belongs to the saints.

"Resolved, secondly, That we are the saints."

The same discrimination seems to be very often made between gentlemen residing in the city and those residing in the country, and I protest against it, and insist that if you are to have registry laws, if you are to embarrass the people of the city by these discriminations, they ought to apply just as much to the rural districts as they do to the citizens of the city. The registry law is a subject of great inconvenience and great expense; it imposes heavy burdens upon the tax payers, and heavier burdens upon the laboring classes of people, who have not so much leisure as gentlemen have who reside in the country. There are many more opportunities for gentlemen residing in the rural districts to avail themselves of the opportunities of registry, than there are in the city, for the reasons I have named. I hope the original provision in the clause reported by the Committee on Suffrage will be insisted upon, and that the law will be uniform throughout the State.

Mr. BALLARD—I understood the President pro tem. [Mr. Alvord] in the remarks he made, to have reference to the registry laws as they now exist, in which the personal attendance of electors is required in the city and incorporated villages, in order to get their names upon the registry, while in rural districts, inspectors of elections are required to register the names of the voters as they find them on the poll lists of the preceding year. I understood the gentleman [Mr. Alvord] in his remarks to insist that the law should be adapted to the cities and the rural districts as they now are. In one case, a personal attendance is required to see that their names are upon the registry. In the country the inspectors use the poll lists of the last year, and enter the names there, and where the election district runs into an incorporated village, there they must see to it that their names are on the list before election day, but in other election districts they may be entered on the oath of the elector on election day.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Why should you compel the personal attendance of an elector in the city to have himself placed on the registry, and not impose the same burden on the elector in the country?

Mr. BALLARD—That has been very well answered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that in crowded cities there is a necessity for personal attendance, because of numbers and want of acquaintance among the persons living contiguous, in order to ascertain that they are legal voters in the district. In the country districts every man knows his neighbor, and so extensive is the acquaintance that the right of every person in a town to vote is known by those at the polls.

Mr. TAPPEN—How is an elector in the rural districts to know that the inspectors have placed his name on the registry list without a personal inspection by himself?

Mr. BALLARD—He may not know the fact unless he sees it; but an elector's name, if on the poll list, would not be left off by an inspector unless through inadvertency. It is well known that the country election districts sometimes embrace a territory of five or ten miles. They are of different dimensions; and to have a uniform law, requiring every man to go and see if his name is registered six days before election—in the country as well as in the city—would be a most embarrassing and oppressive enactment. In this city of Albany, and in New York and Brooklyn, men live within a stone's throw, or certainly within two or three minutes' walk of the polls of an election district, and they can go without difficulty and see that their names are registered. To require that in the country would involve perhaps a five miles' journey, involving much expense; which consideration has been alluded to by the gentlemen from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], and that journey would have to be repeated over hills and through valleys six days after the registry, on the day of election. I hope that the last line will be stricken out and amended in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill].

Mr. BARNARD—I hope that we shall not change the section as it was reported by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage. A fair registry law no one can object to, because it enables the inspectors, before the day of election, to ascertain who are the voters on the day of election, and prevent those delays which otherwise would occur when the votes were being taken. But a registry law should be uniform throughout the State, and ought not require the personal attendance of the voter in the cities any more than in the country. The cities of New York and Brooklyn, you will bear in mind, are commercial cities, and they have in them a great many voters—seafaring men—who are nearly all the time at sea, and if when the registers sit six days before the election these men happen to be at sea, they cannot be registered to vote because they cannot attend personally, and thereby their votes are lost; and the right of suffrage is denied to them. I hope that we will have a uniform law, and have it as it existed in this State before the year 1866.

Mr. MERRILL—The object of a registry law, as I understand it, is to prevent frauds in the elections, by enabling citizens to ascertain, in the only possible way in an entirely proper manner, who are entitled to vote. The object of my amendment is to require a uniformity throughout the cities of the State, so as to prevent any unjust discrimination against citizens similarly situated, and leave the Legislature to make such laws as it shall deem wise. If it is not manifest to gentlemen on this floor that the same class of requirements are not applicable to the population of the cities which would properly apply to citizens in the rural districts, then nothing I can say, or that anybody else could say, would bring them to that point of view. Laws are uniform when they apply to populations situated in like manner.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Under the existing practice, a man who resides in the rural district—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is out of order, he having already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is not this discrimination between voters of the country and the city, that a man residing in the country is permitted to vote on the day of election, while in the city he must be registered before he can vote?

Mr. MERRILL—In reply to that I would say that I fail to discover anything in this article, as it would be amended by the proposition I have submitted, which will make any unjust distinctions between the population of cities and country districts. It is entirely a matter of legislation. The Legislature, as I understand, can now make laws which shall be uniform, if that is deemed to be the best manner to secure the object of registration. It would likewise be within the limits of legislation, under this section, to do away with the requirements of personal attendance in cities, or to impose such a requirement upon the country, as the Legislature should deem best to secure the ends of the law.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair would inform the gentleman that two gentlemen on each side have already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I understood that the rule only applied to the consideration of the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It applies to the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. TAPPEN—Does the Chair mean to state that four gentlemen have spoken on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill]?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Two have spoken on each side of the amendment.

The question was then announced on the amendment of Mr. Merrill.

Mr. CHESEBRO—On that I ask the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. KINNEY—I understood the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] was a substitute for the first proposition of this section, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] is to insert something between the seventh and eighth lines of the printed amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair so understands it.

Mr. KINNEY—It is not an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands that there are two amendments to the same section, and as two amendments are pending they will not admit of a proposition for any further amendment?

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call of the roll.

The name of Mr. Bickford was called.

Mr. BICKFORD—I ask to be excused from voting on the ground that my attention has been diverted from the question.

The question was put on granting the request of Mr. Bickford to be excused from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD—Then I vote "aye."

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I ask to be excused from voting on the pending amendment, and if permitted will briefly state my reasons for making the request. I am opposed, sir, to enacting any registry law in the Constitution of this State. The first clause of this article, as reported, is precisely the same in this respect as the provision of the present Constitution, which on the subject of registry has worked well. I propose, when it shall be in order, to move to strike out all after the first clause of section 4. If I am not excused from voting I shall vote "no" upon the proposition.

The name of Mr. Kinney was called.

Mr. KINNEY—I beg leave to be excused from voting. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] is a substitute for the fourth section, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] provides for the insertion of certain words in the seventh and eighth lines of the section, reported by the Committee of the Whole. I cannot vote intelligently upon the question pending, because if the amendments were carried the whole matter would be unintelligible to this Convention.

The question was then put on excusing Mr. Kinney, and it was declared lost.

Mr. KINNEY—Then I vote "no." That is the safest way I know of.

The name of Mr. M. I. Townsend was called.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I ask to be excused from voting for this reason. My conviction would lead me to vote "no" upon this subject, but my colleague Mr. Armstrong, would be of a different opinion, and we agreed that we would pair on this question, and with the consent of the Convention I wish to be excused from voting.

There being no objection Mr. M. I. Townsend was excused.

The name of Mr. Van Campen was called.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I beg to be excused from voting on this question for the reason, that the insertion of the clause here would seem to destroy its force. It provides that the laws shall be uniform in respect to cities, and then again it says such registry laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State. I have a very great objection to making any change in this clause whatever, and under the circumstances I cannot well vote for the change proposed, as it would make the clause unintelligible. I think it is a very grave mistake to make any change at all.

Mr. MERRILL—I call the gentleman to order. He is arguing the question instead of giving the reasons for being excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion the point of order is well taken.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Then I vote "no."

Mr. BICKFORD—I wish to change my vote, and vote no.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state that under a misapprehension, it permitted the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] to be recorded in the negative. The Chair is informed that the rule which has obtained heretofore in this body is that persons can only be excused from voting by the consent of the Convention; and, therefore, it feels it its duty to put the question of excusing the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] from voting, to the vote of the Convention.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I withdrew my request to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is aware of that, but in its opinion under the former ruling, the gentleman could not be excused from voting without the consent of the Convention.

There being no objection, the question was put on excusing Mr. C. C. Dwight from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I vote in the negative.

The call of the roll was proceeded with, and the amendment of Mr. Merrill was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beckwith, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Case, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Flagler, Fowler, Frank, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Hammend, Hand, Houston, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Prindle, Prosser, Root, Rumsey, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, Van Cott, Wake-man—45.

Noes—Messrs. Artell, Barnard, Barto, Bickford, E. Brooks, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, C. C. Parker, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rofe, Roy, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Tappan, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wales, Weed, Wickham—50.

Mr. CORBETT—I move to strike out from line seven, commencing at the word "but" to and including the word "State" on the eighth line.

Mr. KINNEY—I would ask the reading of the amendment of the gentlemen from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], as amended on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair would inform the gentleman [Mr. Kinney], that the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill], was lost.

which requires that the registry laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State. The justice and equity of this provision are so apparent, that it seems to me strange that it should encounter any opposition in a body composed of gentlemen who profess to have come together for the purpose of amending the fundamental law of the State, in order to secure to the people thereof a more perfect system of government. It must be clear to every one that without such a provision in the Constitution as the one now under discussion, the Legislature would have the power to virtually disfranchise the residents of any particular portion of the State, by annexing to their right to vote certain conditions from which the rest of the people would be exempt. The existing registry laws are proof of what I assert. It may not be known to all the members of this Convention that at the present time the residents in the cities and incorporated villages of this State are deprived of their right to vote unless they shall have been registered a certain number of days before the election, while no such restriction is placed upon the inhabitants of the country. Again, in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, no voter can be registered unless he appears in person before the board of registers, on the days indicated by law. No matter what knowledge the registers may have as to a person's place of residence and right to vote, no matter how conclusively the facts entitling such person to vote may be proved, he must appear before the board at the designated time and apply to have himself registered, and he must renew the application every time he desires to vote; so that in those two cities every one who has been unavoidably prevented by sickness or otherwise from applying in person to have himself registered must lose his vote, and such is not the case in any other part of the State. Can any one pretend, then, that under existing laws the inhabitants of New York, Brooklyn and other cities exercise the right of suffrage on equal terms with the people in the country? Certainly not. Since I have come here I have heard a great deal about the right of the black man to vote on the same terms as the white man, and I supposed of course that no one would deny that the white men of this State had the right to vote on equal terms with each other, without reference to their residence; but I find that some of those gentlemen who have been the most earnest in their efforts to place the black man on an equality with the white man in respect to suffrage, are now equally warm in advocating that a discrimination should be made on the same subject between the white men of the State. I take it for granted that a proposition to incorporate in the Constitution a provision imposing on the voters in cities qualifications different from those required of voters in the country would meet with very little favor in this Convention, and yet it is proposed by some gentlemen to confer upon the Legislature the power to do indirectly what we would not be willing to do directly. I beg the members of this Convention to be at least consistent on this subject of suffrage. In a preceding section they have just conferred the elective franchise on every male citizen to be exercised upon terms of perfect equality, and what becomes of that equality if the Legislature is now authorized to enact laws imposing restrictions upon the right to vote of a portion only of the inhabitants of this State, or making discriminations concerning the exercise of the elective franchise between the residents of the different parts of this State. In behalf of my constituents, therefore, I protest against giving such power to the Legislature under any pretext whatever.

Mr. LAPHAM—I am in favor of the amendment that the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. Kinney] proposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain]. I regard the amendment striking out the last clause of section three as reported by the committee as desirable, for the reason that that provision is entirely unnecessary. The proposition of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] struck me with surprise, for I have found that class of gentlemen in this body who sympathized in sentiment with him, extremely solicitous through the whole of this debate, to incorporate into the provisions of this article every form of expression which might in any manner describe the offense of infidelity on the part of the elector, and I took courage in believing that gentlemen were earnest in their desire to purify the ballot-box, and prevent the possibility of corruption in our elections. I confess my surprise that, when we have now come down to the last and crowning act, which of all others is best calculated, as experience has shown, to preserve the purity of the elective franchise, the gentleman from Allegany proposes to strike it out altogether. I will not, from this simple motion on his part, draw the inference that the intelligent gentlemen of this Convention who have thus indicated their desire to prevent the possibility of corruption at the polls are insincere, or have been insincere in those professions. I will wait until we take the vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], and let that determine whether they are in earnest in having all the safeguards placed upon the ballot-box which experience has proved were so useful and efficacious in preserving the purity of elections. I trust that the amendment which has last been offered will not prevail, for the reason that it is entirely useless as a provision in the Constitution, that whole matter being subject to regulation by legislative action. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] will meet with such a response from this Convention as will show him, and show the people at large, that the desire to put provisions in the Constitution to prevent corruption which has been so universally manifested thus far, is a real and earnest desire on the part of every member of this Convention.

Mr. KERNAN—I desire to say a word in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. Kinney] to strike out the clause in this section which provides that the registration shall be uniform; and I will not assume, sir, as the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] seems inclined on all occasions to assume, that every man who may differ with me on this subject is less honest or less desirous of having the purity of the ballot-box preserved than myself, or those with whom I

Mr. WEED—This question will of necessity be taken up and reconsidered when the Convention is full. I move, therefore that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 75 to 37.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

MONDAY, July 29, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment at half-past seven o'clock.

The President pro tem. [Mr. FOLGER] in the chair.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. EDWARD BAYARD.

The Journal of Friday was read by the SECRETARY.

Mr. GREELEY—I understand that the amendment moved by my colleague from Westchester [Mr. Tappen] striking out the words "right of suffrage" wherever it occurs, and inserting in lieu thereof, "elective franchise," to have been negatived. The Clerk read that it was adopted by the Convention. I only call attention to that fact. It is not according to my understanding. I may be mistaken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The recollection of the Chair, sitting in another place, is that it was negatived.

There being no objection the Journal was corrected in that respect.

There being no further objections thereto the Journal as corrected was declared approved.

Mr. GREELEY—I move that the roll of the Convention be now called.

Mr. ARCHER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Archer, and it was declared lost.

Mr. GREELEY—I now move that the roll of the Convention be called.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call of the roll, and the following members were found to be present:

Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bickford, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Cooke, Corning, Daly, Develin, Eddy, Endress, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Harris, Houston, Kinney, Krum, Landon, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Mattice, Merritt, Miller, More, Morris, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Prindle, Prosser, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Schoonmaker, Smith, Spencer, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—67.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS the Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, July 30, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M., Mr. FOLGER, President pro tem. in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Rev. AMBROSE O'NEIL.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY, and was approved.

Mr. BURRILL—I rise to a question of privilege. On Thursday last, in the afternoon, an amendment was offered by Mr. Gross of New York, giving the right to vote to persons who should have declared their intention to become citizens prior to the adoption of the proposed Constitution. I had received a telegram calling me to the city, and was not in my seat at the moment the amendment was offered; on my return to the chamber, for the purpose of making some further preparations for my departure, the roll was being called, and shortly after I entered, my name was called as among the absentees, and I inquired of a gentleman near me as to the effect of the amendment, and I voted according to the construction which I received from him. Subsequently, on reading the amendment, I found that I had misapprehended its meaning. The amendment was lost, and my vote stands recorded in the negative and among the majority. Had I properly comprehended the amendment I should have voted in favor of it, and should have been recorded among the minority, and I now desire to be so recorded. I wish to make this explanation in order that my views on this question may be rightly understood, and that I may stand correct upon the record.

No objection being made, the Journal was ordered to be corrected in that respect.

Mr. MERRILL—If in order, I wish to ask for leave of absence for three days for Mr. Field, of Orleans.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the special order to be the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage as amended, and the pending question, the motion of Mr. Champlain to strike out section four.

Mr. KINNEY—I offer the following amendment to the section by striking out, after the word "law" in the seventh line of said section, the words "but such laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State."

Mr. VEEDER—I rise, sir, for the purpose of inquiring whether the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] will strike out this section and substitute another provision. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. Kinney] to be to the section as it stands printed, and I desire to inquire whether an amendment of that kind is in order, and whether the amendment should not properly be to the substitute as offered by the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands that the amendment of the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. Kinney] if adopted would take the place of the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany.

Mr. KINNEY—At our session on Friday, it was then decided, where a proposition was offered to strike out the entire section and to substitute another in its place, it was in order to perfect the original proposition before the question of striking out and inserting could be taken, and under that ruling I offer this proposition, which is to perfect the original section as printed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—Mr. Chairman, I trust, sir, that this Convention will refuse to strike out that part of the section now under consideration, roll, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—71.

Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Greeley, Gross, Hatch, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappan, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Weed, Wickham—43.

Mr. BARKER—I move to amend the section by striking out the word "any" at the end of line five, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "every general." The object of introducing this amendment and changing the language is to have the registry law apply to general elections and not have it applicable to towns and municipal elections. I suppose that the design of the committee is to have it apply to general elections and not to mere local elections.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Barker, and it was declared carried.

Mr. VEEDER—I move to amend the section by striking out all after the word "established" in line three. It seems to be the sense of the Convention that no uniform laws shall be established, which I regret very much. I submit that it is entirely unnecessary that a provision of this kind should be incorporated in the fundamental law of the State. Every gentleman who is at all familiar with the registry law as it now exists is quite well aware of the fact that that registry law establishes, as one of its provisions and requirements, that electors shall be upon the register at least the Friday preceding the Tuesday of election, which fixes the day, and if the Legislature, under the old provision of the Constitution, had the right and possessed the power to fix a day when the registry shall close, which they do and which has never been questioned, I submit that it is entirely unnecessary to insert a proposition of this kind in the Constitution. Again, sir, it provides that unless a party is duly registered, and his name placed upon the register, he shall not vote. That is the law of to-day, as it applies to the cities of New York and Brooklyn. A provision of that kind cannot be incorporated in the law and in the Constitution as it now stands, and I submit it is entirely unnecessary. In reply to some remarks that have been made in regard to a desire not to have uniform laws, I wish simply to state that, in my judgement, a greater hardship prevails in the cities of New York and Brooklyn for an elector than anywhere else in the State. To enable him to cast his vote, he is obliged under the present law to lose three days before he can accomplish that purpose; one day to attend personally at the registry and see that his name is upon the roll; so that although any of us may have voted last fall in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, before we can vote at the next election we must again attend personally and place our names upon the register. That is one day; then the law empowers the registrar to examine the roll, and in the absence of the elector to strike his name from the roll, if he sees fit; that requires a second attendance, and a third attendance on the day of election, if gentlemen do not choose to enact a provision here that the law shall be uniform. I submit it is a hardship as the present law exists in the cities of New York and Brooklyn.

Mr. POND—I am opposed to this proposed amendment to this section. The result will be, sir, if it is adopted, to place it in the power of the majority of the Legislature to sweep it out of existence as any gentleman may know from the interest exhibited here on this question. How long in case the political majority in the Legislature is changed would this wise and salutary provision be found upon our statute books? It would be swept away in the twinkling of an eye, and when swept away, I do not know when the political majority at present in the ascendancy would ever get possession again. The provision requiring a registry is a salutary and necessary law—and in regard to the remarks that have been made in reference to having it uniform throughout the State, that it is a very specious claim, and one of the gentlemen who have made remarks on this subject puts it in this light, that it makes a distinction between white voters, to wit, those who reside in cities and villages, and those who reside in other parts of the State. I would like to inquire of that gentleman if those citizens who reside in cities do not have different laws, resulting from the very organization and municipal incorporations of cities, from those citizens who reside and live in the country? Why, sir, the very constitution of a municipal government makes a different law and a different form of government from that which citizens of the country live under, and is it to be said that all laws are to be made uniform throughout the State? If so let us abolish the city of New York, and take it under the fostering care of the rural districts; that will make it a little better, I apprehend, than what it now is. The very fact of their being a municipal government, the very fact that a city is very different from the country, the very fact that man made the city and God made the country, makes it necessary for a different law in reference to elections and many other things. You might as well say that there must be a police department in every town in the country in order to make it equal and uniform throughout the State. I deny the whole thing. The fact that in the city of New York and other cities large numbers of people have congregated, makes it necessary that there should be different laws. In order to make it uniform, the law ought to go further and provide that there should not be more voters living in a certain given space in the city of New York than there are in any remote town in the country. When that is done, and the inhabitants are as sparsely located in the cities as in the country, then it will be time, and time enough, to make laws applicable to elections alike in the cities and in the country. Mr. President, the effect of requiring citizens in the country to be registered, six days for instance before election, will, in its operation, disfranchise a large number who would have, in order to be registered, to take a whole day. Now, in a great many instances they will not do it, and the evil to be guarded against does not exist in that case. They are all known on election day; every inhabitant and citizen in the town are known in the rural district; they are not known in the city, and this difference in the law is created by that very fact. I am opposed, therefore, to striking it out, and I shall be in favor of another amendment to this section as it now stands in order to carry out the view, as I understand it, of the Convention, as they have indicated their views by striking out the last clause.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I would have been quite willing that this clause moved to be stricken out should have remained in if this Convention had not just now stricken out the following clause, which requires that the registry law should be uniform throughout the State. I regret exceedingly that the Convention has come to the conclusion to strike out that last clause which the Committee had reported. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], in the remarks he made upon that subject, said that it appeared that the minority of this Convention were determined to get in every possible partisan advantage, and he thought it high time that the majority should mark out their own course, regardless of the minority. This I understand to be the substance of his remarks. I regret exceedingly that this declaration of war should be thus made by the distinguished gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. There is not the slightest foundation for the idea such as he has advanced upon that subject. Pray, what have the minority done that indicates a desire to gain any possible partisan advantage? We have sustained a clause reported by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, a large majority of which (five to two, I am told), represent the political majority of the Convention, and because we do so we are denounced as attempting to gain a partisan advantage.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—The committee were unanimous on that point.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I insist, therefore, that this attack is causeless, unfounded and does not belong to the distinguished position that that gentleman has occupied before the public and in this body. Mr. President, what could we in the minority gain by any attempt to secure a partisan advantage? We are utterly helpless, and the moment the tocsin is sounded we are voted down. We can do nothing, and the gentleman knows it perfectly well. We can gain no partisan advantage. We can seek to make no Constitution, or to place any clause in the Constitution which can give us a partisan advantage hereafter. A minority can never do it. But it is not so with the majority. They have the power, and he says they will exercise it. They can make a Constitution which they think will give them a partisan advantage, and he says they shall do so. Well, sir, we can resist, and that is all. We cannot resist successfully. We shall be overborne if this doctrine be carried out to the extent avowed here. Let it come, sir. We will do our duty, struggling not to make a partisan Constitution, but honestly, fairly and candidly, seek to make one that shall improve the fundamental law of the State. And if we are overborne, thank God there is a higher tribunal to which we can appeal for redress.

Mr. RATHBUN—I hope that the members of the Convention will not take fire at what was said by my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]; no harm will come from it, I hope. I think there is no reason that any should. He was very earnest, and perhaps went a little further than would be wholly justifiable. My idea about it is, and I presume the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], will agree with me, that it is the duty of all of us, no matter about party, to endeavor to make a Constitution that will be for the benefit of all, and equal for all. Now, this question presents itself, which has been discussed in regard to uniformity. Now, sir, so far as uniformity is concerned, I agree with the gentleman that all of the people of the State of New York entitled to vote shall be registered—that is uniform—they shall be registered everywhere, in the country and in the city. But, sir, it would be perfect idleness and gross injustice to provide by law for the same means and the same caution and the same care of registering in the country as in cities. The statement of the fact is enough to convince every man that knows the difference between city and country, that I am right when I say that it would be really unjust to require in the country, where people are permanently located, and where there are no comers and goers, where the father is succeeded by his son, and no strangers come there except the hired men, to ask of them to be guided by the same precautions and restrictions as in the cities, where the whole world is afloat, and where thousands upon thousands are transient, that might vote but for the registry law. Now, sir, I submit that there must be a distinction in the legislation on this subject between the cities and the country. You take a city, an election district is composed of a very small territory; every man can go out in the evening after the day's work has been done, and especially with the short hours which are in vogue now, and have plenty of time to stop and register—he goes a quarter of a mile if you please, and thus every man can be registered, he being personally present to direct it. But how is it in the country? A town in the country is sometimes ten miles long, and the farmer—and they are all farmers pretty much, except the blacksmith, the merchant and tavern keeper—they must all go on their horses or on foot, five or six miles to the registry. There is a vast difference between demanding the personal presence of a man in the country, and the traveling five or ten miles to do an act which is wholly unnecessary by a man known to everybody on both sides, a man whose name stands there as his title deed stands in the record of the county, perfectly understood and perfectly known—that he shall run ten miles to be recorded every annual election when the inspectors on both sides, and the registrars on both sides, know every one of these men. But you go to the city, and a man does not know his next door neighbor; he may live there a year, and he does not know who he is or where he is from, or how long he has been there, nor whether he is entitled to vote or not.

The precautions are necessary there, sir, because there is a dense population, and there is a concentration of elements which require the administration of law in a different manner—with a degree of watchfulness, a degree of care, and a degree of skill in the prevention of fraud, which is wholly unknown in the country, and wholly unnecessary, too; and, therefore, I say, although I desire that registration should be uniform yet, I desire that the Legislature should be at liberty to make it applicable to the country and city according to the wants and necessities for the purity to the ballot-box.

Mr. BICKFORD — I would inquire whether an amendment is now in order to that portion of the section, which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] has moved to strike out?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair understands two amendments are already pending so that no further amendment at present, is in order.

Mr. VEEDER called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Veeder, and on Mr. Duganne's name being called—

Mr. DUGANNE — I have paired off with Mr. Larremore.

There being no objection, Mr. Duganne was excused from voting.

Mr. HATCH — I desire to say that I have paired off with Mr. E. P. Brooks, of Tioga.

There being no objection Mr. Hatch was excused from voting.

Mr. AXTELL — I desire to change my vote. I voted under the apprehension that no registry would be necessary, inasmuch as rebels, deserters and those who ran away to avoid conscription, shall be allowed to vote. I desire to change my vote to the negative.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Veeder, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Cochran, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Gross, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Robertson, Rogers, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, Tucker, Veeder, Wickham—37.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clinton, Corbett, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—79.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — I wish to move to reconsider the vote adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Tioga [Mr. Kinney].

The motion was laid on the table.

Mr. LOEW — I move to amend the section as follows:

After the word "citizens," on the fourth line, insert the words, "who shall be," and after the word "districts," on the fifth line, the words, "on the ensuing day of election."

The object of this is to provide that voters may have their names inserted on the register who may become voters between the day of registration and the day of election. The present registry law provides that, but it is not provided for in the section now before us.

Mr. GREELEY — I trust that amendment will be adopted. I do not think it is necessary, but at the same time if it satisfies any one, I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. ENDRESS — It is provided for in the section which reads thus: "who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established."

Mr. LOEW — It does not say whether it is on the day of election or at the time the registry is made.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Loew.

Mr. WEED called for the ayes and noes.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I call for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The question will first be taken on the insertion in line four.

Mr. ALVORD — I hope the gentleman who called for the ayes and noes on this amendment will withdraw it. It seems to me there can be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. WEED — Mr. President —

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Discussion is not now in order.

Mr. WEED — I do not wish to withdraw my call for the ayes and noes and have it beaten.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll and the amendment of Mr. Loew, was declared adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Alvord, Andrews, Barker, Barnard, Beckwith, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Develin, T. W. Parker, Potter, Prindle, Reynolds, Rogers, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Sheldon, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Cott, Veeder, Wakeman, Weed, Wickham—81.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Beadle, Bell, Case, Cheritree, Endress, Farnum, Fowler, Graves, Hammond, Harris, M. H. Lawrence, Merrill, Prosser, Rathbun, L. W. Russell, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Wales, Williams—26.

Mr. WEED — If the first vote is indicative of the sense of the Convention, in order to save time great many instances they will not do it, and the evil to be guarded against does not exist in that case. They are all known on election day; every inhabitant and citizen in the town are known in the rural district; they are not known in the city, and this difference in the law is created by that very fact. never been detained five minutes; it is not a five minutes' walk in any election district in the city of New York from the place of residence of the voter to the place of registration. The place is kept open until nine o'clock in the evening; it is open several days, and no man is shut out; no man is compelled to wait unless he chooses. It is necessary for the purity of elections in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and in the other large cities of this State, that we should have a registry law. Why, sir, last fall some sixteen thousand more were registered in the city of New York than cast their vote, and why did they not vote?

Mr. DEVELIN—Because they did not have time.

Mr. HUTCHINS—They did not vote, or many of them did not because they were found on investigation to have been illegally registered. It was known they were illegal voters, and they did not dare to present themselves for that reason. Why, sir, the names of children two years old were registered. In some districts, not finding names enough, they even registered under the name of goats and I don't know but pigs also, and would have undoubtedly voted upon them had not the fraud been discovered. The gentleman knows as well as I do that whole households were registered from the father down to the youngest son not two years old. Now, will you say it is not necessary that we should have a registry law in the city of New York? Why, you repeat that law and throw the gates open and give time enough to vote, and we can give you half a million of votes in New York city. There is no trouble about it. All we ask in the city of New York is, that we should have a good, fair operative registry law; we have it now, and I believe it will be continued in the future. It is for this reason that I object to putting any other restriction in the Constitution than is absolutely necessary, giving the Legislature discretion to do what in their judgment they may think wise and proper.

Mr. DEVELIN—I ask permission of the Convention to make an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is not now in order.

Mr. BARTO called for the ayes and noes on his amendment.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Barto, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clifton, Cochran, Conger, Daly, Develin, Greeley, Groce, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, Paige, Potter, Robertson, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Weed, Wickham—38.

Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapnam, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. J. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—75.

Mr. DEVELIN—I offer the following amendment to the section:

Add at the end thereof the words: "But no distinction shall be made in any such laws between a native born and naturalized citizen, as to the evidence to entitle such citizen to be registered."

Mr. DEVELIN—The remarks which I had the honor of submitting a moment ago are applicable to this amendment. I propose, however, to reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], who said there had been sixteen thousand voters registered before the last election more than had voted. He also remarked that even the pigs and the goats and children of two years of age had been registered. What the surnames of the pigs and cows were I cannot tell; but I know very well this fact, that the reason why many of the sixteen thousand did not vote arose from the fact that there was not time for the voters to deposit their votes in the ballot-box. Some of the election districts in the city of New York are so large that commencing at sunrise and ending at sunset, the voters could not vote amounting, in some places, to ten or fifteen per cent of the registered voters, and the papers of the city of New York, both democratic and republican, after the election was over and this fact had been ascertained, abused the common council for not having increased the number of election districts in the city. I know of no such fact as the gentlemen charged me with the knowledge of, that persons had been illegally registered. I know of no such fact whatever.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? How many voters were there in each election district?

Mr. DEVELIN—I do not now remember, but I recollect the fact that persons who desired to vote and who had been registered, had not an opportunity, for the time was too brief, or the election district too large. The election district cannot be altered between the first of August and the first of January by the common council. That is the principal reason why these sixteen thousand did not vote. It will readily occur to the gentlemen of this Convention that a great many voters may have gone out of the city, or have been sick, or were occupied so as to prevent them from going to the polls. Thus it always happens that a great many registered voters have not an opportunity of voting on the day of election. This is the explanation I wish to give of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins]. The remarks which I had the honor of submitting to the Convention a few moments ago were not intended in opposition to the registry law. I agree with my friend from Oneida [Mr. Kernan]; I am not opposed to a proper uniform registry

I will withdraw my call for the ayes and noes on the second part of the amendment.

The question was put on the second part of the amendment of Mr. Loew, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to amend the section by adding at the end of section 4 the words "For the purpose of town meetings and the election of town officers, the several towns shall be considered as election districts within the meaning of this Constitution; but no registration of votes shall be required for town meetings, unless the Legislature in their discretion shall so provide."

Mr. WEED—Am I right in understanding that the word general election was inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair so understands.

Mr. WEED—If so, there is no need to insert this.

Mr. BICKFORD—Section 1 provides that an elector may vote in the district where he resides, not elsewhere. Now he cannot vote at town meetings within the strict construction of section 1, unless he votes at the district in which he resides. Therefore it is necessary to provide that the town shall be considered an election district within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. ALVORD—I wish the gentlemen to explain to me whether a town is not an election district for the purpose of electing town officers. It strikes me so.

Mr. BICKFORD—I propose to provide that it shall be considered for that purpose—an election district—that is all.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BARTO—I move to amend the section by inserting, after the word "law" in line seven, the words "and the oath of the applicant for registration as to his citizenship shall be deemed sufficient."

Mr. KERNAN—I call for the ayes and noes. The object of this amendment, I suppose, is to prevent a difficulty which was found to be very onerous on inspectors; requiring, under the registry law, a man who had been naturalized to produce the best legal evidence of the fact, to wit, the naturalization papers issued to him or a copy of the record. The practice is found to be very onerous. I suppose that the oath would be sufficient, the party to be subject to the pains and penalties of perjury if he swears falsely.

Mr. RATHBUN—It seems to me it would not be very onerous for a man to carry his naturalization papers with him, or when he went to be registered. I do not exactly see how that can be. It seems to me to be very easy to carry his papers with him at the time.

Mr. DEVELIN—I would suggest to the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] that in many cases it has come within my knowledge in the city of New York that persons who had been naturalized have lost their naturalization papers, or that they had been destroyed by fires at the residence in which persons resided. The distinction made by the law of 1865, in favor of any native-born citizen, authorizing him by his oath or the oath of his friends to prove his nativity and thus to have his name put upon the register is very unjust. The same law requires the naturalized citizen to produce his naturalization papers, and enacts that no other evidence than the production of his naturalization papers should entitle him to have his name put upon the register unless he can prove to the satisfaction of the registrars that he has lost his papers, or in some other way that he has become a citizen of the United States; now this satisfaction of the registrars is a matter left to their own judgment. There is no appeal from their decision. There are no means by which a person who has voted for twenty years or more, being a naturalized citizen, can appeal. There is no court for him to appeal to from an unjust decision of these registrars—their judgment is final. We invite by every means in our power, emigration; we ask people from abroad to come here and help our citizens to develop the resources of our country; we bring them into our families, to assist our wives in the management of the household; we invite them to assist us in building our railroads and our canals and other works for the improvement of the country; and yet in the highest and most vital point—that of voting—we require from them a process which we do not require from the native-born citizens. I think the naturalized citizen should be allowed to prove his right to be registered, and to vote in the same manner as any native-born person. If a person claiming to be a native-born citizen be challenged as to his birthplace, he can produce his friend or his parents to prove the place of his nativity; but if a foreign-born person should be challenged he cannot produce those who may have been present when he was naturalized, but he must produce his papers, and no evidence except those papers is by law absolutely sufficient and conclusive. Now, this is an injustice, which the people of the State of New York will not, in my judgment, sustain.

Mr. DALY—I would add another reason—
The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman, that two gentlemen have already spoken in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I am opposed to this amendment for the reason that it is unnecessary. It savors too much of legislation, as do many other amendments which have been proposed. If the Legislature, in their wisdom, see fit to change the law that exists to-day, they can do it, but I see no reason why we should determine the matter, by a constitutional provision, of the character now proposed. For that reason I am opposed to it. I would leave this matter in the hands of the Legislature, untrammelled, believing that they will do justice to both city and country as the wants and necessities of the city and the country may hereafter be developed in this respect and the purity of elections may require. I believe that the Legislature will do justice to all parties concerned. So far, the registry law has worked well, and all these assertions in relation to its hardship in the city of New York are the merest nonsense and moonshine in the world. Talk about three days' time being required to get registered in the city of New York! Why, Mr. President, I have been registered at each election since the law was passed, and I have said "it is in your power to make election districts enough, and if you have not now, see that you have a sufficient number the next time," and they went to work last year and divided the city up, making an additional number of election districts, so many that I defy the gentlemen here to state any one district (and he can take his time) in New York where, when the polls were closed, a person was deprived of his right of voting for the reason that there was not time to get his vote in. I think it is exceedingly improbable, if we are to believe the statements that gentlemen make in regard to the stringency with which the excise law is carried into execution on Sunday (that day being in immediate proximity to Tuesday, the day of election), that many of that class of voters could have been sick and prevented from coming to the polls for that reason. Some of them may have been otherwise occupied or employed, which prevented their appearing at the polls on the day of election. I should not be surprised if that was the case. But the fact exists that there were some sixteen thousand persons registered who did not vote, and the further fact exists that upon an examination some twelve thousand of those names were found to have been fraudulently enrolled, that fact being proclaimed through the press, and these men, undoubtedly feeling guilty, did not present themselves to vote. I do not know what ticket they would have voted; I do not charge it upon any party; we are not here legislating, in making a Constitution for a party; it may be that they would have voted for the party to which I belong, and may be not, but at any rate they did not present themselves, and the examination of the registry list shows that some twelve thousand of that sixteen thousand, as I believe, were most clearly fraudulently enrolled.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Develin.

The ayes and noes were called for.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered, when the amendment was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Carto, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Greeley, Gross, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, Morris, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Weed, Wickham, Young—42.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Cooke, Corbett, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagger, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—75.

Mr. HARRIS—I offer the following amendment: "Strike out all after the word 'made,' in line five, so as to strike out 'it shall be made six days before the election.'" I am in favor of providing in the Constitution for a registry law, and providing that no person shall be allowed to vote who has not been registered according to law; but all beyond that is a proper subject for legislative debate, and I hope, therefore, that this provision in relation to the registration of voters six days before election will be left to the Legislature; it is a proper subject for legislative consideration.

Mr. GREELEY—The object of the committee who framed this article, I submit (whether wise or unwise I leave to the Convention to say), was to leave as little as possible to the discretion of the Legislature. It is not at all a question of the wisdom or the virtue of the Legislature; but with reference to this important fact, I pray the Convention not to disregard that what you put in the Constitution of the State you may fairly presume the people of the State to know; whereas what is scattered throughout fifty or one hundred volumes of statutes you know and I know that very many of our people do not, and will not know. This distinction is exceedingly important. The people of the State are fairly presumed and bound to read and understand the Constitution of their State, and they are obliged to conform to its requirements; but they cannot know everything that is contained in all the volumes of the revised and unrevised statutes. Now, if you let these words stand right here, every man will have notice, he will have sufficient notice—"Sir, get your name on the register, or see that it is there, at least six days before election, otherwise you cannot vote." Whereas, if you strike that out, a man may come up to the polls to vote, and he will be told, "You have no right to vote; you ought to be registered." The Legislature changed the law last year, and required the registration to be made so many days before election." How plainly this proposition sets everything afloat, how it makes matters uncertain. I have voted all along against the majority of this Convention on several questions, on the faith of of this, and I am perfectly willing to trust the oath of the elector without requiring him personally to put his name on the registry every year, if you will give me six days to scrutinize and see whether he is entitled to vote or not; but if you will allow him to register the night before, or the day of election, how can you know what names are justly there? This is a reasonable and proper notice given to the voter, to be registered, and to see that he is properly and not illegally registered. I pray the Convention not to strike out this clause.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I have tried to govern my action in this case without any reference to there being two parties in this State, although I have never forgotten it. I voted against most of those who agree with me generally in politics this morning, and tried to act consistently with my views and with the best interests of the State. But I would like to have all parties remember that there is a great law for the purpose of securing purity of elections, but I think the argument used by the gentleman on the other side in regard to sixteen thousand non-voting registered voters, had no application whatever to a registry law, or the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. ALVORD—I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] a question which he did not deem fit to answer, probably because he had not the data before him. I understand the fact to be that in the city of New York election districts are very small, and the number of voters in the district is very much less than they are in the country. At the last election we had probably as much excitement in my city as in New York, and in a single election district we were enabled to take the votes of eleven or twelve hundred without any difficulty through the day. If I understand it right, the election districts in the city of New York do not exceed the average of six hundred for the entire city; so there is no difficulty in that regard of getting out all the voters and giving them a full and fair opportunity to vote. I do not know how it operates in the city of New York, but the result of this necessity of the production of the naturalization papers, or a certified copy of them from the clerk's office in my city, had this ending at the last election, that over one dozen men in that city, who had voted continuously for years and years, and some of them twenty years, as naturalized voters, when they came to the polls they could not produce any naturalization papers, for they never had any. That is the reason. They never had them. Yet they had been voting, and voting persistently, year after year, on the ground that they were naturalized citizens of the State of New York and of the United States of America. But when you came to put the test oath, where were their naturalization papers? They had to confess and acknowledge that they had to begin again and be re-naturalized, for they had lost even the recollection of the fact that they had ever been naturalized.

Mr. DALY—I agree with my colleague from New York [Mr. Hutchins] that there is little difficulty in being registered in that city, probably less than in the country, but that is not a reason why there should not be a uniform rule of registration throughout the State. The object of requiring the presence of the elector to be registered is to prevent frauds on the part of the inspectors in putting names upon the registry lists. It is to prevent this that the elector is required to come and present himself that he may be identified and known before being registered. In my opinion this is quite as essential in the country. The gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], quoting the well known line of Cowper, that "God made the country, man the town," supposes there is a difference in this respect, between the persons who dwell in cities and those who dwell in the country. God made the men who live in the country as well as the men who live in the city. He distributed human character according to the organization of the individuals he created, and it is quite as possible for frauds of the character suggested to be perpetrated in the country, where there is a motive for them, as it is in the city. Perhaps they can be done more extensively in the city than in the country, but that is no reason why they should not be also prevented in the country. I agree that it is proper that we should have a registry law. I am in favor of such a law; but I wish that if we have one it shall be uniform in its operation. With reference to the feature to which the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] objected it is, as I have said, of as much importance in the country, as far as I have any knowledge, as it would be in the city. I beg leave also to say, in reply to him, that the law recently enacted by the Legislature has operated very harshly in respect to the proof of the right of a naturalized citizen to vote. Under the law of 1802 minors, whose parents are naturalized, are naturalized by the naturalization of the parent, and I will mention one instance to show how severely the rule operates which requires a citizen thus naturalized to produce the naturalization papers of his parents. One of the oldest, one of the wealthiest, and one of the most respectable citizens of the city of New York who came to this country an infant; could not, under this law, produce his father's papers; though he had understood from his infancy that his father had been naturalized, and he had himself voted for fifty years. He came into my court to be naturalized in the usual mode, but, upon an inquiry, directed by myself, it was found that his father had been naturalized in my court in 1798, so that this gentleman's naturalization became unnecessary. A great number of persons come from other States, who, as well as persons long resident in this State, do not know when or where, or in what court their parent was naturalized, and they vote generally upon the statement of their father that he had been naturalized, or upon having seen his papers at some remote period, and it is utterly out of their power to procure the proof of the fact of their father's naturalization. As the time is short, I will add nothing further except to say, Mr President, that these difficulties are so considerable, that in my judgment it would be desirable, although it may be liable to the objection that it is more appropriately a matter of legislative detail than as a part of the fundamental law, that the oath of the applicant, subjects to the responsibilities which attaches to it, should of itself be sufficient proof. I do not urge the point now, but merely suggest it in connection with the proposition made by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] to reconsider this subject.

Mr. HUTCHINS—As I understand the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] he accounts for the fact that the entire registered vote was not cast at the last election upon the ground that the greater portion were prevented from putting their votes in because there was not time, or because the voters were sick or otherwise occupied. Now, the gentleman is a little forgetful of his facts. He will bear me witness, that after the presidential election of 1864 it was claimed that there were many voters in line prepared to vote, in some of the districts at the close of the election of that day, and that in some strong democratic districts they were deprived of many votes for that reason. The election districts were made by the common council, most of whom were members of the democratic party. It was therefore be oppressive to require a man to be registered six days before election. He says a man might be sick and unable to attend. It is very oppressive also, I might say, to require a man to be present when he votes. He may be sick on election day, but the law requires him to be there in person. The requirement of the registry law is no more oppressive in one case than in the other, and certainly he will have two or three chances to be registered where he has but one to vote. It cannot be oppressive, and why do men start such unreasonable arguments against the registry law when they admit it is necessary, and also admit that there is a different class of citizens in the city than in the country? It does seem to me that we are spending a great deal of time on this matter—more than is necessary, when we all agree substantially that some kind of a registry law is necessary, and why magnify the difficulties by introducing here entirely unnecessary amendments? We might agree substantially on some kind of registry law and pass it, and not spend day after day here in talking and debating questions that will leave us in the end no better than when we commenced, questions the nature of which do not require the amount of time spent on them. It is time we should show some practical talent, at least in dispatching this work. If we continue to debate every minor question, such as we have had here this morning, we will have no Constitution to submit until after the election. I had not designed to say a word on this subject; I merely mention it as it occurs to me.

Mr. K. BROOKS—I cannot for the life of me comprehend why the gentlemen in the majority of this body are continually drawing distinctions as they do between the city and the country. Sir, I have been in favor of a registry law, and am upon the record in favor of such a law for some sixteen years past as a member of the Legislature, when there were exciting discussions upon questions of this kind. I was in favor of a registry law then; I am in favor of one to-day. I regard it just as necessary for the constituents of my friend from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] as I do for the people of the city of New York, and all that has been said on this subject is, on the one hand, in the form of a sneer toward the cities of the State, and, on the other hand, a sort of pretension on the part of the gentlemen representing the rural districts that they are, in some respects, the superiors of the gentlemen living in the city.

Mr. BELL—Will the gentleman allow me one moment? Would the gentleman require the same kind of registry law in the country as in the city?

Mr. E. BROOKS—I would, and for this reason, that, although it may be in some respects more convenient for gentlemen living in the city to register their names, nevertheless as the motive of registry is to secure a pure ballot and an honest vote, I think that every gentleman residing in the country can afford to put himself to the little inconvenience necessary to secure the most desirable end.

Mr. BELL—Is it necessary he should appear in person every year?

Mr. BROOKS—It is no more necessary in the city than in the country. There are thousands upon thousands of gentlemen living in the city of New York, who have not changed their residence for ten or fifteen years past, and you have no right to impose a burden upon that class of citizens which you do not impose upon gentlemen living in the country. I am in favor of a uniform law; I am also in favor of a pure ballot, and I know of no way to secure a pure ballot unless you impose responsibilities and burdens, uniform in their character upon the people of all parts of the State. Sir, I cannot comprehend the change of opinion in this Convention between the vote that was taken to-day and the vote that was taken on Monday last. Then, by a vote of 50 to 45, we declared ourselves opposed to discriminating against the cities of the State. We have had a vote this morning of 71 against 43 in favor of this discrimination. I suppose I must attribute this great change on the part of the members of the Convention to the special edict issued by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], intimating to this body that they had the power, and that it had become necessary to exercise the power. Let me remind the gentleman that upon a subject like this there may be an appeal even from this Convention to the people, and that if you desire a pure ballot-box, you have no right to enter upon these discriminations. Sir, the representatives of the minority of this Convention may justly make that appeal. It has been said also by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] in regard to the great cities of this State, and especially in regard to the city of New York that it may be necessary to put it under the control of gentlemen representing the interior of the State. The rural districts are now in the majority in the Legislature of the State. Let me tell that gentleman every time the Legislature of New York has interfered with the city of New York, that the practical effect of such interference has been an immense increase of the democratic majority in that city and it will be so just so long as you undertake to exercise political power over that city. Legislative interference does not decrease the ballot there, while it has very largely increased the taxes, and the misgovernment of the city. You have given us by legislative enactments, some nine city commissions. You have given us some three local legislative bodies. You have multiplied our taxes two-fold and three-fold, and just so long as you undertake to discriminate between the city and the country, and to set yourselves up either as better than other men, or as purer than other men, just so long will you fail to accomplish any good result thereby. I hope, Mr. President, therefore, that upon the sober second thought of this Convention, the motion made by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] will prevail, and that in the end of our deliberation upon this subject there may be a uniform law throughout the State in regard to the registry.

Mr. MILLER—I did not intend when I came here to take any part in this discussion. I wish now to say but a word, and to protest against the vote which I shall give against this amendment and against the vote which I have already given in favor of striking out the clause requiring uniformity in the registry law being interpreted as any reflection upon cities or any reflection upon the party that is in the minority here. And I will say to my friend from Albany [Mr. Parker] that in voting against requiring this law to be uniform, I am here to-day representing the democratic portion of the citizens of Delaware county as much as I am the republican portion. We do here to-day merely say this, that a registry law to be of any value at all, should be more strict for the city than for the country. A certain evil exists and it requires a remedy. That evil is not as great in the country as in the city. We want to know who are the legal and proper voters both in the city and in the country. In the country where the people are few, and where the country is sparsely settled, every citizen is known to his neighbor, is known to the inspector of election. They need not such a stringent registry law as in the city where the citizen is not known to his next neighbor. This is the reason. We require a remedy in proportion to the evil, and where the evil does not exist, we do not require that remedy. That is the whole of it. Now to say that the same remedy should be applied in the country as in the city, to my mind seems about as sensible as to require that the physicians should one day of the year prescribe uniform prescriptions throughout the State, and that no man in New York should be required to take jalap unless every man in the country was required to take it at the same time. We want a remedy to answer to the evil, and if the evil does not exist, we do not need the remedy; and I will tell the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] that we are in favor of a uniform law that shall remedy an uniform evil, but where the evil does not exist, why put the burden upon the people? He is not uniform as far as the burden is concerned. In the city, the burden of registration is but slight to what it is in the country. If a man has but to walk a quarter of a mile, it takes but five minutes to be registered, and in the country he must go ten or twelve miles.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I have known people in the city of New York waiting several hours, from six in the evening till midnight, in order to vote.

Mr. MILLER—I have my information from gentlemen on this floor from New York, but I think the distance is but trifling. They have three days for registration. They can take their time, and take it out of the hours of work, but in the country they must take a whole day if the voter is required to go in person; and I ask the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] why he will impose this burden upon the democrats of Delaware.

Mr. PROSSER—I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "established" in line three, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And the Legislature shall provide that a uniform register of all the citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in such election district within the incorporated cities and villages of this State, and not elsewhere, shall be made and completed at least six days before any election, and no person shall vote at such election who shall not have been registered according to law."

It is so entirely apparent that the registration required by the committee should be confined to the cities and the villages that I have offered this amendment excluding it from the country, and not leaving the legislative power to inflict it there. It is entirely unnecessary in the country, as has been already remarked by many gentlemen on this floor. Every voter within a town in the country is known at the polls without the formality, expense or inconvenience of being registered there. Hence I offer this amendment, and while I would not, for any trivial cause, ask the ayes and noes, I ask them on this question.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I trust, sir, this amendment will be adopted. If I understand it correctly, it strikes out the country entirely from the operation of any registry law, and only empowers the Legislature to apply it to cities. While, sir, I have no particular sympathy with those gentlemen who have proposed so many amendments to perfect the details of this law, yet I have steadily voted with them to accomplish such results. It is well known upon this floor that I have advocated the entire abrogation of this power, and to take from the Legislature all right or authority over this matter, confining your laws to election days. If you will look into the criminal statistics of the State, you will see that for thirty years not that number of persons have been convicted of illegal voting, while thirty or forty thousand or perhaps fifty thousand have been convicted for other crimes against property and personal security. I undertook to show that every day this board of officers sat, it cost from $75,000 to $100,000, and every day an attendance was required of one-fifth or one-tenth of the voters of this State, it was a tax upon the productive industry of the country, of from $200,000 to $400,000. And this debate has not changed my mind in this matter at all. I commit nobody to the principle that I have advocated upon this floor, but the consequences of this position I am prepared to take with the people. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has told us that he does not want to send the voter to the session laws. Sir, as long as you give this power to the Legislature, you must send him there. These laws will change with the varying and changing of the political complexion of Legislatures, and they will be just as bad as the venality and partisan prejudices of those Legislatures may make them. I ask whether a registration law is to be a burden on the country or the city at such an enormous expense upon the tax payers and industrial interests of this State. What is it worth? It is shown by the declaration of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] that sixteen thousand persons obtruded their names upon the list in the city of New York who had no right to vote, and including goats, pigs and infants two years old; and he asks why they did not vote? because they were "spotted." You cannot go to the intelligent people of my section of the State and tell them that it is right to put such a burden upon them for the purpose of empowering the Legislature to enact such laws as that. I want the announcement made to go to the country that the people may see its enormity. It is a broad macadamized road to fraud through which you can drive a coach and eight horses. Sixteen thousand illegal voters have passed the ordeal of your commissioners of police, by whom, I believe these registry officers are appointed; and yet it is proposed to put this enormous expense upon the people of the State, and this is the poor return you make to them for it. This debate has only satisfied me that the true ground to take is to strike down this power of registration entirely, confine your laws to regulating the election, and raise the grade of this crime for illegal voting from mere misdemeanor to felony. This will tend more than any registry law to deter men from illegal voting. Throw around a registry law all the safeguards you can, but it will still be useless, as the gentleman has proved it to be by an admission of facts more forcible than any argument I can suggest. It will be an enormous expense upon the tax payers of the State, for a purpose which will prove wholly unavailing. I trust it will be stricken out of this provision.

Mr. GREELEY—The State of New York has over one thousand miles of boundary conterminous with other States and with foreign countries. A dense population is located upon its borders in several States, who are often—in Pennsylvania, at least—interested and excited about our elections. The proposition of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] is that any man who chooses may go forward and swear he is a voter and vote. That is the proposition, made here two or three times. I take that to be a distinct invitation to fraud—not an opportunity merely, but an invitation. We have had contested elections in this Capitol which have proved that Pennsylvanians from Pike county and Wayne, have come over and voted in Sullivan county in this State. In the election of 1844, it was not merely charged, but known, that a very large vote was thrown for President in this State by men who came from Canada for that purpose. They did not vote in the cities either, but in the rural districts. Let me illustrate by a case: The township of Clinton, county of Clinton, is almost entirely settled by Irish people—not therefore less worthy than other people—but they are intensely partisan, and their vote is probably twenty to one on one side. A large proportion of them are yet unnaturalized. You say, if here are people who are not voters, they can be challenged, and their voting stopped. Why, sir, the power of challenge is of no use without the will to challenge. Suppose it is desirable to put up the vote of that township from 260 to 400, by means of illegal voters, what is to prevent it? The half-dozen voters in the minority, if they venture to come to the polls at all, slip in their votes and slink away; or, if two or three of them remain, they dare not challenge that overwhelming, excited majority—intent on swelling their vote to the utmost. Where is your security against this? There are large numbers there who are not naturalized as well as those who are—all good men, I suppose, but yet violently partisan. Pretty soon, there comes a time when no one is around the polls who is not of the majority; and that gives opportunity for these men to go up and vote. Sir, the gentleman from Allegany does not represent Allegany on this question for she has always sent men here to sustain registry laws. He says there were sixteen thousand who passed the ordeal of registration in New York last year. Yes; but they did not pass the polls. We looked over the list, and we found this man did not live where he is registered as living, and there is no house there, and this place is a lumber-yard, and so on; and those so falsely registered were marked men, and they did not dare come forward and vote. Registration is required not so much to keep names off the list as to keep out unlawful votes. If non-voters put their names on the list, and you give us six days in which to detect them, we must take the chance of their getting in their votes. But if you allow every man who may come to the polls to swear in his vote if he will, where is the security against illegal voting? We ask, "Who are you?" "John Williams." "Well, I challenge you." He swears he is a voter, and he votes; then he goes away, and is never seen there again. He has committed a felony, you say; but he is out of the State in an hour, or he is in the lower part of the city, and has voted, and at once taken ship and gone away. The object is not so much to punish the offender as to prevent men from voting illegally; and that is done, and can only be done, by a registration.

The question was then put on Mr. Prosser's amendment, and it was declared lost.

Mr. CONGER—I offer the following amendment to the section, by adding at the end thereof the following:

"But the Legislature shall not establish any laws for registry, in any city, village or town, of electors entitled to the right of suffrage in any election district therein, on any succeeding day of election, unless said laws are severally uniform in their requirements for all cities, and for all villages, and for all towns."

I propose this amendment because it provides a system of registry for towns separate from that of villages, and again distinct from that of cities, and secures a universal registration by appropriate methods for these several kinds of localities. I have taken the section as far as it has been perfected this morning and endeavored to make the best use I can of the propositions that have been inserted, which are pertinent as constitutional provisions, and have added the generic classes of registry. But I would first ask gentlemen who are so earnest in the use of the positive word "shall," what remedy they propose, in case the Legislature disobeys the mandate of the Constitution and refuses to provide any, or positively obliterates all registration laws. Is it designed to indict the Legislature as a body, or will some one man be singled out as the principal conspirator in its violation and thus exposed to infamy, or is it designed that the Legislature may, or the courts, should declare that any general election held after such refusal to pass, or such destruction of laws of registration by the Legislature, shall be null and void? In all the offers I have made heretofore, or which seems to me have been appropriately made to perfect this section, it is sufficient to inhibit the Legislature from doing certain things. On the other hand you undertake to declare what the Legislature shall do, but yet you have no remedy, and you propose no remedy in case they violate your fundamental law. What is the fundamental law worth, in such an event as that? If I understand what the section ought to be, it should be composed of certain general declaratory provisions establishing general rights, and it should inhibit the Legislature from doing certain things, and there it should end. That has been the concurrent opinion advanced by the gentlemen who have on various parts of the amendments to this section, as proposed by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, expressed views coincident with all authoritative expositions of the just design of a Constitution heretofore received. But we have been told this morning that we must pass certain laws for a specific purpose. Again, the whole artillery of gentlemen who have spoken in favor of these stringent provisions have been directed against a certain class of citizens, and no gentleman has been so mealy-mouthed as to refuse to say he means to discriminate against the alien as in favor of the native-born citizen. If gentlemen will take the trouble to look into the census, they will find four hundred thousand aliens recorded as living in the State of New York, and but very little more than two hundred thousand of those are in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, against which cities the whole effort of the majority here is directed to force upon them a partial registration law. Gentlemen will remember that we have distributed over the surface of this State nearly as many aliens as exist in the cities; and while they are directing their ingenuity against that class of inhabitants within their bounds, they must remember that these inventions of theirs may return to plague the inventors. My object is to secure a registration law that shall be uniform in the whole State, and also with reference to certain localities. If we can have a uniform registration law to meet the views of gentlemen who say we need one kind of registration law in the city, and another kind of registration law in the village, and another kind of registration law in the country at large, I cannot see any reason, as the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] intimated this morning, why a man shall be free in a single county from the duty of registering his name merely because he has to ride a certain distance. Will the gentleman put the county of New York against any other county in the State? If two hundred thousand men have to travel half a mile, is there any more harm that ten thousand men should travel ten miles? Is not the physical effort in the one case just as great as it is in the other, and why shall men who insist that registration is necessary for the purpose of protecting us against the vote of the alien being unnecessarily cast when they have two hundred thousand electors scattered all through the State—why should they claim that the towns in this State should be exempt from some form of registry. I submit, sir, that if we are to have anything secured by the Constitution, it should be in a form in which the Legislature shall be debarred from any other form than that which we suppose or propose is right and proper in itself, that we shall have one form of registration for the cities, one form for the villages, and one form for the towns at large. I propose this amendment in the hope that we may be relieved of any further embarrassment on this question, and may be enabled to perfect this section and bring the Convention to a final vote upon it.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost, on a division, by a vote of 44 to 58.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I offer the following amendment. Add at the end of the fourth section the following words:

"And in case of any question arising at the time of voting, as to a right to vote, the same rules of evidence in regard to evidence offered, shall be observed as are applied by courts of law to questions of fact."

Some of the provisions of the registry laws that have been passed in this State have laid down rules in regard to evidence, that I apprehend entirely do away with the rules of evidence that apply to other questions of fact. It is necessary, at the time of the election, that the inspector should be governed in regard to the question of registry, under the law, by the same rules that are applicable in all other cases where there are disputed questions of fact between litigating parties. Therefore, I offer the amendment to meet that difficulty, and upon this general subject I would like to make a few remarks in reference to the charge which has been made here as to the excess in the registration of voters beyond the number of votes deposited. Whether the charge was intended to apply to one party or the other, and to whichever party it was intended to apply, that excess did not rise from the activity or the energy of the commissioners of police of New York in ferreting out the sixteen or eighteen thousand men who were registered, but who did not vote on the day of the election. Any one who believes that may believe any other suggestion that is incredible in modern times, or any miracle equal to those miracles recorded in our Scriptures. It arose simply from the fact that the election districts in the city of New York at the last presidential election were so few in number that persons were excluded from voting, as I can say from my own personal knowledge that from sixty to seventy were waiting at the polls, where I had stood for four hours waiting to vote, were excluded by the setting of the sun from voting for the candidates they had selected. After that the election districts were changed. A subsequent law having provided that it was only necessary to register at one election, there was no re-registering, and the list remained the same for both elections. But in the new election districts the old lists—the original registration lists—were adopted in each of these separate districts of the original and parent districts, if I may so speak, out of which the new districts were formed, so that there was great difficulty, great embarrassment to many citizens of New York to determine which district they should vote in. It is because of that, and not of the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] has suggested, that they were afraid to vote, that the sixteen or eighteen thousand registered voters did not vote. And thus this bugbear of eighteen thousand men attempting to vote without the right is exploded and destroyed. The city of New York has lived as secure as it was before, notwithstanding this charge that has been brought against her by one of her sons.

Mr. HUTCHINS—The gentleman who last addressed the Convention [Mr. Robertson] could not have read the law of 1866. Section two of that law provided that no person in the city of New York or Brooklyn should be placed upon the registry list unless he appeared in person before the inspectors and proclaimed his right to be so registered. Under that provision, last year, a new list was made out, and every person whose name was there, appeared in person to be registered.

Mr. DEVELIN—The gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat [Mr. Hutchins], has not observed all of the law of 1866 himself. If he had read the second section, he would find that my friend from New York [Mr. Robertson] was correct in his remarks. The second section of the act of 1866 declares that the registers shall use the old poll lists; but that if the names of any new voters are to be put upon the poll list, they must appear in person. The fact stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Robertson] is correct; that the names of persons on the poll list of the preceding election, who had changed their residence to other election districts than the one in which they had voted, would appear upon the new registry made from the poll list of their former residence, and also upon the new registry of the election district into which they had removed, and where they had had their names registered upon personal application. It is well known that a considerable percentage of the population of the city of New York frequently changes residence, and that fact alone would account for the omission of one-half of the apparent sixteen thousand voters whose names had been registered but did not vote. The gentleman challenged me to give an instance in which a person has been unable to vote because of the numbers who had been registered in his district, and of the shortness of the time. My friend from New York [Mr. Robertson] has given an instance in his district. In the very ward in which the gentleman [Mr. Hutchins] lives there has been no change in the number of the election districts, although the population has very largely increased since 1864. I have no doubt that in the first district of that ward, with which the gentleman [Mr. Hutchins] is probably not very well acquainted, inasmuch as it is a strong democratic district, very many voters were prevented from voting, by reason of the facts that I have stated.

Mr. HUTCHINS—Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] having spoken once, is not permitted to speak again under the rule.

Mr. AXTELL—I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Robertson] should not prevail. If it should prevail, it would be necessary for this Convention to provide means by which the Legislature should enact that the registers should be furnished with copies of Greenleaf, Phillips and Starkey, in order that they may understand the laws of evidence.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I would ask whether the inspectors are now authorized to proceed in determining cases that may arise before them contrary to the law of evidence, instead of in conformity with it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Robertson, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Cochran, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Gould, Gross, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, Morris, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Rogers, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham—41.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clinton, Cooke, Corbett, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merriitt, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—78.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock, the President pro tem., Mr. FOLGER, in the chair.

Mr. GOULD—I have received a letter to-day from my colleague, Mr. Silvester, stating that he is engaged in court and cannot be present at the sessions of the Convention until Friday next, and he asks leave of absence until that time.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I ask indefinite leave of absence for Mr. George W. Curtis, who is confined to his home by reason of illness.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The PRESIDENT announced the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Champlain to the fourth section reported by the committee as amended, on motion of Mr. Kinney.

Mr. SPENCER offered the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Insert after the word "law," in line seven, the words "except electors absent from their homes in time of war, in the actual military or naval service of the United States."

Mr. SPENCER—The object of the amendment is to provide for a seeming contradiction between section 3 and the provision to which this amendment is appended. Section 3 provides for the taking of the votes of electors absent from the State, and this clause, without the amendment, prohibits any person from voting who is not registered.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I would suggest to the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer] that it would be sufficient to say "except as hereinbefore provided," to save verbiage.

Mr. SPENCER—I have no objection to that, provided it is deemed sufficiently definite to embrace the class of persons mentioned.

Mr. ALVORD—In order to make it definite, I would suggest that the amendment read "except as provided in the third section of this article."

Mr. SPENCER—I accept the amendment.

Mr. WICKHAM—I think there is no reason why soldiers absent should not be registered as well as any other citizens. There is just as much liability to the commission of frauds in taking the votes of persons who are absent, when perhaps, there is no opportunity to interpose by a challenge, as there is among our own neighbors whom we know, the registry of whom we can correct if it is erroneous. There is no reason why soldiers should not be registered as any other citizens. I understand that was the rule with reference to soldiers' votes heretofore, and certainly I see no reason why it should not be continued.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I desire to add in confirmation of what my colleague [Mr. Wickham] has stated in this regard, that it is very notorious to all those who canvassed the votes which were taken in the army of the Potomac during the war, pending the election between Mr. Lincoln and General McClellan, that if there was any place where great frauds were committed, it was in taking votes in the army at that time.

Mr. ANDREWS—This amendment seems to be absolutely necessary. I don't see how we can get along without it; because if these voters—soldiers—are not here but are absent, they cannot appear to be registered; and it seems to be absolutely necessary that we should have the amendment of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer], to enable them to vote.

Mr. GREELEY—I wish to ask the gentleman [Mr. Spencer], to accept an amendment which covers a good deal more ground, and will obviate any objections. I propose in place of his words, this: "and the Legislature shall provide for the registering of such electors as shall be unavoidably absent from the places of registry in their respective districts at the time appointed for registration." That will also cover the case of a sick person who cannot leave to personally apply to be registered.

Mr. SPENCER—I would be willing to accept the amendment if—

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I wish to suggest whether it would not be better still, and accomplish what is desired, by leaving out the clause, "no person shall vote at such election except he shall have been registered according to law."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There can be no proposition entertained except the amendment of the gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain] and the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer].

Mr. A. J. PARKER—This is a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. SPENCER—I wish to have the amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr.

Greeley] read again. I do not think I fully understood it when I accepted it.

The SECRETARY proceeded to again read the amendment of Mr. Greeley.

Mr. SPENCER—I withdraw my acceptance of the amendment, after hearing it more distinctly.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Spencer, and on a division the vote was announced to be 44 to 28.

A DELEGATE—There was no quorum voting. The question was again put on the amendment of Mr. Spencer, when the vote was announced to be 47 to 30.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There is no quorum voting.

Mr. RATHBUN—I call for the ayes and noes. Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. Can we proceed when there is no quorum, to call the ayes and noes? Can we proceed to act upon the amendment when it is declared that there is no quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair did not declare that there was no quorum present.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Spencer, as amended on the suggestion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Archer, Artell, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Mattice, McDonald, Merritt, Miller, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Seymour, Sheldon, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Tappan, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—70.

Noes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, Bowen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Daly, Develin, Greeley, Gross, Hardenburgh, Kernan, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Merrill, More, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, L. W. Russell, Schoonmaker, Strong, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder—32.

Mr. GREELEY—I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer] was adopted, and I ask that my amendment be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion to reconsider must lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. GREELEY—There are two things to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman is out of order, as the motion to reconsider cannot now be heard.

Mr. GREELEY—I am speaking to my amendment. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "law," in line seven, the following: "and the Legislature shall provide for the registering of such electors as shall be unavoidably absent from the places of registry in their respective districts, at the time appointed for registration."

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman substitute the word "necessary" instead of "unavoidable?"

Mr. GREELEY—I think "unavoidable" is stronger. There are two things to be done. One is to allow soldiers who are entitled to vote to vote. That is very well. But what has just been done is to allow them to vote without being registered. In that way, we may have a thousand votes cast in a village where every one knows there are not one hundred lawful voters. I am willing a soldier shall vote provided it is determined that he has a right to vote. Let that be thoroughly established, and then let his name and his vote be taken. Give me six days, and I can scrutinize a man's right to vote. But we are here establishing the principle of letting men vote without being registered at all. We may have votes coming in by the corn-basketful, they will inundate any district in the country. I wish gentlemen would consider this. My amendment provides for the registry of men who are unavoidably absent. There are men absent in the north, in the south and in the west, and they may be too late for registry. This amendment covers the case of soldiers and everybody else. If men are known to be voters in my district, I want them to be registered, and then I want them to vote. But I do protest against the principle of allowing votes to be polled by men who are not registered—whose right to vote is not judicially established. I trust the Convention will adopt this amendment—it provides for the cases spoken of. Now, here is a man we all know to be absent, Mr. A. A. Low, who is now in China. He may come home in time to vote, but not to register. We know where he lives. And so it is with thousands of our best men. Here are men absent constructing the Pacific railroad, and they may not be home in time to register. I do hope the Convention will allow the registration, at least six days previous to election, of men whom we know to be voters, and who are unavoidably absent.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I shall vote for this amendment (though, perhaps, it is not couched in precisely the words I would have chosen), because it proposes to carry out an idea which seems to me of very great importance as affecting the subject we have been discussing to-day. I do not believe it is at all necessary to require a personal presence of the electors at the place of registration. One of my votes cast to-day—

Mr. McDONALD—Will the gentleman allow me to ask the question whether there is anything in the proposed article requiring personal presence?

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—That is in the law as it stands. It is not in the Constitution. It is the law as to the city of New York at the present time, and to a moderate degree it affects the city in which I live. I do not believe that for the purpose of preserving the purity of the ballot-box the requirement that the electors should attend personally at the place of registration is of one farthing's importance. I think it simply imposes a burden on the elector. The way to secure the parity of elections and of the ballot-box, is to have the name and place of residence put up where it may be seen long enough before the day of voting to enable the claims of the person who asserts his right to vote to be scrutinized. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] told us what occurred last year in the city of New York, notwithstanding personal attendance at the polls was actually required by law. A man had registered himself, his minor sons, down to two years of age, I think, and had registered his billygoat as voters. Now, although personal presence is required, anybody could simulate a name that was to be put on the list. But when the list is scrutinized, and people are looking to see that a man does not vote unless he is entitled to vote, the fact would be found out that those sons were minors, and that this creature registered with them, was not a human being but an animal. That is the case in my own town. I speak in regard to the subject with considerable confidence, from the fact that the ward in which I live is as difficult to manage as any place out of the city of New York, or in the State of New York, and we know where it is we found our strength. We found we could reduce a vote of eleven hundred down to between seven hundred and eight hundred, by simply knowing where it was claimed a man lived. If we did not know his face we learned whether such a man lived at the place where he claimed to live. Frauds at elections are not to be avoided by stringent laws requiring the personal attendance of the elector at the place of registration. It is a very great hardship under such a law, if a mechanic is a hundred miles from home he must travel that distance to register his name, to be able to vote on the day of election. So with clerks in the employ of a merchant, one thousand miles from home; they must spend the whole intermediate time between the day of registration and the day of election, at their homes, if they wish to vote. It is a great burden. No important good can grow out of the mere fact of their personal presence at the registration. Believing so, I voted as I did once this morning when I proposed to make this provision uniform throughout the State, and I shall vote for the pending proposition.

Mr. RATHBUN—If this amendment prevails, the best thing we can do, I apprehend, is to strike out all we have done this forenoon in regard to that section. If this provision was to be carried out just as read and applied to the persons necessarily and unavoidably absent there would be a seeming propriety, and a great amount of liberality in it. But under that clause a thousand men could claim they had been unavoidably kept away from home and could not possibly get back to be registered until after the six days had been trencched upon and the time for scrutiny had passed.

Mr. GREELEY—I am sure I have not proposed that any man should vote who is not registered six days before the time of election.

Mr. RATHBUN—I understood that to be the meaning of the amendment as it was read.

Mr. GREELEY—It provides for a registry at a proper time.

Mr. RATHBUN—The gentleman is talking about honest men being absent at the period of registering. But he does not see that all the rogues in the country, everywhere, could take advantage of that very thing; they could pretend that they had been from home; they could surround the place of registry on the day before the election, and hundreds upon hundreds would be registered, under a provision made to accommodate merchants and clerks traveling about the country. I hope gentlemen are not going to eviscerate the provisions of the section thus far secured. If they do they had better abandon the whole thing. In regard to personal attendance, it has been said to be a great hardship in New York. A year ago last fall I made a mistake in getting to the polls. I found them closed a little before sundown, as I thought, but I was a little too late, and before I could vote last fall I had to personally attend upon the registrars and ask them to put my name on the list of voters. They consented to do so, and I voted afterward. That is the way of it in the little city where I reside, and that is the hardship that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] talks about, and which the people of New York and Brooklyn have to encounter. I cannot say that I have suffered very much in traveling thirty or forty rods out of the way to have a board of registry put my name down. I cannot exactly see how anybody has. In this registry law we must have general rules for the government of the great body of the people. Now there will be accidents. Men will be kept away from home but not on one side only. Men will be sick, but not sick in one party alone. There will be sick men on both sides, and each side will lose votes. If a man resides in the State of New York, but is outside of the State, and moving toward his home, intending to arrive before the election, the cars run off the track and he is too late, it is a great hardship that he should lose his vote for such a cause. But is it necessary that we should provide against these accidents which occur, to prevent a man's presence at home to register in time, to allow his voting at an election? We must adopt general rules. Both sides will suffer equally from untoward accidents. If we attempt to provide for all these details, we will fritter away the whole thing, and will finally be as bad off as though we had no registry law.

Mr. HAND—I do not know that I understand the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] or whether I am mistaken. Does the amendment provide that those persons who are unavoidably absent from home shall be registered six days before the election by their friends. I so understand it.

Mr. GREELEY—That is substantially the provision.

Mr. RATHBUN—That does not improve it a particle; it makes it rather worse.

Mr. DUGANNE—I move to amend by striking out the word "unavoidable."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The amendment is out of order, there being two amendments pending.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I call for the ayes and noes. A sufficient number seconding the call, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Archer, Barnard, Barto, Bergen, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, C. C. Dwight, Ferry, Flagler, Fullerton, Greeley, Gross, Hale, Hand, Hardenburgh, Kernan, Landon, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Merritt, Monell, More, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Frosser, Robertson, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham—62.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bowen, Carpenter, Case, Charities, Cooke, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Hammond, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketchum, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Miller, Pond, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Van Gott, Williams—52.

Mr. DALY—It seems to me we have occupied the principal part of the day in the attempt to pass a registry law. That, in my judgment, is a matter of detail, belonging properly to the Legislature. I therefore offer the following amendment:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

SEC. 4. There shall be, throughout the State, a registration of all persons entitled to vote. Laws for that purpose shall be enacted by the Legislature, which shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Daly] is not in order.

Mr. ALVORD—I move to reconsider the vote just had, by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion lies on the table under the rule.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section:

"Personal attendance of an elector upon registration shall not be required."

The object of the Convention seems to me to be to provide for the enactment of a registration law, through the Legislature, which shall preserve the purity of the elections. During all the discussion upon the various amendments that have been presented I have not been able to conceive why it is necessary that an elector shall be required personally to appear upon registration day that his name may be enrolled. There seems to have been a difficulty in reconciling the feelings of the country with those of the cities. Let us consider it in that aspect. Is it necessary in the country that there should be a personal attendance? Those who are familiar with the mode in which registration has been had in the country know very well that it is the fact in almost all the country districts, that the electors are known, and if new names be added to the list, a period of six days suffices to notify the whole town or district in which these people are to vote, that such and such persons have been entered on the list and propose to vote at the election. The list is scanned and it is ascertained then whether these persons are really electors or not, and the public are ready on the day of the election to determine it, and interpose a challenge if necessary. The trouble seems to be in our cities. You take the city of New York. It is said that the people there do not know the place of residence of the persons whose names are given in the registry. Pray how do they determine upon the day of election who is to be challenged and who is not to be challenged? It is by subsequent inquiry that the duty to challenge is to be ascertained. It is during the six days that the name of the person registered stands upon the list, notifying the whole public in the district where he is to vote, that he intends to vote. That is the way that his right to vote is ascertained. Now, does it depend at all upon accident whether he has been presented for the purpose of having his name registered? Not in the least. Nor does his coming there and presenting his name in any considerable degree identify him. When the day of election shall come, the question whether he is really an elector or not is decided upon information obtained within the six days that his name remained for the inspection of the public. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has truly said that is the principal point of the efficacy in this law. Then why should we require the laboring men in our cities to be at the inconvenience of appearing personally and having their names registered? I understand it has been the practice in some cities, —in the city of New York, for instance, and it is a very great inconvenience. Now, I wish to have inserted in the provisions on this subject a provision like that one which I have embodied in this amendment, that no law should impose this burden on a citizen. It is not necessary for the purpose of preserving the purity of election. The right of a voter is ascertained otherwise, as I have shown, and the test comes upon the investigation made in the six days preceding the election, and that test is applied on the day of the election.

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I am very sorry to disagree with the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour]; but I really think that the liberal amendment offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] covers all the objections he has recited. I know from my own experience that if a man can, the best way for him is to register his own vote. Then there is no mistake about the house he lives in or the number of the street or locality in which he is a resident. Hereafter, there has been a great deal of unnecessary registering; the registry list has been incumbered to a great degree. As I said at the commencement of my remarks, I think the liberal amendment of the gentleman from Westchester covers all the cases of necessary absence, also absence on account of sickness, or of being employed as laboring men in different portions of the country or State from that where the registry is going on, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. ROBERTSON — I have always understood the registry law to be a mere claim of the title to vote. On the first entering of the names on the record of the parties who register, I do not understand there is any right of investigation on the part of those who have the registry in charge. If they do not know a man they can inquire after the list is made out, as to his home, his personnel, and other matters. Then is the time to investigate whether or not the parties claiming a right to vote shall be allowed to vote. You thus take away the necessity, on the day of election, when a party presents himself for the first time to vote, of inquiring into such matters at that time. This registry is merely for the purpose of presenting his claim to the right to vote. There is nothing determinate by the registry of a man's claims to the right to vote, he not being entitled to a vote otherwise. It is therefore nothing more than a registry of this kind, to be had before the question is tried whether or not he has the right to vote. Therefore I can not see the necessity of a party appearing in person. Of the myriads who present themselves but very few are known to the authorities who have charge of the registry. Hence, it would be perfectly absurd for them to exclude any one on the ground they do not recollect his face, or include him on the ground they do recollect his face. When he presents his name and his habitation, persons who are interested can investigate whether he has the right to vote at the election. I can see no reason why he should present himself before a tribunal who have no right to exclude him or include him in the electoral list.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — As I understand this section, there is no provision in it that requires the personal attendance of a man in order that he may be registered. As it stands it provides he shall be registered and at least six days before the election, and shall not be allowed to vote without such registration. But there is no provision requiring personal attendance for registering. It is for the reason that I do not wish to have here prescribed what rules as to details shall obtain that I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour]. It provides for just exactly what every man ought to desire who wants an honest election. It provides for exceptional cases of those who are compelled to be away at the time of registration, and that the registration shall take place six days before the election. It seems to me the case must be all covered as it stands now. I shall therefore vote against any further tinkering of this article.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Seymour and it was declared lost.

Mr. POND — I move to amend the section by substituting therefor the following:

SEC. 4. Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established. And the Legislature shall provide that a register of all citizens of the State who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, on the ensuing day of election, shall be made or completed before said election and at least six days before any election, in all the cities and incorporated villages of the State, and in all the other portions of the State, at such times and manner as shall be provided by law.

Mr. ALVORD — It seems to me that this will clear the whole of this matter of any cloud that may be around it, by reason of the divers and sundry propositions suggested from time to time in this Convention to-day. It strikes me that almost the entire of the argument which has been heard here, could with greater propriety have been given before a legislative body, rather than before a body like this Convention, having for its object the making of the organic law of the State. I would be entirely satisfied to stop even short of what the gentleman has stated in this regard, and leave it where it was left originally this morning, leaving out the last portion, "that such laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State." It seems to me to be satisfactorily demonstrated, and that it ought to be agreed to on the part of all men in this Convention, that there should be uniformity of registration; in other words, that there should be registration of voters throughout the length and breadth of the State, with an equality of the workings of that registration, so far as regards its applicability to localities, and differing as regards cities and the country. Now, we fix the fact beyond controversy by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], that there should be a registration of the voters of this State completed at least six days before the election in all incorporated cities throughout the State, but, so far as regards the country, leaving that to the Legislature. Now, it strikes me that this is what should obtain. We will get then what we desire, a registration of voters. If we get a registration of voters, we should leave the manner in which that registration shall be completed, so far as regards the country, to the Legislature. So far as regards the aggregation of individuals in cities and incorporated villages, time enough should be given for examining the record that is made before election. In the country there is no particular desire for this, because, as has been said again and again, there is abundant means of knowing who are the electors when they come to the polls. In the absence of general topics of conversation and inquiry, they talk about their neighbors. They know where they live; they know how many hired men their neighbors have and how many sons they have. In cities we know not our next door neighbors. They are constantly passing before us like the waves of the sea — here this moment, away the next. It is for that reason we desire a length of time before the election sufficient to satisfy us that parties professing to reside in our immediate midst have the right, the same as ourselves, to go to the polls and vote. In this view of the case, it strikes me the proposition removes all the difficulties around the various amendments proposed here to-day. In my opinion, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], had better been offered earlier in the morning. If it had obtained the sanction of the majority of this Convention, it would have saved us all the trouble we have been laboring under from early morning until now. It is merely taking the back track—going away back to the same position from which we started, and attempting to eliminate from this article this idea of uniform registration. It is a mere rehash of more than half a dozen amendments we have been voting down consistently and continuously during our labors this day. I trust, therefore, excluding everything else, the simple, plain proposition of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] will obtain the approbation of this Convention.

Mr. DALY — I agree entirely with the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. When the amendment offered was ruled out by the Chair, I supposed it was on the ground of a previous proposition which had been passed upon. I propose to express more briefly than the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] what I suppose is the proper course on this subject, that is, to leave the whole subject to the Legislature after providing expressly for the general registration of the voters of this State, substituting for section 4 words to this effect: "There shall be a registration of all persons in this State who are entitled to vote, and laws for that purpose shall be passed by the Legislature," leaving it entirely for the Legislature to fix the details of those laws. I think we are passing out of the region of fundamental law and occupying time by passing what is known as legislative law in the various amendments which have been proposed during the course of the day. If the action of the Convention upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] should be unfavorable to it, I then propose to offer this amendment, which will briefly express that after providing for a general registration all the details on this subject shall be left to the Legislature.

Mr. GREELEY — What will be the condition of the voters of this State, if the amendment is adopted? They all know they have to be registered; the Constitution will tell them that. But I want the Constitution to read plainly that they must be registered six days before the election, otherwise a man may next year present himself before a board of registry: "I want to be registered." It is Saturday before election. "You cannot be registered." "Why, it is only three days before election. I registered on Saturday last year." "Yes; but the law has been changed since then." Thus you will have voters trapped all over the State. All voters do not and cannot know every law that is passed by our Legislature from year to year; but they may be fairly required to know what is plainly set forth in the Constitution. I pray that you will not entangle the voters in this net. I ask that there may be not only one law for the country and the city, but that the voters of our State be protected against this peril of losing their votes by annual changes of law. This year, the interval between registering and voting will be extended; next year, it will be shortened. Consequently, you may have fifty thousand voters who will need to know what they have to do in order to establish their right to vote. The Constitution should be plain on this point. We ought to leave as little as possible subject to change by annual legislation. I trust there will be no change of the article in this respect. Let us not establish the principle that the Legislature may change from day to day the conditions upon which a voter can exercise the right of suffrage. Let us stand fast by the good we have done.

Mr. TAPPEN — I believe from the votes which were cast this morning, that it was intended to restrict registration to the general elections. Therefore I propose to amend by inserting after the amendment of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], the word "general."

The PRESIDENT — It is not in order.

Mr. DEVELIN — I rise to ask whether this amendment of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] proposes there shall be a registration for all elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — As far as the Chair is informed, it is not restricted to any election.

Mr. DEVELIN — Is it not in conflict with the vote we took this morning, confining it to general elections?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of opinion that it is.

Mr. DEVELIN — Then I submit that it is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The opinion of the Chair is that it is in order, as it includes much more than that.

Mr. TAPPEN — Will it not be in order for me to move to amend that amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of opinion that it will not.

Mr. TAPPEN — Will the gentleman accept my amendment?

Mr. POND — No, sir; distinctly not.

Mr. BURRILL — I would like to ask the mover of this amendment a question, that is whether or not he designs by it to provide a time when the registration shall be completed in cities and villages before election, and not to provide any time when it shall be completed in other portions of the State?

Mr. POND — That is the amendment I have sent up. In the cities and incorporated villages the time shall be six days; in other portions the manner and time shall be fixed by law.

Mr. BARKER — Does the gentleman intend by that that no elector shall vote unless his name is registered?

Mr. POND — Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKER — He has not said it very plainly.

Mr. POND — Not very. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the pending question to be on the amendment of Mr. Pond.

Mr. DEVELIN — I called for a division of the question.

SEVERAL DELEGATES — No! no!

Mr. DEVELIN — There are so many "no-noes" around here that I will withdraw my call [Laughter].

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the ayes and noes on the amendment of Mr. Pond, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes — Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Archer, Baker, Beadle, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Fowler, Fuller, Gould, Hand, Hitchcock, Houston, Krum, Landon, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merritt, Opdyke, Pond — 22.

Noes — Messrs. Andrews, Axtell, Barker, Barnard,

Barto, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Chertree, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Develin, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Flagler, Folger, Fullerton, Goodrich, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Harris, Hitchman, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Lapham, Law, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Merrill, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Robertson, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Sheldon, Smith, Spencer, Strong, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Williams — 94.

Mr. DALY — With the view of bringing this matter to a termination if possible, and to get through with this section I offer the amendment I suggested:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the word "establish" and insert the following: "The Legislature shall provide for a registry of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, to be completed at least six days before any general or municipal election. No person shall vote at any such election, unless registered as herein provided."

Mr. VEEDER — I should think, Mr. President, from the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], that it simply requires the passage of an act for registration by the Legislature six days before the election, and that the time does not refer to the registration of voters, although the gentleman undoubtedly intended that it should.

Mr. DALY — I move to make it six days, which will obviate the difficulty.

Mr. ROBERTSON — It requires at least six days.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — The same difficulty occurs in reference to this amendment that there is in the original section in this respect. It provides that no person shall vote unless registered as herein required. It makes his right to vote to depend upon the action of the Legislature. True, it requires that the Legislature shall provide registry laws, and so did the original section; but suppose the Legislature fails to do so; is the citizen to be deprived of his right to vote in consequence of that? I suggest this as an objection to the amendment and to the section itself, that it may be provided for, either by striking out the section or providing that such shall be its effect after the Legislature shall have passed laws regulating the registry. The section provides that the Legislature shall provide a law in regard to the registry. If it fails to do so —

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Then there is no law.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — And then they are not registered according to law and have no right to vote. If they have no law and are not registered according to it, of course they are precluded from voting.

Mr. RATHBUN—I wish to inquire in regard to that amendment. As I understand it, it comes in at the end of the third line. I wish to inquire what the effect would be, if this amendment was adopted, upon the previous amendments which have been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands that it would take the place of all previous amendments.

Mr. RATHBUN—Then I am in favor of it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Daly, and it was declared carried. The ayes and noes were called for on the amendment, and a sufficient number seconding the call, they were ordered.

Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that this is substantially, indeed, almost word for word, reinstating the printed section that has been before the Convention, and thus, in an indirect manner, reconsidering on the spot the vote that was taken embodying in that section the provision that the Legislature shall provide for the registration of electors who were unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Daly] is in order as it proposes to substitute the word "municipal," which has not heretofore been used.

Mr. DALY—I am willing to substitute any matter which has been heretofore adopted by the Convention as a part of the amendment if it is necessary.

Mr. KETCHAM—I desire to suggest that the amendment proposed by the gentleman [Mr. Daly] be made a substitute for the whole section. There seems to be no necessity for the first clause of the section with that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wayne [Mr. Ketcham] is not in order, there being two amendments pending.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I would like to read a substitute which perhaps the mover will accept. It is this: "Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs, which shall be made and completed, at least six days before any general election of the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established, and after such registration—

Mr. ALVORD—That leaves out the word "municipal."

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I will put that in if it is desired.

Mr. DALY—I do not accept the substitute.

Mr. DEVELIN—I desire the mover of the amendment to inform me what will be the effect if that amendment is adopted—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The discussion is not in order. The gentleman [Mr. Develin] can speak to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly].

Mr. DEVELIN—It was my desire to speak in regard to that. I desire to ask the mover of the amendment what would be the effect of that amendment, if adopted, if the Legislature did not pass any law on the subject? Would anybody vote?

Mr. ROBERTSON—I would suggest to the mover of the substitute to insert the words "when and" before "as" so that it will read "when and as required by law." That I think will meet the suggestion of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair must rule that this desultory conversation is out of order.

Mr. GREELEY—I still desire to know whether the adopting of this amendment will strike out the one we have just adopted, which provides for the registering of voters who are unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that if this is adopted, it will strike out all after the word "established" in the third line.

Mr. GREELEY—Then I must vote against it.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—Mr. President—

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to a point of order. The ayes and noes have been called, and a member had answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] is in order, if he desires to speak on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly].

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I do. In the present Constitution we have a provision in reference to the registering of voters. The Legislature of this State in the face of this provision has provided that no one can register the name of the voter except the voter himself. I was very glad to hear the proposition come from the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that this in some way should be remedied. If the Legislature, in the face of a plain provision to register, says that a voter must register himself, and if he does not, he cannot vote on election day, I think the Convention should put in the Constitution a plain provision preventing them from passing any law disfranchising citizens of this State who are necessarily absent or sick.

Mr. LAPHAM—Will the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] inform me in what part of the Constitution he will find a provision for registration.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I think there is in the present Constitution such a provision. Will the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] come to my assistance and state where it is? What I refer to is section 4 of article 2, which reads thus: "Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established." That is just the same. They have passed the present registration law which we have in existence, and founded its constitutionality upon that very provision. The courts have decided, I think, that the first law of the Legislature in 1858 was constitutional under that provision. Upon that provision of the Constitution they passed the present law for ascertaining the persons who are entitled to vote; and if they give us such bad laws under that provision, there ought to be, I say, some provision in the Constitution preventing them from passing any laws which shall prevent a voter unable to attend and be registered, by reason of sickness or absence, from having his name registered by others. I think that this Convention should see to it that the provisions of the Constitution are plain upon that point. That is the only objection I have to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly]. I think that the provision moved by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] covers the ground.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I think it seems to be assumed that the registry law as it now stands requires in the cities of New York and Brooklyn that every voter should appear personally before the board of registry. There certainly is no such thing in the law and there never has been such a requirement in the law as I have read it. It is only on the final completion of the registry, on the last day when they meet; that names are prohibited from being added without the personal appearance of the voter.

Mr. VEEDER—I call the attention of the gentleman [Mr. E. A. Brown] to the seventh section of the statute in reference to the cities of New York and Brooklyn, which reads as follows:

"In the cities of New York and Brooklyn the name of no person shall be placed upon the said register unless he shall appear in person before the said inspectors and prove to their satisfaction his right to vote at the next election in the election district in which he claims the right to so vote."

Mr. E. A. BROWN—It provides that they shall make up the registry list from last year's poll list. That provision which the gentleman [Mr. Veeder] cites is simply applicable to the last day, when they finally complete the registry. In making up the registry they take the list of last year, and then, on the last session of the board, this rule applies, that no person can be added except they personally apply.

Mr. VEEDER—I desire further to correct the gentleman. He is mistaken in his statement in reference to the statute. I have read the statute word for word, as it is enacted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] is out of order, he having already spoken.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I have called attention to the law as I understand it, and I have certainly labored very hard three or four times to understand it, in localities where this provision was supposed to apply, and it will take a man a week to look it through, but I simply desire to call the attention of the Convention to the subject.

The roll was called on the amendment of Mr. Daly, and it was declared adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bickford, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clinton, Corbett, Daly, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Gould, Grant, Graves, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Huntington, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Leé, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Pond, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Van Cott, Wakeman, Williams—66.

Noes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bell, Bergen, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Cochran, Conger, Cooke, Corning, Develin, Greeley, Hale, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Krum, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Prindle, Robertson, Rolfe, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wales, Weed, Wickham—53.

Mr. VEEDER—I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] has just been adopted.

The motion was laid on the table.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I desire to move the amendment which I offer.

"Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs and by registration, which shall be made and completed at least six days before any general election, the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established, and after such registration laws have been enacted, no person shall vote at such election who shall not have been registered according to law."

It will be seen that the object of this amendment is to leave the regulation of this subject to the Legislature, with the exception of securing the six days, provided, the right to vote shall not be affected until the registration law shall have been enacted.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. T. W. Dwight, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HALE offered the following amendment:

"All registry laws shall be uniform throughout the State, except the cities and incorporated villages thereof; and they shall also be uniform in all the cities and incorporated villages of the State."

I wish to state very briefly the motives with which I offer this amendment. The report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and also the report of the Committee of the Whole have adopted this language: "But such laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State." A majority of the Convention voted in favor striking out that portion of the report. I voted with the majority. But the only reason I have heard for objecting to that provision is that there must be injustice in requiring the same strictness in sparsely populated portions of the State that we do in cities and villages. There are many provisions which would be extremely inconvenient for persons who reside in my part of the State for instance, which might be complied with without inconvenience by residents of cities and villages. I have heard no other reason except that, and that is a reason which applies to all cities and incorporated villages, and an objection which applies equally to all other parts of the State. I submit, therefore, that this amendment will meet the only objection which has been raised against this provision in the Committee of the Whole, and secure positively, uniformity of registration which may be had upon this plan.

Mr. ALVORD—I would suggest to the gentleman from Essex, [Mr. Hale] that in very many incorporated villages, of this State, the election districts run outside of the villages into the country, and take in a large portion of the country. Indeed, I hardly know an exception in the limits of the State. It, therefore, strikes me that if the gentleman desires uniformity, he should accept my suggestion, so that it might read "except those in which the election district is part village and part country," or leave "villages" out entirely, which would be still better.

Mr. HALE—I have no objection to accept that.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I would ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] if the amendment just adopted did not include municipal corporations also.

Mr. ALVORD—If the gentleman will permit me a moment: certainly it did, but it has reference to municipal elections and general elections, where the limits of a district extend beyond the village.

The question was put upon Mr. Hale's amendment, and it was declared lost.

Mr. LAPHAM—I move to amend the amendment of Mr. Daly by inserting after the word "general" the word "special," so that it will read "general, special and municipal." The amendment as adopted fails to provide for the cases of special elections which may be ordered in many instances, and to which the principle of registration applies equally as well as to general elections; and I think the amendment I have suggested should be adopted.

Mr. BARKER—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? If the word general does not apply to elections in which all may participate, and not to any local or municipal election, special elections would apply in that instance, so there would be a new registration.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Lapham, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 54 to 40.

Mr. VERPLANCK offered the following amendment:

"When a person entitled to the right of suffrage shall be registered in any election district, his name shall be kept on the register of said district so long as he shall remain a resident thereof."

Mr. VERPLANCK—Under the amendment which has been adopted requiring registration for municipal and special as well as general elections the electors of the city of New York will be engaged a considerable portion of the year in the business of registry. Electors who are registered as voters at general elections, will have to be registered for municipal and special elections. I deem it therefore proper that this amendment should prevail. An elector who has been registered in his district, should not be obliged to go through the trouble of being registered again so long as he remains a resident of the same district. If an elector registers his name to-day there is no reason why he should be required next Spring or any other time so long as he remains a resident of the district to be again registered. Registry laws interfere with the right, which gentlemen have been pleased to term a natural and an inalienable right, and while electors it seems must submit to a registry law I insist that it shall be a plain, practical and fair law, and designed to answer the purpose for which it is enacted. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] insists that a registry should be had of all persons who claim they have a right to vote, so as to ascertain whether those persons are entitled to vote in the district in which they are registered. But when you undertake to do anything more than this, you commit violence upon the right of suffrage. Mr. President, I am opposed to leaving to the Legislature the establishment of the registry law. I had in my mind when I prepared this amendment, the action of a former Legislature, but I did not care to have the attention of the Convention particularly called to it; but you know, Mr. President, and I know, that some of the Legislatures have attempted, under the guise of a registry law, to interfere with the right of suffrage. A former Legislature provided that no man born out of the country should be registered unless he produced his naturalization papers. The object and design of it was to prevent registration, and what was the effect? Naturalized citizens who had lost or mislaid their papers, could not get their names registered. There were boards of registrars who insisted that every man who was born abroad and claimed a right to vote, should produce his naturalization papers. A person under eighteen years of age when his father was naturalized, is by law a voter, when he comes of age and needs no such papers, yet thousands of such persons were refused registration because they could not produce naturalization papers. I know the fact personally that in the city of Buffalo many such persons actually took out papers in order to avoid this objection. Such requirements are wrong, and an outrage upon this right, and this Convention should, as far as possible and practicable, settle the law of registration, and make it as easy as possible for the elector. In the first place provide that six days before election the elector shall be registered, and when thus registered, his name shall remain upon the register so long as he remains a resident of the district. I see no good reason why men in our manufacturing establishments, or in other industrial pursuits, should be required from year to year to lose their time in attending a board of registry when they are well known to everybody in the district as qualified voters.

Mr. RATHBUN—I hope, sir, we will get through legislating pretty soon, and take up the matters we are sent here to attend to—that is, to form a Constitution. The last amendment contains not only enough, but in my judgment more than should have been put in. Now we have an additional proposition from the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck], to legislate and to provide by law that if a man is upon the registry one year, he is to stand there as long as voting is maintained in the State, I presume.

Mr. VERPLANCK—That is the law now.

Mr. RATHBUN—I beg your pardon. Whether a man votes or not, according to the resolution of my friend from Erie [Mr. Verplanck], whether he is properly registered or not, whether it is a cheat or fraud to put his name on the registry, it is to stand there until somebody can be found to occupy his place and vote for him. It is not to be taken off, but his name will stand there and he will be entitled to vote. The whole thing is perfectly absurd, in my judgment, for a Convention forming a fundamental law of the State to go on inserting provision after provision with regard to the rights and privileges of an elector, and undertake to define all his rights, and prescribe by law for the whole thing in the Constitution itself. Gentlemen are so much afraid of the Legislature that they cannot even be trusted to pass laws to regulate the rights of suffrage, because they may possibly pass laws which are a hardship upon somebody. Hardships upon somebody bear upon both sides, which gentlemen seem to forget, they talk as if the person talking represented only the person wronged. The provisions operate not upon one side but upon all parties, and does the gentleman from Erie believe that anybody here designs to do injustice to the people who are to pass upon this question, and that we are about to create a Constitution which must operate prejudicial to one side and beneficial to another. The thing is absurd. Parties, to be sure, are divided now—and divided in a manner which gives, as insinuated by the argument, a larger proportion of the foreign vote to one side than the other. But how long is that to remain. Are we talking about a thing which is to remain stationary and perpetual, or one which is likely to change. I believe I can recollect when there was a different state of things, and I apprehend that gentlemen will live long enough to see a change, and long before the Constitution we are trying to agree upon will terminate. There will be change after change, and that vote will be first upon one side and then upon the other. The same Constitution is to regulate the rights and privileges of those people no matter which side they are on or how they intend to vote. They must be governed by the same general rules and regulations; we cannot provide for hardships as we go along. I submit we ought to be content to form a solid basis upon which the Legislature can build, by legislation, the provisions which are to govern in regard to the right of suffrage.

Mr. HITCHMAN—Now, Mr. Chairman, there is certainly a very grave error in adopting such a resolution as that proposed by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck]. Is he mindful of the fact that in the city of New York and other cities in the State, the houses are numbered, and that when an individual moves from a house his name must still be continued on the list as voting from that particular number from which he was originally registered? Is he aware that this would lead to interminable confusion, and that there can be no end to it? Nothing will more surely bring about such confusion than the adoption of this amendment; and I wonder that a gentleman could be found upon this floor who would advocate such a thing as a registry law for the people of the State of New York. That matter, to my mind, belongs to the Legislature of this State, and not to this Convention. It is clearly in my view out of all reason to propose any such thing in the fundamental law. Make your laws to punish illegal voters, but let the citizen of the State exercise the right that belongs to him just as freely as he exercises the right of walking the earth, or participating in the affairs of life. I can see no sort of reason why this Convention should for a single moment pass a registry law. It is an odious enactment among a free people, and should be unknown. There should be no such thing found in the fundamental law of any State in this land, nor upon any statute book. Let those who are guilty of fraud and who vote illegally be punished, and for that purpose let statutes be passed, but not for the purpose of interfering with the rights of the citizen in the free discharge of the duties that belong to him. I hope this amendment will be voted down, and that all amendments looking toward the establishment of a registry law in this State will also be stricken out of the instrument which we shall here form.

Mr. VERPLANCK—It being, I think, evident that this Convention are to put into the Constitution some provision for a registry, I would ask the gentleman if it is not best to make it as little onerous as possible?

Mr. HITCHMAN—Inasmuch as I am opposed to all registry laws, and as I have no evidence that this Convention is determined to put such a thing into the Constitution I shall vote against all propositions looking to that end; and least of all, I say, is the amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Verplanck] practicable.

Mr. DEVELIN—It strikes me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck] is eminently proper after the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly]. This latter amendment provides that there shall be a registration completed six days before each general or municipal election. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Erie is, that the name of every voter appearing on the poll list shall remain there so long as he resides in the same election district. In the city of New York we have our municipal election one month after the general election. The general election occurs in November. The municipal election takes place on the first Tuesday of December. More than one hundred thousand voters are registered for the general election previously to the first of November. If the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] shall be maintained, all these voters registered for the November election who desire to vote at the December election, within thirty days afterward, must be re-registered. This necessarily results in a useless and expensive operation; because the changes between the first Tuesday of November and the first Tuesday of December, in the way of change of residence, are and will be very small indeed. I do not know exactly the time at which the municipal elections are held in the other cities of the State, but I believe they take place in April. Then between November and April I presume there are not in the smaller cities many changes of residence before the municipal election occurs. But voters must be re-registered there also, unless this proposed amendment prevails, if they desire to vote at the next municipal election, which in regard to these cities also involves an unnecessary and expensive operation. The gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] intimates that this proposed amendment is legislative in its character. He admits that a portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman now on my right [Mr. Daly] and adopted, is also a matter of legislation. If, therefore, we have a part of the legislation on this subject, let us complete it in the Constitution, and make it so that we shall not have these unnecessary processes. Now in regard to the operation of registry laws. Every registry law that has been passed has been aimed at a certain portion of the electors of this State. They do not operate equally upon each party. The registry law of 1840 was limited to the city of New York, and was intended to reduce the democratic majority there. The registry law of 1865 included a provision which I mentioned this morning, requiring a naturalized citizen to prove his right to be registered by producing his certificate of naturalization. That provision was aimed at the democratic majority in the city of New York, under the idea that the naturalized citizens there could not produce their certificates of naturalization, and thus would be kept off the registry. This law did not operate equally upon each party, because, according to the admission of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun], there are more naturalized citizens who belong to the democratic party than to the republican party. No test is asked of the colored man who has never voted. He is not obliged to prove his birth-place or offer any record evidence of his right to be registered; but when you come to the naturalized citizen, he is obliged to produce record evidence that he has a right to vote. All that legislation, I say, has been aimed altogether at the democratic party, and every democrat upon this floor has a right, from the experience of the past, to suspect any legislation that may be had by the now dominant party on the subject of a registry law.

Mr. GOULD—I move that we take a recess until seven o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Gould, and it was declared lost.

Mr. NELSON—I move that we now adjourn. The question was put on the motion of Mr. Nelson, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Verplanck, and it was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Champlain, as amended on motion of Mr. Kinney, and as further amended on the motion of Mr. Daly.

Mr. SPENCER—I rise to ask if the amendment offered by me and adopted, would be in order to be moved in the section as it now stands, to except from the operation of the law the class of persons named in the third section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] as a substitute for the preceding propositions, and which struck out the amendment offered by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer], must be regarded as the determinate opinion of the Convention, and that a motion to restore an amendment thus stricken out cannot be entertained without a reconsideration of the vote.

Mr. SPENCER—I then move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. ANDREWS—I offer the following amendment:

Add "This section shall not apply to elections for town officers."

I think I am in favor, myself, of striking out these provisions in the section as it stands, making registration applicable to special and municipal elections; but the object of this particular amendment is to call the attention of the Convention to what seems to me to be the position of town electors under the provisions of this section as it now stands. The right to vote for town officers is derived from the first part of this article. They are officers elected by the people, and all the persons qualified to vote, by this article are entitled to vote for them and no others. It is true that the meetings at which such elections are held are called "town meetings," but it is none the less true, as I understand it, that they are elections held under the Constitution and by force of the provisions of the statute made thereunder; and it will be seen that section 4, following the one under consideration, recognizes town meetings, at which town officers are elected, as elections within the meaning of the article. How does it stand under the provision now pending before the Convention? Why, that no person shall be entitled to vote at any general, special, or municipal election, unless he shall be registered according to the terms of this act. It is quite clear, to my mind, that within and under one of these terms is included the election of town officers, which certainly is a special election within the meaning of that term. It is for the purpose of calling the attention of the Convention to this fact, that I have offered this amendment.

Mr. DEVELIN—I rise to a point of order. If the views of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews], are correct, that the amendment adopted covers town elections, then the resolution offered by the gentleman is out of order, because a reconsideration of the previous vote must be had. If the amendment adopted does not include town elections, then his amendment is unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken—that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] is susceptible of amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM—It seems to me that the section is not properly subject to the criticism which has been suggested by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews]. It has been held under the statute of this State which provides that no court shall sit on the day of a general election, that that provision does not apply to either charter elections in cities or town meetings. The term "general election," therefore, does not embrace a town meeting. The term "special election," I submit, also does not mean a town meeting, because town meetings are held in pursuance of general laws; nor is a municipal election regarded as a special election. Still, if it is regarded as important to relieve the section of any doubt, I do not know that I shall object to its remaining as it is.

Mr. GREELEY — I would suggest to the mover to strike out the words "general, special and municipal," and insert the words "in all other than town elections." It will shorten and simplify the clause.

Mr. ANDREWS — I accept the amendment.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Andrews, and it was declared carried.

Mr. LAPHAM — I desire to know that those words are not in the section in regard to the person who votes.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is not responsible for that.

Mr. ALVORD — I move to strike out that portion of the present amendment which says "as herein prescribed" and say "who shall not have registered according to law."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried.

Mr. LIVINGSTON — I offer the following amendment. Add thereto, "and no distinction shall be made between persons residing in different parts of the State as to the evidence required to establish their right to be registered."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair rules that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston] is out of order, because the same question has been passed upon before.

Mr. DEVELIN — I move as a further amendment that this section shall not apply to the municipal elections in the city of New York. One reason I have for offering that amendment is that there is no necessity for a registration, because the general election is held on the first of November, and thirty days afterward the municipal election is held, and during those thirty days there are very few removals, and the six days that are provided for by the amendment gives to members of either party the opportunity to ascertain whether any name has been fraudulently put upon the registry. To require a re-registration would make an enormous expense, and one which would be totally without any practical service.

Mr. ALVORD — I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] will not prevail, and for this reason: I hope that we have come to that time in the history of this State when all our elections will be had on the same day, and save the people vast expense in the matter of elections. The municipal elections in different parts of the State are not determined by constitutional provisions, but by statute, and next year the State of New York may have a Legislature that will provide that the municipal election shall be held in the middle of the Summer, and again in another portion of the year, so that the circumstances may be widely different from what have been suggested by the gentleman. It will redound very much to the interest of the people of this State to bring down all municipal elections to the same time and place for holding our general elections. If this amendment went in that direction, to compel the people, through the Legislature, to ask from them that they shall make our municipal elections held at the same time we hold our general elections, I should be inclined to favor it.

Mr. DEVELIN — I desire to make an explanation in regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The gentleman is out of order, he having already spoken on the amendment.

Mr. VEEDER — I desire simply to say this, that I think the amendment is improper. For the last two years, to my own knowledge, members of the Legislature have been endeavoring to abolish the distinction in time between the municipal and general elections in the city of New York, and the measure has been successfully opposed by the republican party.

Mr. HUTCHINS — I should willingly vote for the proposition of the gentleman if it was necessary. But it is not necessary. The Legislature may provide that the registry that has been taken in the November election preceding the municipal election may be used at the municipal election. That is the law now; the registry list provided for the November election is taken for the municipal election held on the first of December following, with the addition of such names as may be added thereto subsequent to that time.

Mr. WALES — I move that the Convention take a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Wales, and it was declared lost.

The question was then announced on the amendment of Mr. Champlain, as amended.

Mr. VERPLANCK — I was about to say that the subject has become so confused by the numerous amendments that have been made it would take a little while to understand what it is. I do not believe that members can vote with intelligence upon the question now, and I therefore move that we adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Verplanck, and it was declared lost.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read section four as amended, as follows:

"Laws shall be made for ascertaining, by proper proofs, the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established. The Legislature shall provide for a registry of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, to be completed at least six days before any election other than a town election. No person shall vote at any such election who shall not have been registered according to law."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will state that if this section, as amended, is adopted, it becomes the section of the Constitution, unless altered by some subsequent action of the Convention.

Mr. DEVELIN — Are there not one or two motions to reconsider before the vote is taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — There are motions to reconsider pending, but they cannot be taken up until the time is reached which makes them in order.

Mr. DEVELIN — Can the vote on the pending amendment be taken at all after the motions to reconsider are considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that motions to reconsider can be called up to-morrow, and that, in the mean time, the vote on the pending section can be taken.

Mr. CONGER—I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

The roll was then called on the amendment of Mr. Champlain as amended, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Barker, Beadle, Beale, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Clinton, Cooke, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Goodrich, Grant, Graves, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Miller, Pond, Prindle, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—65.

Noes—Messrs. Barnard, Bergen, Bowen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Cochran, Conger, Develin, Greeley, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Mattice, Monell, Nelson, Paige, Potter, Robertson, Rolfe, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham—38.

Mr. CONGER—I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion will lie on the table under the rule.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read section 5, as follows:

"All elections by the citizens shall be by ballot, except for such town officers as may by law be directed to be otherwise chosen."

Mr. EDDY—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Eddy, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VEEDER—I offer the following amendment to section 5:

"And all laws as to the manner of holding elections, and the election or appointment of inspectors and canvassers of elections and their qualifications, shall be uniform in their requirements."

Mr. LAPHAM—I rise to a point of order. I submit that that amendment is precisely what the Convention has already voted should not be in the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair was in doubt whether it was or not, because language similar was used in an amendment presented to the previous section.

Mr. VEEDER—I desire to make an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules that the amendment is in order.

Mr. VEEDER—My object in offering this amendment is that I may call the attention of the Convention to the manner in which persons acting as inspectors of election have been elected or appointed in different localities. In my judgment no more important duty can be performed by a subordinate officer than that performed by an inspector of election. Under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, all inspectors of election originally were elected, and the statute required that the inspector should be a resident and voter of the election district in which he was elected to act. This statute remained in force until the passage of the registry law of 1859. By the provisions of this statute, passed in 1859, the general registry law, a provision was made for the appointment of inspectors and canvassers of election in the city of New York, by the board of supervisors of that city, but the provision of law requiring that the inspectors of election should be residents and voters in the election districts in which they were appointed to act, remained unchanged. Again, in 1860, a subsequent law was passed, in reference to the appointment and duties of inspectors of election, in the city of New York, continuing the power in the board of supervisors to appoint the inspectors, and providing that the inspector should be a voter in the ward containing the election district for which he was appointed, and also that the inspector should be able to read and write. But in 1865 the Legislature saw fit to pass an act by which the appointment of inspectors of elections in the city of New York was taken away entirely from the board of supervisors, and was placed in the hands of the police commissioners of the city of New York. There commenced the first infringement upon the rights of the people; that law abolished the requirement that the inspectors of election should be residents of the election district, or of the ward in which the election district was situated at which he was to act, and permitted the appointment of inspectors who were residents of the assembly district, in which the election district at which he was to act, was situated. The object of the law requiring inspectors of election to be residents of the election districts in which they were elected or appointed to act, undoubtedly was to secure inspectors who were familiar with the residents of the district. The law of 1865 requiring that these inspectors of elections should be simply residents of the assembly district in which they were appointed, abolished this time honored principle. By an act of the Legislature of 1866 the law was again amended, and the police commissioners in the city of New York were authorized to appoint inspectors of elections in that city, regardless of where they resided, so long as they resided in the city and county of New York. The result is this, that to-day an inspector of election may be appointed by the police commissioners to act as an inspector of election in the first ward who resides at Harlem, and in a district where he is perhaps totally unacquainted with the voters. This necessarily leads to confusion. In the city of Brooklyn, however, the inspectors of election are appointed by the supervisors, but the law allows them to appoint any qualified voter in that city to act in any election district. I do not object to the appointment by the boards of supervisors in the several counties. I desire the original provision of law requiring the inspectors appointed to be residents of the election district and voters in the election district in which they serve to be retained. Although the supervisors yet appoint inspectors of elections in the city of Brooklyn an inspector can be appointed who resides in Greenpoint (the extreme eastern part of the city) to conduct an election in the southern part of the city, where probably he does not know a single voter. I believe, Mr. President, that this class of special legislation should cease, and that there should be some provision in the Constitution taking away from the Legislature the power from time to time as in their view or by their caprices they may see fit to interfere with this matter. I submit that the manner of appointment should be uniform, and that the inspectors should be residents and voters of the election district in which they are appointed to act, and if that were done it would obviate the necessity of the personal attendance of electors on the day of registration. This is one reason why, in the country, a personal attendance is not required for registration, because the inspectors are acquainted and familiar with every voter in the district. We are met here with the assertion that the people in the country should be required to attend personally before the board of registry. Why do you pass laws allowing the appointment of incompetent inspectors and persons wholly unacquainted with the voters to act in the city, and then to obviate this defective system, impose upon the people the burden of attending personally before the board of registry and establish their identity to a board with whom they are acquainted, when, if you would confine the appointment of inspectors to persons resident of the election district in which they are to act respectively, you would secure the selection of inspectors who were acquainted with the voters of their districts, and then the personal attendance of the voter could be dispensed with? It is for this reason that I desire uniform laws in reference to the election or appointment of inspectors and canvassers. It will be remembered that when the Metropolitan police board was established, the main argument urged by the advocates of the measure was the necessity of establishing a police board entirely free from politics and political influences. In fact, to secure perfect freedom from all political influences, a provision was incorporated in the law prohibiting the commissioners of police from holding any other office, and from performing any other duties of any office not directly connected with the administration of their duties as police officers. I have failed to hear or discover any good reason why the board of supervisors in the city of New York should not be permitted to appoint the inspectors of election in that city. In the city of Brooklyn they are appointed by the board of supervisors. In the remaining portions of the State they are elected. Where is the necessity for this special legislation—for this innovation upon the rights of localities. I have presented these instances of special legislation in order to show the necessity of some provision in the organic law, requiring uniform legislation upon this subject. I cannot understand the necessity for this class of special legislation, and whatever may have been the object of the Legislature to pass these obnoxious and unjust laws, I am convinced that the people of the several counties are entitled to protection against the passage of laws which have resulted in no possible good to the communities upon which they have been forced, but have invariably produced great inconvenience, hardship and oppression.

. Here the gavel fell, the five minutes having expired.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I have an amendment which I offer to apply to the country districts. I propose as a substitute to section five, now under consideration, or section four, which has just been adopted, the following amendment:

Sec. 5. The bounds of all election districts, in districts other than those of incorporated villages and cities, shall be those of the several school districts; and the trustees of said school districts shall constitute the inspectors of registry and election. The bounds of districts and the inspectors of registry and election in incorporated villages and cities, shall be such as the Legislature may direct, provided that no more than two hundred electors, as near as may be, shall reside in any such district. The polls for all other than town elections shall be open on one day from the hour of noon to that of two P. M.

Mr. PRINDLE—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Prindle, and it was declared lost.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—The adoption of this system would cover some of the difficulties suggested by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder], who has just taken his seat, arising from the unknown character of the inspectors that are now appointed by the police boards of some of our cities—men ignorant personally of the electors whose voting they supervise and would defeat, from the smallness and neighborhood character of the district, many of the opportunities now afforded for irregular voting, coupled with the limitation of two hours for the voting period, and those the hours of leisure with our rural and laboring population. In almost any of our school-districts, a walk of half a mile to the school-house, and the sacrifice of one hour of leisure time, would enable every elector who desired, to record and deposit his vote. The distance in some of the districts of my county [Queens], from the place of voting to the home of the elector, now exceeds five miles, and requires the greater portion of the day in the exercise of that duty which every good citizen desires to perform. The gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], the other day, moderately estimated the expenses of a general election at some $400,000 or $500,000. My view is that the mere saving of time to the 800,000 electors alone, under this proposition, may be safely and moderately estimated at $1,000,000, annually—amply sufficient to defray any additional expense that the increase of election districts might involve. These inspectors or trustees of schools, being now selected from our most intelligent citizens, would probably render this service at a very moderate compensation, as election districts would not average over 50 voters each. Even though, in some cases, there may be but one trustee (as some gentlemen now remark), that should present no difficulty, for we would then be assured of a man of that character who would, in the language of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], a few days since, "shamo down" any attempt to force into the ballot-box the vote of any idiot or other improper person. The objection of the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], that it would mix up our school system with politics, is not, in my estimation, a serious one; it would familiarize our youth of both sexes, (and here the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], will sympathize with me), with some of the necessary duties that in the lapse of a few years many of them should become familiar with. Indeed, I learn that the services of the gentler sex are now often called into requisition in making up the returns of our present inspectors and registers—to my own knowledge, they often, in our families, assist in preparing the preliminary ballots—and apropos of this view, the very official reports of our debates are not less interesting from the fact that the gentler sex have aided directly in preparing them for the press. The novelty of the provision is not more startling now, than the proposition of the one day's election was 27 years since, when made in the Legislature of this State. Yet the difficulty of most significance is, that all other matters of detail that have occupied so much of our time, partake more of a legislative than an organic nature.

Mr. CASE—How would the gentleman provide for registers in the school-districts where they elect but one trustee?

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I would be willing that one trustee should act as the inspector in a district of not over twenty votes.

Mr. NELSON—Why not insert in the amendment, that in the case where there is only one trustee, the school-master or the "school-marm" shall act with the inspector? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND—That would suit the idea of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis].

Mr. HAND—I have got just one single objection to this amendment. There are a great many others. We now elect our trustees on account of their fitness for taking charge of the affairs of education in the respective districts. There should be no politics in the affairs of our schools. I wish to have them disconnected with any political feeling. This amendment would transfer the whole subject of politics into the school-district, and we should elect as trustees, to whom we must commit the great interests of the education of our children, men, who would be thus brought into the political arena. They would be elected without regard to the interests of education, but upon partisan considerations. For this reason, I object to the amendment most decidedly.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. S. Townsend and it was declared lost.

The President then announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. Veeder.

Mr. VEEDER—I call for the eyes and noes.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I consider the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] a dangerous one, and one which ought not to be passed. This matter of registry in the city of New York has grown up in consequence of the wants and necessities of that city. The idea that the inspectors and registers of election should be appointed or elected in the same manner in the city as in the country would imply that the elections are carried on as honestly and in the same manner in the city as in the country. The election of inspectors and registers was continued as long as the men elected could read the English language and write their names, and add up a column of figures; but when that ceased to be the case, the law was changed and the appointment was given to the Board of Supervisors of the city and county of New York. That worked very well for a time, but a very great evil crept into the system growing out of this fact, that when the supervisors made the appointments, and the day of the election came, and the canvassing of votes was commenced, the inspector who had been selected, in consequence of his capacity and integrity would decline to act, and the remaining inspectors would put in another man in his place who would be on hand, prepared to act a willing tool to carry out the wishes of certain parties, so that, as is said in New York, a candidate would be elected after the poll closed on the day of election. To remedy this evil, a law was finally passed giving to the Metropolitan police commissioners the power of appointing inspectors and registers of election, and in case of a vacancy to fill that vacancy; but the inspectors were to be taken from the election districts where they were to serve. It was found, however, impossible in some districts to secure the services of men capable of discharging the duties, for we all know that it requires some ability to fairly and correctly conduct an election, and canvass the votes. The consequence was that in most of the districts in certain portions of the city the election returns had to be sent back by the county canvasser for correction. In order to correct that evil, it became necessary to appoint inspectors of election out of the district in order that they might have men capable of discharging the duties of the office.

Mr. VEEDER—I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the law of 1860. The law requires vacancies to be filled up by the Board of Supervisors, and not by the remaining inspectors. His idea of inspectors dropping out and others substituted by the remaining members of the board of inspectors is incorrect.

Mr. HUTCHINS—The persons who were appointed canvassers or inspectors to fill vacancies when they occurred were invariably persons named by the remaining inspectors. There was a necessity to have this change made if we were to have honest elections; and the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder], I do not think will claim that we have not had honest elections since the change was made, and that we have not had capable and impartial inspectors, registers and canvassers at our elections. But go back to the old system the gentleman proposes and we shall soon be compelled to make a change.

Mr. K. BROOKS—The gentleman from New York, who has just taken his seat, has not stated all the facts. The board of supervisors is a body created by the Legislature of the State of New York, and it is so constituted that one-half of the members must be of one party, and one-half of the other party. The power was taken from the Board of Supervisors, and given to the police commissioners, who happened to be about all of the party which is in the majority in the State, and which is represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

Mr. HUTCHINS—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does he claim the Board of Supervisors are equally divided between the two great parties?

Mr. E. BROOKS—Yes, sir; that is the law and as I understand it, that is the fact; both parties are represented in the Board of Supervisors and the power was taken from them over inspectors of election and given to the police commissioners, which is a partisan commission.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Veeder, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Bergen, Bickford, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Chesebro, Clinton, Cochran, Couger, Daly, Fowler, Hitchman, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, Paige, Robertson, Rolfe, Schell, Seymour, Tappen, S. Townsend, Veeder, Verplanck, Wickham—29.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Axtell, Barker, Beadle, Beala, Beckwith, Bell, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. O. Brown, Case, Clark, Cooke, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Magee, McDonald, Merrill, Miller, Nelson, Potter, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, Schoonmaker, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—67.

Mr. VEEDER—I move a reconsideration of the vote which has just been taken.

The motion was laid over.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I offer the following amendment to section five:

"All elections and all officers elected by the electors of this State shall be by ballot; and all questions submitted to the electors for their assent, approval or decision shall be by ballot."

My object in moving this amendment is, that in all cases where an expression of the public will is desired it shall be taken by ballot. There have been a few officers appointed at town meetings where this rule has not applied, such as overseers of the highways, and the manner in which that has been done is never such as to take the public sense in regard to the matter at all. I understand there was a law passed a year ago last winter giving that appointment to the commissioner of highways, but that I am told, has been repealed. I desire that in the future such elections shall be by ballot. In regard to the latter clause, providing that on all questions submitted to the people for their approval, the decision shall always be taken by ballot—as it is very well known to gentlemen that in towns, where additional sums of money are required to be raised for certain purposes, that the vote taken is taken in such a way as not to represent with any certainty the popular will. The question is generally submitted to a crowd in front of the place where an election is held, and no determination can be had in that way by which we can arrive definitely at what the electors desire in regard to that matter. Now, when questions of that character are to be taken, according to the law as it now is, notice should be given that a certain amount was to be raised for a certain purpose, and it should provide that ballots should be furnished showing what sum of money is desired to be raised so that the electors can vote for or against it, and in that way we could get at a definite expression of the popular will with regard to such matters.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I had hoped there were some things which would not be mixed up in politics. We have in the country various officers in road districts which have generally been held by persons without regard to politics, and the proposition of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen] proposes that all such officers should be elected by ballot. It would be perfectly impossible to have such election on account of the number of road districts, and it would lead to endless confusion.

Mr. BERGEN—I hope this amendment will not prevail. It has been the custom in that part of the country in which I reside, at town meetings to elect road masters and pound masters by a vote, but not by a ballot, and I presume that is the custom in other parts of the State. I know it is the rule in the county of Kings, and there never has any difficulty occurred in relation to electing that class of officers by that method. These offices are not desired, but as a general thing they are taken by persons as a matter of convenience to the neighbors and for the public benefit, without being desired by individuals. If you adopt this amendment you throw these offices into the political arena, and we have never placed them on political grounds. Other officers who are now elected by ballot are elected on political grounds. I think it is wise to continue the practice which has been in vogue so long at least with us. If it is left alone it will operate well; if this amendment is adopted it will have an injurious effect. Then there are other questions which arise at town meetings which it would be difficult to settle by ballot, for instance, the raising of money, to repair highways. As the law now stands, by the recommendation of the commissioners of highways a town meeting has the right to vote and appropriate a small sum (the sum of seventy-five dollars in the county of Kings, in other counties it may be different) on a motion, without a vote by ballot. The gentleman's amendment would take away from the town that right, for a ballot could not be prepared in time for that purpose, no printed notice having been required, though previous notices are required for larger sums. There are also other matters which are taken by a viva voce vote at town meetings which this amendment would interfere with, and for these reasons I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BARKER—I offer the following amendment:

Amend the section by striking out the words "by the citizens" in line 1.

I offer this because it is, I think, a better expression, and more certain in its meaning.

Mr. OONGER—I would suggest to the gentleman he might also strike out or leave out the phrase introduced, so that it will read, "all elections shall be by ballot."

Mr. VERPLANCK—I hope this amendment will not prevail. These are words which have been in all the Constitutions of this State, and I want to keep, if I can, two or three of the old words. The object of this is to require that all elections shall be by ballot. When persons are elected to office by the Legislature, it is done via voce, and I think it is a very proper way, and I hope these words will not be stricken out.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I move to further amend by striking out the word "citizens," and insert the word "people."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Robertson, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred upon the amendment of Mr. Barker, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HARRIS—I move to strike out the words "by electors," so that it will read "all elections shall be by ballot."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That motion is not now in order, having just been voted down.

Mr. FERRY—I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "officers" in line 2 the words "or objects." My reason is this: that in the section as it reads, "all elections must be by ballot." In voting for officers we all know that there are many objects for which we vote at town meetings which do not involve elections of town officers. It is said that voting for those objects are not elections, but I understand the amendment provides for all cases at these elections, and we also often vote for objects such as bounties, etc., and similar objects, for which we are in the habit of voting via voce, or by ballot, as we see fit. Certainly, if this construction shall be put upon the language, it is very desirable that the word "objects" should be inserted, so we shall be at liberty to take that action.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Ferry, and it was declared lost.

Mr. TAPPEN—As the section is now, amendments—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not informed that any amendments have been adopted.

Mr. TAPPEN—I withdraw my remarks upon that subject then.

The question was then put upon section 5, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. CASE—I move the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Case, and it was declared lost.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the sixth section, as follows:

SEC. 6. No person who is not, at the time of taking the oath of office, an elector, shall hold any office under this Constitution. All officers shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of New York; and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of (the office he is to hold) according to the best of my ability."

Mr. ALVORD—I do not think there is any real necessity for this sixth section down to the words "all officers" in the third line, but some persons may not agree with me, and in order to make it, as it seems to me it properly should be, it should read that "no person who is not at the time of taking the oath of office, a citizen of the State, and except as to length of residence, an elector, shall hold any office under the Constitution." You can see very well that in very many instances, a gentleman who has had a long residence in the State under this requirement may not be a resident in the county for four months, and therefore, he is not an elector and cannot by this section hold any county office. A man may be a resident of the city or State of New York for a year and may be under the necessity of being absent in one of the neighboring sister States, and remain absent two or three months, absolutely having changed his residence, and if he comes into the State just before election, say two or three or four months, he is, under this provision, ineligible to any office in the gift of the State until he shall become entirely an elector by having lived in the State a year continuously, and within the county four months. It is for this reason, it seems to me, the language of the section is entirely unnecessary. I have no objection to altering the amendment so as to read, "No person who is not at the time of taking the oath of office a citizen of this State shall hold any office."

Mr. BARNARD—It appears to me that the subject of qualification for office, and the oath of office does not belong in this section, and I, therefore, move to strike out the whole section. In the Constitution, under which we now live, the oath of office is a separate article, and I believe the committees who have before them the subject of State officers will provide an oath, and I think it does not belong to the suffrage part of the Constitution at all.

Mr. MERRILL—I wish to explain that the committee placed this section in the article, supposing it to be their duty from the title which was given to the committee: "The Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office."

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Barnard, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HALE—I move to amend by striking out the first and second lines of this section. There never has been any provision of this kind, and I am not aware that we have ever suffered any inconvenience from the absence of electors so far as regards any county office.

Mr. ALVORD—I will accept that.

Mr. GREELEY—I would beg the Convention to consider this very fully. Here are gentlemen moving into the State and moving out, and I think gentlemen can afford to wait long enough to become voters before they become candidates. I have known uneasy persons to move into a new locality simply to get office. I think this is a reasonable proposition. The committee could not help stating some qualification for office, for the order of the Convention required it; and I think this is a very mild requirement of the qualifications for holding office in this State; and I hope it will be adopted.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Hale, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I desire to offer the following amendment, and upon it I wish to call for the ayes and noes.

Amend the section by inserting after the word "election" in line two, the words "and a white man."

Mr. HAND—I would inquire of the gentleman what particular shade of white is required and whether he would appoint the inspectors to ascertain that.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were not ordered.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings, for as the proposition reads I do not understand that there is any tribunal for determining who is qualified to hold office. I suppose if a man is elected to fill any office his certificate of election would be sufficient to entitle him to hold office and no person can question it. If this amendment prevails, and if a person elected presents himself with his credentials, the incumbent in office can refuse to give up the office or books and papers pertaining to it, taking the ground that the person who claims to be elected is not qualified and there is no tribunal designated to settle that question.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I move to strike out the words "an elector" and insert "citizens of this State." The reason for that is, that there are persons who may be citizens of the State but who have a temporary absence. They may not be entitled to vote, and this may be so construed as to prevent such a person who should be a citizen of the State from holding office. I think there should be no objections of that kind.

Mr. ALVORD—I do really hope gentlemen of the Convention will understand this, and when they do understand it they will vote accordingly upon this proposition. I have had very serious doubts in my mind whether the Chair understood the original proposition when it was made and voted upon by the Convention. I will again reiterate in a few words exactly what the effect of this section must necessarily be. A person who lives in the county of Rensselaer, for instance, eight months in the year, and happens accidentally to be required to go out of the county for two months, and then comes back just previous to election, he is, under this provision, ineligible to hold any county office or other office in the State. A man may spend his entire lifetime in the State and then go out within one year previous to the election, and when he comes back again he is ineligible to office until he shall have been in the State for a year. I trust that no such motion as that will prevail at the hands of this Convention.

Mr. KERNAN—I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to one thing. A man may be qualified to be elected, but if not an elector cannot take the oath of office.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand that. That is in addition to what I have said. Therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Chesebro], which provides that the person shall be a citizen of the United States, and of the State, seems to me all that should be required.

Mr. BURRILL—I would merely like to ask the gentleman from Onondaga what is the definition of a citizen of the State. There is nothing in the Constitution which prescribes what constitutes a citizen of the State.

Mr. ALVORD—A citizen of the State is a person who is entitled, after he shall have gone through certain pre-requisites to become an elector; and he is a citizen of the State by virtue of our laws the moment he comes within our State, having the same privileges, powers, and duties as all citizens, except the same right of voting.

Mr. CLINTON—One objection to this amendment is that if it be adopted, you may under its provisions elect minors.

Mr. PRINDLE—I would like to ask the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] whether he intends to include females?

Mr. SEYMOUR—No, sir, I do not intend to include females, and I do not suppose that the amendment as it stands now, will include them.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour].

Mr. COCHRAN—I rise to a point of order. Is not the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston]?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Not in the first instance. In the first instance the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour].

Mr. ALVORD—May I ask the gentleman from Rensselaer to hear read the original proposition made by me, to see if he will not accept it as his amendment? It is as follows: "That no person who is not at the time of taking the oath of office a citizen of the State, and except as to length of residence, an elector, shall hold any office under the Constitution."

Mr. SEYMOUR—I will accept that.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I rise to a point of order, that the proposition as now modified has been already voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not informed that such is the case. The proposition of the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] was voted down.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I understood that was accepted by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] and became his proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] moved as he has just stated in his place, and the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] made a suggestion which the gentleman from Onondaga adopted, and that amendment was voted down. Then the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston] made an amendment, and next the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] made an amendment. The gentleman from Onondaga now suggested to the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] that he should accept as his amendment the proposition which he first made, and which he subsequently allowed to be displaced on the suggestion of the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale], and the Chair now understands the gentleman from Rensselaer to accept that as his amendment.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I do accept it.

The question was put upon the amendment of Mr. Seymour, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 48 to 37.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Rensselaer has been carried.

The motion was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. HALE—I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment offered by myself was lost.

The motion was laid on the table under the rule.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Livingston, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following amendment:

"By inserting after the word 'officers' in the third line, the words 'except such town and village officers as the Legislature shall not require to take the oath of office.'"

As the section now stands every pathmaster will have to take the oath of office, and every village trustee, and street commissioner, which I think is entirely unnecessary and contrary to the usual practice, and therefore, I think the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. SPENCER—I offer the following substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford.] In drawing that amendment I would say, I have copied the language from the Constitution of 1846. Insert after the word "officers," in line 3, "except such inferior officers as may by law be exempted."

Mr. BICKFORD—I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BERGEN—I hope that amendment will be adopted. There are a large number of inferior officers in this State who are not required to take the constitutional oath of office, and I see no good reason why they should be required. For instance, the trustees of schools, and the clerks of common schools, and commissioners of highways and pound-masters. These offices in our locality, at least, have generally gone begging, and persons are induced to take them by persuasion for the benefit of the neighborhood. There may be other localities where these offices are sought for, but in our portion of the county of Kings these officers have never been required to take the oath. That has been the practice for years past, and no difficulty has occurred in consequence of their not taking this oath. Under the present Constitution they are not required to take the oath. There has been no necessity for it, and no complaint that I have ever heard of, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MERRILL—I do not see what harm can result from requiring all officers, high and low, to take this oath. Instead of being injurious, it seems to me it would be a healthy operation.

The question was then put on the amendment and was declared carried. A division was called for.

Mr. BARNARD—I rise to a question of order. I ask whether this proposed amendment is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is unable to decide the question on the spur of the moment.

Mr. BARNARD—I will read the section. Article 6, of the Constitution of the United States, says:

"The Senators and Representative and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution."

Mr. HAND—Under which head does a school trustee belong—executive or judicial?

Mr. BARNARD—Every officer of government who takes the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, is I suppose, if not judicial, or legislative an executive officer, and is sworn in conformity with that Constitution.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would merely say that this class of officers, such as path-masters, overseers of the poor and pound-masters are not classed either as legislative, judicial or executive officers. They are mere administrative officers.

The question was again put on the amendment of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 42 to 32.

Mr. CASSIDY—I move as a substitute to the several articles which have been presented, the section in the existing Constitution. I move to substitute for section 6, as reported by the committee, article 12 as it now stands in the Constitution, which is in these words:

"Members of the legislature and all officers, executive and judicial, except such inferior officers as may be by law exempted, shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of New York; and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——— according to the best of my ability."

"And no other oath, declaration or test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust."

That article has stood for a great many years, and has been approved always; and I believe there was no discussion in reference to it and no intention on the part of the Committee of Suffrage to alter it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman [Mr. Cassidy], move it as a substitute for the whole section, or for so much of the section as follows line three?

Mr. CASSIDY—For the whole section.

Mr. GREELEY—The Committee on Official Corruption is expected to act very decidedly and very promptly and to propose some stringent oath of office, with reference to corruption. The last section of the gentleman's amendment will cut off all such oaths. I do not wish to forestall that question, and, therefore, I wish he would withdraw the last clause. If he does not I trust the Convention will vote it down; for I wish the Convention to be left free, if they shall choose hereafter, to apply some test in regard to corruption in office. For instance, a man has corruptly bought his office—has corruptly promised to do this or that thing if he gets the office. That I do not wish to be precluded from dealing with by our action on this question; and, therefore, if that is insisted upon, I shall vote against his proposition to amend.

Mr. KERNAN — If the section proposed by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] is substituted for the one under consideration, there will be no difficulty then, if members of the Convention desire it, to amend the oath as suggested by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and thus embrace what he desires in reference to corruption.

Mr. LAPHAM — I am opposed to this amendment. The Constitution of 1846 embraces the latter clause in the oath, and was adopted at a time when the events which have since transpired, were not anticipated by any one. It had not entered into the imagination of any man to conceive that such a wicked attempt to destroy this government, would have been made as has since actually occurred, and I am opposed to re-enacting an oath of office which will forbid us in any form whatever from adopting the necessary tests to apply the present exigencies of the time to all classes of officers wherever it shall be deemed necessary. I am opposed to it for another reason. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock], not long since, during this very debate, in effect proposed the same thing, that no test oath of any description should hereafter be adopted, and it has been voted down. This is a proposition to re-enact in substance what he proposed to have enacted, and which the Convention rejected.

Mr. BERGEN — I would like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The amendment is not in possession of either the Chair or the Secretary. It is proposed to strike out the whole section and substitute section 12 of the present Constitution for it.

Mr. CONGER — I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. PAIGE — I intended to offer an amendment requiring from the successful candidate elected to any office, an oath, and my design had been to offer it as a separate section — as section number 7, but the proposition of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], would cut it out, and I therefore propose to offer an amendment to section 6, and the Convention may, at its option, approve of it there, or have it adopted as a separate section.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Paige, as follows:

"Sec. 7. Every person elected at any election to fill an elective office, before he takes the oath of office prescribed in the next preceding section of this article and enters upon the duties of such office, shall take and subscribe an oath that he has not directly or indirectly paid or advanced any money or property to influence or as a compensation or reward for a vote given, or the withholding of a vote at such election, or for any other purpose, to promote his election to such office, except for defraying the expenses of printing and circulation of votes, handbills and other papers previous to such election, or promised, agreed or offered to do so, and that on his refusal or omission to take such oath, his election to such office shall be void; and if such person so elected to such office shall have paid or advanced any money or property for defraying the expenses aforesaid, he shall further state in such oath, the several sums of money and the respective values of the property so paid or advanced, the respective specific objects for which such payments or advances were respectively made and the names of the persons respectively to whom they were made; and in case such person shall be convicted of directly or indirectly advancing or paying after he shall have entered upon the duties of such office, or after he shall have taken such oath of office, any money or property as a repayment to any person or persons, or indemnification for advancing or paying money or property for any of the purposes above mentioned, except for defraying the expenses of printing and circulation of votes, handbills and other papers previous to such election, or of promising, agreeing or offering to do so; such person so elected to such office, and convicted as aforesaid, shall forfeit such office or the right to hold the same; and the Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry the provisions of this section into effect."

Mr. PAIGE — Upon reflection I withdraw it now, and will offer it as an additional section.

Mr. AXTELL — I offer an amendment to the section as it now stands. After the word "ability" in the tenth line, section six, add the following:

"I do further solemnly swear or affirm that I have not either directly or indirectly paid or contributed, or promised to pay or contribute, any money or other valuable thing for the purpose of being used, or which has been used directly or indirectly as a reward or compensation to any voter or other person to secure my election, or in procuring my nomination to this office."

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Axtell, and it was declared lost.

A count was called for.

Mr. AXTELL — I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BELL — I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] whether he retains the latter clause, "and no oath, declaration or test shall be required."

Mr. CASSIDY — Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL — Then I shall vote against it.

Mr. ALVORD — I move to amend by striking out the words, "and no other oath, declaration or test shall be required."

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Cassidy as amended.

A sufficient number having seconded the call for the ayes and noes they were ordered, and the amendment was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Baker, Barnard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Cooke, Daly, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gerry, Goodrich, Gould, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, Law, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Leo, Ludington, Mattice, McDonald, Miller, Monell, Nelson, Paige, Potter, Prindle, Reynolds, Rogers, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Shelden, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Wickham, Williams—88.

Noes—Conger, Develin, Hitchman, Merrill, Robertson, L. W. Russell—6.

Mr. CONGER—I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the latter clause of the section of the Constitution, as proposed by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy], was stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion will lie on the table under the rule.

The question was then put on the section, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. MILLER—I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the words "or make any promise to influence" were inserted in the sixth line of the second section.

Mr. BELL—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. LAPHAM—I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the present order of business was made the special order of business after the reading of the Journal.

The motion was ordered to lie on the table under the rule.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Bell to adjourn, and it was declared lost.

Mr. PAIGE—I offer the amendment, which was read a few minutes since, as section 7 of this article. I wish to make a single remark. Gentlemen have expressed a desire to provide a remedy against bribery and corruption at elections. In my judgment there are two effective remedies: one is the challenge at the polls of the voter, and the other is requiring an oath from the successful candidate, and the amendment I have proposed provides the remedy of the oath of the successful candidate.

Mr. BOWEN—I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige]:

"And that I have not given or promised to give any money or other valuable thing for any vote or the withholding of any vote at the election at which I was chosen."

Mr. E. BROOKS—I renew the motion to adjourn, but will withdraw it in order that the President may lay any motion he wishes before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the reception of a communication from the Governor, dated July 29th, 1867, in response to a resolution of the Convention, dated June 27th, 1867, calling for information in respect to the subject of pardons granted by the Governor.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Pardoning Power, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from Luther Caldwell, Clerk of the House of Assembly, in response to a resolution of the Convention, calling for the titles of bills in regard to corporations, municipal and otherwise.

Which was ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from Richard B. Conolly, Comptroller of the city of New York, in response to a communication of the Convention asking for information in reference to contributions made to religious institutions of the city of New York.

Mr. DEVELIN—What will be the reference of that communication?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair knows of no other committee except the Committee on Cities.

Mr. DEVELIN—I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It will take that reference if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. also announced the reception of a communication from Hon. Thomas Hillhouse, Comptroller, in response to a resolution of the 28th of June, calling for information in respect to donations made by the State to charitable and religious institutions.

Which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUMSEY—I move that the article we have adopted, as it now stands, be printed for the use of the Convention in the morning.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Rumsey, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to amend by including also the amendment offered by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige].

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Verplanck, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, July 31, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. [Mr. FOLGER] is the Chair.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. HENRY DARLING.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. GRAVES—I ask leave of the Convention to present a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That can only be done by unanimous consent. There being no objection the resolution will be entertained.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the use of this Hall be granted to the Rev. Dr. Fisher, of Utica, and others, on the evening of the 8th of August next, to allow them the opportunity of addressing the Committee on the Adulteration or Sale of Intoxicating Liquors.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Graves, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM—I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to introduce the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Canals be, and they are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, and to inquire into the cost of building enlarged locks out of the present structures, with the capacity of the present locks to do the business of the canals, and of the present prism or channel of the canals to do the business with such enlarged locks.

Mr. CONGER—I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Objection being made, the resolution cannot be entertained.

Mr. HAND—Some gentleman introduced yesterday a motion that we change the order of business and not make the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage the first business, so that we may call up resolutions and other business. I move, therefore, to call that motion from the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion yesterday was to reconsider the vote by which the report of the standing committee was made the special order. On the 24th day of July the convention adopted the following rule:

Resolved, That the report of the standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, and the report of the Committee of the Whole upon the report of the said standing committee, if undetermined at this sitting, shall be the special order for to-morrow morning immediately after the approval of the Journal, and for every succeeding morning at the same time, until the report of the said standing committee is disposed of in the Convention.

Mr. HAND—I call for the consideration of this motion, because a good many days have elapsed, and much time has been spent in discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Yesterday Mr. Lapham moved to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I hope that resolution will not be reconsidered. I notice that the gentleman who offered the resolution yesterday has not moved it. I understand that he did not mean to press it this morning while we were in this order of business. I, therefore, move to lay this resolution on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hutchins, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CONGER—I desire to withdraw the objection I introduced to the resolution of Mr. Lapham.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Lapham, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. PAIGE—I would like to inquire if the amendment offered by Mr. Bowen was offered as a substitute for the one offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair so understands.

Mr. PAIGE—That proposition seems to me to be defective, at least in one respect. It does not require an oath or statement of the candidate that he has not advanced money or paid money to any person to promote his election, except for the purpose of defraying those legal expenses that are allowed by the Revised Statutes. An oath of that character would be entirely ineffective to remedy the evil of corruption or bribery at the election. A candidate may contribute money under the color of paying legal expenses; that money being deposited in the hands of other persons may be used for the illegitimate purpose of purchasing votes. The proposition that I had the honor to present, for which this is a substitute provides, in the first place, that the candidate must take an oath that he has not paid or advanced any money for the purpose of influencing, or as a compensation or reward for a vote to be given, or the withholding of a vote at the election, or for the purpose of promoting his election, and on the omission to take such oath, the result shall be that his election shall be void. Then, sir, to guard against the evasion, by allowing him to advance money to pay expenses for printing, and the circulation of tickets, and distributing papers and hand-bills, it requires that he shall state specifically the sums of money paid, the objects for which they were paid, and the persons to whom paid. The latter part of the proposition applies to a case where the candidate after he has been elected pays money to other persons, who have paid or advanced money for the purposes mentioned in the first part of the section; and in case he should be convicted of so doing, that he should also be disqualified from holding his office. These two provisions of this amendment may be divided into two sections, and that relating to the oath may stand by itself. Now in many districts in this State, candidates are nominated with special reference to their property, and to their willingness to contribute money to promote their election, and it has occurred to me there are but two effective remedies to purify the exercise of the elective franchise. One is the principle already adopted to make the sale or the purchase of a vote the ground of challenge at the election and to put the voter upon his oath, to vindicate himself; the other is to put the candidate who is elected to office on his oath that he has not used money either to purchase votes nor to promote his election, except for the specific purposes which are named in this oath. I find, sir, that there is no provision of law declaring that a candidate is disqualified to hold an office which he obtains by bribery or corruption. There is no law punishing him for being guilty of that offense. The statute in relation to bribery seems to be confined exclusively to bribery and corruption committed by the officer after he has taken possession of the office, and, therefore, if the first section requiring this oath is adopted, it must be followed by another declaring him disqualified to hold an office who commits bribery in obtaining his election. These two propositions must go together, and if the first is adopted the second must follow as a necessary result. This simple amendment would be entirely in my judgment ineffective. A candidate may very well and easily contribute large sums of money under the color of legal expenses, and still himself not be a personal participator in its corrupt use in the election. It will, therefore, be a dead letter on the statute book and will not have the least influence whatever in preventing corruption at the polls, or securing a person's election by an illegitimate and corrupt use of money.

Mr. BUKRILL—There are two propositions now before the Convention. I have no objection myself to any clause which may embody the principle contended for by the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Bowen], and also the principle embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige]. The only objection I have to the proposition of either of these gentlemen is the form in which they have been presented. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], is too long to be incorporated in the fundamental law of the State. I would be very glad to have an opportunity of offering an amendment to carry out the propositions, both of the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Bowen], and the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige]. We have already, in the second section of this proposed article, provisions covering every case, and conferring upon the Legislature the power of enacting laws to punish, by excluding from suffrage, all persons convicted of bribery and other crimes. I think we might gain our object by inserting at the end of the sixth section an amendment, as follows:

"And that I have not knowingly or intentionally violated the second section of this article, or any law passed in pursuance thereof."

And if the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], also desires to have a disqualifying clause he might add to that "any person who shall refuse to take the oath herein prescribed, or who shall be convicted of having sworn falsely on taking such oath, shall forfeit his office." I think in that, you embody the principle contended for here by both of these gentlemen, and in a manner much more proper to be inserted in the fundamental law of the State.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Bowen, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BURRILL—I now offer my amendment as a substitute to the proposition of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Add at the end of section 6, the following:

"And that I have not knowingly or intentionally violated the second section of this article, or any law passed in pursuance thereof. Any person who shall refuse to take the oath herein prescribed, or shall be convicted of having sworn falsely on taking such oath, shall forfeit his office."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Burrill and it was declared adopted.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. Paige as amended, and it was declared carried.

Mr. E. BROOKS—In the belief, Mr. President, that this Convention has occupied as much time as can be afforded in the general allotment of time for the consideration of other questions, I move now the following resolution which I ask leave to read in my place:

Resolved, That the report now under consideration with all the provisions lying upon the table, relating to the same, be committed to the select committee appointed on the 27th day of July, with instructions to report to the Convention in principle and substance, article 2, sec. 1, of the Constitution of 1846, with the following amendments:

No property qualification for the right of suf- frage, or for eligibility to office, shall ever be required.

No person authorized to vote under the existing Constitution, shall be disfranchised, nor shall the right of suffrage be abridged or extended. Provided, however, that laws shall be passed by the first Legislature assembled after the adoption of this Constitution, excluding from the right to vote all persons who may pay or receive money or any other thing of value, or promise any consideration, place or office with the view of securing or preventing the election of any candidate for any federal, State or local office, or who may be engaged in buying or selling votes, or in any way preventing the purity of the ballot, or the freedom of elections.

My object, Mr. President, in offering this resolution is, as stated in its terms, to commit this report to the select committee of five gentlemen appointed on Friday last, in order that it may perfect the phraseology of the several provisions which have been considered in regard to the amendments that we have made, and in the belief that unless some such provision or amendment is adopted we shall occupy a great deal more time before we come to any conclusion upon the subject under consideration.

Mr. GOULD—I move to strike out the instructions to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that is all that gives it the right to be heard. That amendment is not in order. The Convention has gone through with the article in their amendments, and so far perfected it.

Mr. SHERMAN—I move a division of the question, so far as it is susceptible of a division.

Mr. SMITH—I hope that resolution will not prevail. This Convention has for the last fortnight or three weeks been discussing very diligently the able report which was made by the committee on this question. They have agreed upon all the principles, as I understand, and we have reached the last section. Now, if I understand this proposition it is, that the article thus perfected be committed to another committee to make another report; and when that report comes in, for aught that now appears, we shall have to go over the same ground again and discuss the question for the next fortnight or three weeks. It seems to me that it had better be committed to that committee for revision, with the powers designated in the resolution appointing it.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to say that I have no objection to recommitting this report to the Committee on Suffrage.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair decides the gentleman to be out of order.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. We are under a special order; that special order is the offering of amendments general in their tendency to this proposition which is before us, and the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] cannot offer a resolution under this order of business. He must wait until we come to resolutions before his motion or resolution can be allowable.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken, as it is a resolution referring to the pending order of business. The resolution is in order as a resolution, to re-recommitt.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I rise to a point of order; the resolution proposes a separate submission which is a question that has been put over to a certain day, and therefore cannot be entertained.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — If it is, it is not in order.

Mr. E. BROOKS — It is only one part of it. If that is out of order I will strike out that part which suggests a separate division.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — Mr. President, I move to lay the resolution on the table, that it may come up in the order of resolutions.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I submit it is not a resolution; it is a part of to-day's business and a part of the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that if that motion prevails, it will carry the whole report with it upon the table.

Mr. LAPHAM — I rise to a question of order. The resolution as now read proposes to refer this entire subject to a committee, a special committee appointed for a particular purpose, which was simply to correct the phraseology of this article of the Constitution when the Convention had adopted it. Now, the resolution further proposes to instruct that committee to report an entire substitute for our action. I respectfully submit to the Chair that it is not proper thus to subvert the entire action of the body by sending to a committee appointed for that special purpose the subject of an entire revision of the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is in the power of the Convention to refer to a committee with instructions upon any subject, or to any committee. That may be one way in which the Convention may choose to dispose of this matter as provided in the resolution of July 24. The resolution, with instructions, in the opinion of the Chair, is in order.

Mr. MERRILL — I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] by substituting therefor the following:

The article as amended and adopted by the Convention, shall be referred to the Special Committee of Revision at the end of this day's session, with instructions to report in accordance with the terms of the resolution creating said committee.

Mr. FERRY — I rise to inquire if amendments generally are not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Amendments generally, in the opinion of the Chair, are not known in this Convention.

Mr. FERRY — I heard the President pro tem. announce, last evening, that amendments would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair was in error last evening, he corrected himself over night.

Mr. WEED — I understand the first three sections of this article have never been passed upon by the Convention; they were simply passed as sections ordinarily are, in legislative bodies for amendments generally, but not finally passed upon by a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is not necessary in the Convention, as the sections are to go to the Committee of Revision, so to call it, and when that report comes in they are passed upon as a whole.

Mr. FULLER — I desire to call up the motion to reconsider the amendment adopted to the second section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The motion is not now in order. There are two questions pending.

Mr. FERRY — Did I understand the Chair to say that when that committee makes a report it will then be in order to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of opinion that it will not, as amended.

Mr. FERRY — I have an amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], that it was not from any disrespect to the Committee on Suffrage that I moved this special reference to the committee of five, but because I believed it to be the purpose of the Convention, after a deliberate vote, that this article should take that direction. I desire to say that I make it with a sincere desire to facilitate the business of this body. There lies upon your table, sir, about twenty odd propositions to reconsider portions of amendments which have been adopted by the committee, and if they are to be voted upon by ayes and noes, in all probability it will take this or the following day to reach some conclusion. I believe we could arrive at a direct and early result in the form of the resolution which I have submitted if it should be adopted by the Convention.

Mr. LAPHAM — A very easy mode of the disposition of this order of business would be to refer this article, as we have now perfected it with the amendments pending, to that committee. The difficulty with the proposition of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] is, that there is coupled with that reference, an instruction that the committee report back to this Convention, as the result of their action, the article of the present Constitution in lieu of the one which we have now perfected and substantially adopted. There is the difficulty in the proposition, and one which makes it extremely obnoxious to gentlemen who have been laboring for a fortnight or more to put this article in proper shape. The proposition is to throw this labor all away, take up the article of the Constitution as it now is, strike out the property qualification, and report that as the Constitution to be adopted by the vote of the Convention.

Mr. SHERMAN — I move the following amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks]. Strike out all after "Resolved" and insert:

"The article under consideration, with the motions lying on the table relative thereto, shall be referred to the Committee on Revision, with instructions to report the article to the Convention revised as to language, but with no change of substantial provisions."

Mr. FULLER — I wish to call the attention of the Convention to a clause of the second section. As it stands now, if I understand the Chair, this committee of five would have no power to strike out, "all challenges shall be determined upon the oath of the person challenged." We have no power to strike that out, as I understand it. This proposition was proposed—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller] misunderstands the Chair. The Chair has asserted no such proposition.

Mr. FULLER—If I understand the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] correctly, this committee of five would have no power to strike out that provision. This is a provision which was voted down as an amendment in the fourth section several times, yesterday, and it would cut off the principal benefit of the registry law if adopted. I made a motion on Friday to reconsider the vote by which that was adopted which will be cut off, as I understand it, if the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida prevails, and that will remain in the Constitution as one of its provisions.

Mr. CONGER—The effect of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], will be effectually to prevent this body from correcting two great inadvertencies in the action of yesterday. The final clause of section four, if adopted by the committee without anything but verbal alterations, would secure in the future elections in this State far worse and more mischievous results than have ever adhered to our elections from any system of ballot stuffing, or any other of the practices which have rendered elections in certain districts of the State obnoxious to public censure. Now, sir, we have this clause, that no person shall vote at any such election who shall not have been registered according to law. So that it is possible in any district for persons to concert a particular purpose in the election to destroy the register before it is perfected, and make it impossible to have a new register completed within six days, yet the law is imperative that no person shall vote at that election in that district. So we promote by this provision a wholesale system of fraud, violence and oppression to be enacted at any poll where persons are willing to concert such practices. Then again in the last clause of section 6, the Convention created a security the same as in the last clause of article 12 of the Constitution of 1846 precisely the same as that secured to the people of State in the Constitution of 1821 against all other oaths, declarations or tests. This is taken away from the people of this State. Now, before the Convention are willing to commit two wrongs of this character I hope gentlemen on the other side will have the magnanimity to state whether they really intend that one such abnormal provision as the first shall be inserted, and such a time-honored security of the liberty of the citizen be omitted from the Constitution of the State.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—Would the carrying off or destruction of the register by a mob destroy the fact that a man had been registered.

Mr. CONGER—But suppose some persons had not been registered?

Mr. DWIGHT—They would not be entitled to a vote, even though the register was not destroyed.

Mr. CONGER—The gentleman does not take the point. He is unable to see the difficulty which this section makes possible—that the registry may be partially completed in accordance with the law, and before it is finally completed it may be destroyed.

Mr. ALVORD—What is the effect when mobs destroy the ballot-boxes? Does that vitiate the election entirely?

Mr. CONGER—The action of a mob is not in accordance with law, but this act would be in accordance with the Constitution.

Mr. ALVORD—Stealing the register in accordance with the Constitution?

Mr. CONGER—Under such a provision of law as this, unquestionably.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—There is certainly something in this. I hope—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Is the gentleman speaking against the amendment?

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I am speaking in favor of modifying the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Two have already spoken in opposition to it.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I wish to have it modified. Suppose a registrar refused to register, is that to deprive all the people of the district of the right to vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is not under discussion.

Mr. MERRILL—If it is in my power I would accept the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman is at liberty to accept the amendment.

Mr. MERRILL—Then I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida.

Mr. LAPHAM—I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], which has been accepted by the gentleman from Wyoming, will be read. I enter as heartily as any member of this Convention can in the purpose expressed by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks]. He calls this a useless discussion, and places this subject, which we have debated so long, in the hands of a committee where the sections can be put in proper shape for the final act. I take it that the proposition, as avowed by the mover, originated in a sincere motive to accomplish this result, and the adoption of this amendment effects that end. It simply takes out of the proposition of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] the instructions there contained, to report entirely adverse to our action. That instruction, I submit, is useless and derogatory to the action which we have thus far taken upon the article under consideration. For that reason the reference which will prevail, if the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], is adopted, will dispose of this subject, and the Convention can take up some other branch of business, and there will be no further occasion for a clamor on the part of any public journal that the majority of this Convention are delaying the discussions upon this subject for partisan or other purposes, and that the responsibility for delay lies at the door of the majority of this body. I desire that all occasions for articles of that description, and clamors of that description may be taken away—and this reference will put an end to that subject. There are many other reasons which might be mentioned, one of which I will mention, is the importance of the remaining business to be disposed of by the Convention. I agree with the gentleman from Richmond that we have already devoted to the consideration of this subject more of the time of the Convention than justly belongs to its importance. As to where the responsibility for that rests I leave that subject to be determined at another time and another place than this.

Mr. McDONALD—I would like to ask for information, whether, if this resolution passes, and it goes to this committee, there will be any opportunity hereafter of amending this article of the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that there will.

Mr. McDONALD—On the coming in of the report—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair cannot instruct the gentleman any further until the report arrives.

Mr. POND—It seems to me that this resolution is not right.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman has already spoken to that effect.

Mr. POND—I have spoken for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Two have already spoken in favor of the resolution.

Mr. POND—I move to amend then.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman is in order by moving to amend.

Mr. POND—I move to strike out the clause sending the amendment to this committee. It was said when this committee was appointed they were a committee of revision, and this report was to be sent to them after it was completed in this Convention; they were merely to revise and put it in proper form. The result of this amendment, if I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], will, in effect, be sending this whole subject to this committee, which will constitute them a new committee on the right of suffrage and when their report comes in we will be just where we were four weeks ago. I move to strike out that part of the resolution sending the amendments to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that that is tantamount to striking out the resolution.

Mr. POND—The resolution then will be as I understood was originally contemplated?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman's motion is not in order, inasmuch as it is tantamount to a negative of the resolution.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. There are some twenty questions on reconsideration pending. I ask the Chair, if this motion prevails, whether, if these are lost, we will have a chance to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that they would be lost, inasmuch as the Convention will have disposed of the report of the Committee for the present.

Mr. RUMSEY—I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] as amended, by prefixing thereto the words, "at two o'clock P. M. this day unless otherwise disposed of."

Mr. SHERMAN—I accept that amendment.

Mr. ALVORD—I am in favor of this proposition, and for the purpose of calming the minds of gentlemen—

Mr. KERNAN—I rise to a point of order—that two gentlemen have spoken on that side.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Onondaga is in order.

Mr. ALVORD—I stated I was in favor of this resolution now as amended, provided it passes; and I desire to state to gentlemen here who were a little afraid of its effects upon their—

Mr. FERRY—I rise to a point of order. The amendment was accepted by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] when the resolution was that of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill]. He had accepted the previous amendment and it would be for him to accept the other amendment. It was not in the power of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] to accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair did not recognize it as accepted. He recognized it as the amendment made by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey].

Mr. ALVORD—I hope I shall be able to get through with my remarks. If any gentlemen desire to rise on other questions, I will wait until they get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] will proceed in order.

Mr. ALVORD—I wish to say that on the incoming of the report of the committee, and at almost any stage of the proceedings of this Convention, motions can be made to recommit, with instructions to put in direct matter which the reconsideration now contemplated to put in the article, or take from it. There is no difficulty in reaching this case at any or every time during the proceedings of the Convention under its rules. It can immediately, upon the incoming of the report of the select committee of five, or the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, be sent back again to the same committee with instructions, and as suggested by the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller], we can get at the motions to reconsider, made by various gentlemen on this floor. It simply takes it out, for the present, of the body of this Convention, and permits us to go through with some other business.

Mr. MERRILL—The idea I had in mind when I offered my amendment in the first instance, was to give this day to enable the Convention to perfect the article as agreed upon and adopted by the Convention. I accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], which provides for an immediate disposition of the whole matter, because I have become convinced, we should not improve the article by further amendments. If in order, I will accept the amendment fixing the hour at two o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is in order.

Mr. GREELEY—If the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], is correct, I must oppose this whole proposition as now amended, and ask that the Convention vote it down. If it is not to be settled on, but to be opened again when the report comes in, then we have adopted nothing and settled nothing, and we had better go on now till we complete it.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Have we not now the rule that at any time during the whole of this Convention, a motion to reconsider can be placed on the table, and the question of reconsidering can be brought up after three days with reference to any of our proceedings? How can we avoid it by any possibility, without going to work and reconstructing our rules?

Mr. GREELEY—I cannot answer the gentleman's question about rules, but I see plainly this is to end in nothing. I am willing to go on voting to-day till we decide on something, but if you are going to refer this to a committee and have it brought back again—I desire to say I hope you will not refer it to the Suffrage Committee, and I see no good in referring it all.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope the resolution as amended will prevail. I agree with the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that it is parliamentary and also that it is proper that if we have committed any serious errors, and shall hereafter discover them that we shall have an opportunity of correcting them—not by renewing and prolonging the debate, but by taking the question immediately thereon as we shall be prepared to do, and as we shall be compelled to do. As the session draws to its close, we shall probably have a change of our rules to expedite time. It has become evident to every member of this Convention that something must be done hereafter to divide the time more effectually between the various propositions that come before us, or the result of our labors will be lost—we will be unable to complete them in time to submit them to the people; some of the most important amendments we contemplate considering will have to go without consideration. It seems to me, the resolution now before us is the best, for saving time, of any that has been presented.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I offered my resolution with a sincere desire to facilitate the business of this body, but, as it has failed of that purpose, for the present I withdraw it.

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order. The resolution having been amended, I think the mover cannot withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair holds it is in order for the gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. FULLER—I desire to call up my motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] was adopted. The effect of that amendment was substantially to nullify the registry laws as they now stand, and the registry laws as continued with the same force since 1861. As the registry law now stands, before a person who is challenged upon the ground that he is not a citizen before the registry board, he must produce his naturalization papers. This amendment, if carried, would nullify any such provision. It was proposed to add a similar amendment several times yesterday at the end of the fourth section, and it was voted down by this Convention, and on Friday the Convention seemed to overlook the fact that it was adopted as an amendment to the second section. By the Revised Statutes also, or by the election laws of 1842, it is provided, that if any person is challenged on the ground that he has been convicted of an infamous crime, the record of the conviction shall be produced; so if he has been pardoned, the proof is the production of the pardon. But the effect of this amendment is to cut off all other proof and in all cases to make the right of the person challenged to depend on his own oath. I think the amendment should be reconsidered and voted down.

Mr. MASTEN—I hope this will not be reconsidered. I think the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller] labors under a misapprehension as to its effect. It does not apply to the case of registering, but rather applies to the proceedings which are to take place at the election, and before the inspectors of election. Now, sir, I am opposed to constituting the inspectors of election into a judicial tribunal to determine any of the questions which may arise there. I am in favor of the provision that it shall be determined upon the oath of the party who offers his vote. It is the simplest way of doing it, and it puts the whole responsibility upon him. Now, take the case of a man convicted of a crime. A party may have been convicted of an offense which disqualifies him. The record may not be there, and if the rule which the gentleman declares is the rule should prevail, why then the person who offers his vote would not be compelled to speak of the fact whether or not he was disqualified before he could demand the proof and his vote would be cast. If this amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Fuller] remains (for I believe it was proposed by him), then the question can be propounded to the person who offers his vote. If he has been pardoned, that question he can also speak to. I hope this will be retained because it applies only to what is to take place at the election, not as to the registry at all, and it avoids the constituting of an irresponsible temporary tribunal, and puts the whole responsibility upon the person, and he can easily be punished if he commits perjury in getting in his vote.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I hope the reconsideration will prevail, and I hope so for the reason that the effect of striking out this provision will be to protect the person who is challenged at the polls. It is in the recollection of every gentleman, I presume, within the sound of my voice, that men have been challenged at the polls and asked questions they were unable fully and definitely to answer; unable to state when and where precisely they were naturalized; unable to state some of the facts from memory; and under this provision as it reads, they could not bring to their aid the Revised Statutes; they could not bring to their aid their certificate of naturalization, nor could they bring to their aid their pardon from the Governor, nor any other thing except their naked memory. These people should have this privilege; should be able to back up their application to vote by such evidence as they may have at hand for that purpose, such as may contribute to strengthen their recollection, otherwise a man might be embarrassed when he is asked the usual questions, and might be unable to recollect distinctly, or to answer the questions which the board think he ought to answer correctly, and they may refuse his vote. For his protection he should be allowed to bring to his aid any fact, papers or documents within his reach to substantiate his right to vote. As this stands, he could not bring to his aid any special statute that might be passed for his benefit, nor could he bring his discharge from the army which authorizes a certain class of men to be naturalized, though they had been in the country but for a single year; he might prove he was born in Germany, and might have been in the United States for but one year, and as the law once stood he could not be naturalized. He might plead his discharge from the army to show under the laws of the United States he was in a condition to be naturalized, otherwise he might be defrauded of his vote by not being able to bring to his aid such evidence as I have alluded to.

Mr. CHESBRO—I do not understand the argument of the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. E. A. Brown], and I am opposed to striking out this provision which has been once inserted by the voice of the Convention. As I understand his argument, it is in aid of the person challenged that he desires to have this privilege stricken out. I inquire whether, if the man is challenged at the polls, whether any evidence he can produce there will save him the necessity of taking the oath, provided the challenge continues, as it will not aid him that he has a discharge from the army of the United States, or a pardon from the Governor, or any other fact which might show that he is a legal voter, provided always the challenge stands. That is why the challenge should depend upon the oath of the person challenged, and that being the only answer the gentleman makes to the argument of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Masten], it is unnecessary that I should detain the Convention any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the motion of Mr. Fuller to reconsider.

Mr. BICKFORD—I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Fuller, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Artell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—79.

Noes—Messrs. Barnard, Barte, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesbro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Collahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Develin, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Hale, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Matrice, Monell, More, Morris, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Robertson, Relfe, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—51.

Mr. HALE—I shall vote in favor of inserting these words, and I voted against the reconsideration on this ground. It strikes me that the last words in the fourth section render the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesbro] eminently proper. No person should vote at any such election that has not been registered according to law. If there is any object in the registry law it is to determine who are the legal voters, and I would confine the duty of the inspectors of election to hear and determine on the oath of persons challenged, and not constitute them a judicial tribunal at that time to receive evidence in regard to it. The officers who take the registry are the ones who should make the judicial examination and require evidence other than the oath of the party.

Mr. FULLER—As the law stands now, the same challenge precisely may be made before the registry board as can be made at the polls. They are made precisely in the same manner, and the law provides how they shall be determined, and there is a necessity that challenges shall be made and determined by the registry board as well as at the polls, and if challenges are made there, the Legislature should have the power to provide how those challenges should be determined. But if this amendment remains in force, upon a challenge before the registering board on the ground that a person was not a citizen, the Legislature could not compel him to produce his naturalization papers. The challenge would have to be determined on his oath alone, so that if a man was challenged on the ground that he was convicted of a crime, although he was convicted of a crime, and was unworthy of credit on that account, the only test of his right to vote would be his own oath, and you could not require the production of the record.

Mr. EVARTS—I voted for the reconsideration, but I do not see my way clear to reject entirely this protection of the right of suffrage. Our general rule, Mr. President, as we all know, in the administration of law here is to punish the commission of crime, and not to prevent its commission by restrictions aimed at that object. Now unquestionably it is incongruous that we should allow the oath of the elector when he is challenged, to displace a record of conviction, and it is that incongruity I imagine that has led most of those who have voted to exclude this clause from the Constitution. I believe that in general the adjudication of the right to vote to the exclusion of the vote, should not be entrusted to any board whatever, but that the right to vote when dependent upon the inquiry, then for the first time made, and not previously before decided in respect to the cause of challenge, should be determined in favor of the vote upon the oath of the elector leaving him to be punished for giving a spurious vote, not being entitled thereto, and guarding the ballot-box by that security. I move, therefore, this amendment to the section—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—No amendment is now in order.

Mr. EVARTS — I would suggest, then, that in lieu of including this rigid requirement that all challenges shall be determined upon the oath of the person challenged, a clause of this kind would meet the principles contended for on both sides, to wit:

"All challenges, except for cause of conviction for crime, shall be determined upon the oath of the person challenged."

Mr. CHESEBRO — If it is in my power to accept that amendment I would be willing to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — It is rather an anomalous and awkward position in which the Chair finds itself in the consideration of an amendment which was adopted two or three days ago, and now comes up to be reconsidered, after much else has been discussed and settled and that is the reason the Chair said it was not in order to amend. The article has almost passed out of the hands of the Convention, but is still under its order, having been substantially adopted by the Convention. Now, we are going back to pick up these motions to reconsider, which have been dropped along through the debate. It seemed to the Chair proper, although it is a new question, that when the motion to reconsider is adopted, the consideration of the amendment should be confined to the identical, strict proposition contained in the amendment which was adopted or lost, therefore the Chair ruled, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts], was about to offer an amendment, that amendments were not in order. It may be that the Chair is wrong in that, but that is his present opinion, but it is an anomalous position in which we stand in regard to this motion to reconsider, under the peculiar rule we have for reconsideration of votes. The Chair has never known it to be adopted in a parliamentary body before.

Mr. DEVELIN — I would respectfully submit to the President and to the Convention, that when this amendment is reconsidered it stands in the same position it did when it was originally offered. I cannot see any difference; and, if that be so, the mover of the amendment can accept any amendment proposed to it, although the amendment was not in order for discussion or consideration by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will take the sense of the Convention upon the question of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. E. BROOKS — Upon the point of order which has been suggested by the Chair, I suggest and maintain that we are under the operation of parliamentary law, and that we are precisely where we were when this amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], and having receded to that point, it is as much in order to move an amendment now as it was before the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GREELEY — I shall oppose this amendment in any form, but I submit to my friend, who also opposed it, that we allow, by the unanimous consent of the Convention, the friends of the amendment to amend it as they choose.

Mr. GARVIN — Does the gentleman mean by that to allow all amendments?

Mr. GREELEY — No, only this amendment. I shall oppose the amendment on this ground, Mr. President: A man comes up to vote, and we have a hundred names on the poll list, where there are no voters. Here is John Wilcox comes to vote. Well, ten of us know he is not John Wilcox; we know he is not that man that is on the registry, notwithstanding he says he can swear he is. He swears through and votes, and that point is not covered by this amendment, and I shall vote against it. I hope those opposed to it will allow the friends of the amendment to perfect it by the amendment they propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair would prefer that some gentleman take an appeal from his ruling, so as to settle this question.

Mr. DEVELIN — In accordance with the suggestion of the Chair, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair so understands the gentleman.

Mr. DEVELIN — And I appeal for this reason, that it is an unsettled point, and it is very important that it should be settled by the Convention, because this question will be arising almost every day; but I should suggest, if it is decided that no amendment can be made, it will be a cause of difficulty when amendments are considered and cannot be amended, although the Convention may desire the amendment to be made.

The question was then put on sustaining the decision of the Chair, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CONGER — I call for the count.

Mr. GREELEY — I hope, by unanimous consent, this amendment will be allowed.

Mr. EVARTS — I think I answer in order to move an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair rules "no." The question put by the Chair was: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the Convention?" and that was sustained.

Mr. CONGER — Before the Chair announced that the decision of the Chair was sustained, I called for a count.

The question was then put on sustaining the decision of the Chair, and, on a division, it was declared not sustained by a vote 53 to 60.

Mr. DEVELIN — I desire to have it inserted on the minutes that I made this appeal under the suggestion of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — It will be so entered.

Mr. CHESEBRO — I now desire to say I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts].

Mr. EVARTS — I have not yet made the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — I have not heard any amendment offered.

Mr. EVARTS — I now rise to make an amendment, if it is in order. I move to insert after the word "challenges" in the clause proposed to be inserted into the Constitution "all challenges except for conviction for crime, and for omission to register, shall be determined upon the oath of the person challenged."

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] if he would not add to his amendment the words "all challenges at the polls." There is some difficulty felt in the Convention, that this may be made to apply to the challenge of a man's right to register. I only understood the mover to desire to have it apply to challenges at the polls.

Mr. EVARTS—I desire to have my amendment apply to all objections of voting that are, for the first time, to be judicially determined. I understand the clause of the Constitution as already accepted to provide for registration, and I propose, therefore, that that should stand as a criterion of the right to vote in that respect, and not the elector's oath. So, too, for the commission of crime. I propose that the record of the crime should stand to exclude the vote, notwithstanding the oaths of the electors. But I know of no other ground of objection to an elector, which upon challenge, should not in taking the vote be disposed of in his favor, upon his oath, leaving him to the punishment prescribed by law for giving a false or spurious vote. Now, if my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] will point out to me, and to this Convention, any cases in respect to registration which may need some further modification, I perhaps would be ready to give my assent to it.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] did not understand me. I do not desire to have it apply to registration. I desire to have it apply simply to challenges at the polls. The word "challenge" in the statute affecting registration is used in reference to objection made at the time of registration, and it was for the purpose of confining this to challenge at the polls that I desired the words added at the close of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts].

Mr. BARNARD—I wish to suggest that what has been stated by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] is perfectly correct, that at the polls we should not be delayed by inquiring into the right of voting, because if we do not take simply the oath of the voter, the person challenging may say, "I have got a dozen witnesses to prove that the man is not a resident of this district;" and he will bring forward witness after witness who may give testimony on that subject, and the person challenged may find it necessary not only to put in his own oath, but to call others to prove he is a voter in the district, and the inspector may be a whole day taking proof whether one voter resides in the district, and thus all other voters are excluded from voting.

Mr. McDONALD—I am opposed to any amendment, for the simple reason that we are now venturing on legislation again. We are now determining what proof we shall have, and seeing whether we shall determine to have the proof at the polls, or at the registry, or at this place or that. It seems to me we have got to leave a little something for the Legislature to do, and if we leave to them, as we proposed to do, to say what shall be the evidence used at the registry, we might as well leave to them to say what evidence shall be used at the polls, or leave it as it is in the Constitution; and the argument of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard], and the argument of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and all the arguments used here, will be very proper at that time, and I doubt not, the Legislature will then determine what is the best evidence at either or both places.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—Is another amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the word "challenges," the words "at the polls."

Mr. EVARTS—I accept this proposition for this reason alone, that I think the whole subject of registration may be more safely left to the Legislature than these matters that we are now disposing of.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is not in the power of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] to accept the amendment. It is an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro].

Mr. CONGER—I will present very briefly to the Convention, the reason why any challenge allowed before the board of registry, would operate very severely on a certain class of citizens who have not been adverted to in this discussion. The gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller], who first spoke on this question, seemed to think it was a matter of great importance, that every naturalized citizen should produce his certificate of naturalization, and if he had lost it, or could not recur to the time or the court in which he was naturalized, and could not readily obtain a copy of that certificate, that would render it a ground of challenge by which he should be refused registry as well as voting. Now, Mr. President, under the Constitution of the United States, as proposed to be amended, we have got two classes of citizens, native-born citizens and naturalized citizens. If you allow this question to be opened I want to know when my honorable friend from Monroe [Mr. Fuller] comes to be challenged, and he is challenged on the ground that he is not a native-born citizen of the State of New York, or of the United States, whether he is to be called upon to produce a copy of the baptismal register to show where he was born and whether he is truly a citizen of the State of New York. The moment you adopt a rule in the one case you will make it applicable to the other, and the attempt to embarrass the naturalized citizen in regard to the certificate of his naturalization will apply to the native-born citizen in order to oblige him to prove that he is a native born citizen. You perceive that if you limit this to the amendment proposed, if you limit the power of a citizen to determine a challenge of this kind on his oath at the polls, you subject him to the very greatest inconvenience when he comes to be registered, and an embarrassment of this kind at the registry office might work as great a detriment as a challenge at the polls. I think, therefore, that we ought to have the general provision by which every citizen could purge a challenge on his own oath.

Mr. LAPHAM—I am opposed, Mr. President, to the amendment as well as to the original proposition, upon this ground, that we are again entering upon the field of legislation. This whole subject is properly a matter which should be regulated by legislative action, and it cannot be made with any propriety the subject of a provision in the Constitution. I respectfully submit to the consideration of the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts], that it is better to leave this whole subject to the control and direction of the Legislature in reference to the laws which may be enacted for the purpose of providing for registration of voters, and providing for the conduct of electors at the polls. There is no necessity for undertaking in the fundamental law to make a provision which cannot be changed as long as the Constitution lasts, although experience may show that changes from time to time are not only desirable but absolutely necessary to preserve the purity of the elective franchise. The Legislature can, from time to time, adapt the laws to the necessity of the times by the experience which shall grow up in the administration of affairs under the Constitution, but if we put into the Constitution this provision it is there to remain, and cannot be altered, however defective or inapplicable it may be found, and for that reason I hope that nothing upon this subject will be put into the Constitution, and that the original proposition of my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro] will be stricken out, and that the amendment which is now proposed will be rejected also.

Mr. CHESBRO — I do not concur with my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] in the views which he has just suggested to the Convention. I regard the preservation of this right to the elector as a fundamental right.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Is the gentleman speaking in favor of this amendment or opposed to it?

Mr. CHESBRO — I am opposed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Two have already spoken against it.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Hitchcock, and upon a division it was declared carried by a vote of 56 to 25.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Chesebro as amended, and on a division it was declared lost by a vote of 40 to 73.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro] inserting the words, "Nor while a student of any seminary of learning."

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Van Campen to reconsider, and on a division it was declared lost by a vote of 44 to 53.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I call for the ayes and noes. A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. GREELEY — I desire to explain simply that what the friends of reconsideration ask is not any legislation in favor of students. We do not wish the Convention to decide that a student gains a residence by going into another town or county to vote. Perhaps he does, and perhaps he does not. It depends upon circumstances over which this Convention can have no control. I have known of men going to college and becoming residents of the towns in which they were studying, and I have known other cases in which they did not. What we ask is that this Convention do not attempt to legislate on a question which this Convention cannot possibly decide; a question of circumstances wherein it may be that the student goes to the other town to reside, and may be he does not; we ask you to let the facts govern the case; let the authorities, when they come to register a voter, decide whether the voter is a resident of a certain township or not, and not arbitrarily say that when a man has gone to Auburn or Geneva or some other town to be a student it disqualifies him from being a voter for four years by that fact. I ask this Convention not to decide that question against the facts, as you must do. Let the student like the day laborer and the mechanic and the professor and the clergyman, stand on one foundation. If he has changed his residence, then he has a right to vote in the place to which he has removed. If he has not changed his residence, he has not the right to vote. I ask you not to make this discrimination against a class of men who are not less worthy, who are at any rate not less intelligent than other men, to become citizens. They have the same right as the hod-carrier and as every other man, and you should not, by an arbitrary rule, determine that they shall be disfranchised, it may be, for four or seven years.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — I am in favor of a reconsideration of the vote by which this amendment was adopted, for the reason that I have observed the operation of the provision of the present Constitution in its application to the students in the theological seminary located at the city where I reside. There are in that institution some forty or fifty young men, most of whom have before coming there, pursued a course of liberal education in one or other of the colleges of the country. They cut loose from their parental homes, many of them, when they went to college. They are young men who, while yet in college, have been supporting themselves by teaching school, and gaining a temporary support, and the means for the further prosecution of their education. They come to Auburn, and enter the theological seminary and precisely the same is true in regard to many other similar institutions. They come there and enter the theological seminary, with no other home than that at which they are thus pursuing their studies. They are of age. They have cut loose, as I said before, from the parental home. They have made no settlement for life, but while they are studying, the place at which they reside for the purpose of pursuing their studies is their home, and I ask, sir, why they should not be allowed by thus settling in such a place to gain a residence for the purpose of voting? If they have been one year in the State, four months in the county, and otherwise have conformed to the requirements of the Constitution, give them a residence there. They have no other residence, and if they have no residence there, they are deprived of the privilege of voting.

Mr. BARKER — I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Chesebro] will be retained. I think there is a misapprehension on the part of my friend from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] as to the extent and interpretation of the Constitutional provision as it now stands. There is no provision against the student gaining a residence in the place where the college is located in which he may be a student. It aims at the provision that, when the student is yet connected with the family circle, it shall not be charged to him that he gains or loses a residence while he is in college. But he may gain a residence at the place where the college is located by going to that place and making it his home, and there is no interpretation of the provision as it stood in the Constitution of 1846 against the suggestion which I now make, and it is to protect the student that this provision is inserted, and I claim it should be retained.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask the gentleman whether he understood the proposition "while there remaining" as equivalent to "by reason of attending." If it is simply that he shall not acquire or lose a residence by reason of attending, his proposition may probably be correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I am in favor of retaining this proposition and against the reconsideration of the motion for the very reason suggested by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. I am opposed to any class legislation in regard to electors, therefore I agree with him that no man should gain or lose his residence. If persons go to a seminary of learning for the purpose of taking up their residence there and becoming residents, and if that is their only home then they are residents of that locality, and can vote, and there is no prohibition against it in the Constitution. But what I object to is, they may go to a seminary and vote there, not having lost a residence at their native home. This was a provision of the Constitution of 1846, and I have heard no complaint of it anywhere, and I do not see why it should not be retained in this Constitution.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Van Campen to reconsider, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Ballard, Beckwith, Bickford, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Cheritroe, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ferry, Flaglor, Fowler, Gould, Greeley, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Huntington, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Williams—51.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Baker, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Bell, Bergen, E. Brooks, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corning, Eddy, Endress, Everts, Farnum, Folger, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Graves, Hadley, Hale, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hitchman, Houston, Kernan, Krum, Landon, Law, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Magee, Maston, Mattice, Merwin, Miller, More, Morris, Paige, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rogers, Rolfe, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Veeder, Verplanck, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Young—74.

Mr. VEEDER—I desire to call up a motion made by myself, to reconsider the vote by which the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] was adopted yesterday.

Mr. GREELEY—The object of the reconsideration, as I understand it, is mainly to restore a clause which the Convention yesterday, after careful deliberation, inserted in these words: "and the Legislature shall provide for the registration of any such electors as shall be, unavoidably absent from the place of registration in their respective districts." By a full vote, after a fair discussion, the Convention decided that those words should stand as a part of the Constitution, but by indirection and by inadvertence on the part of the gentleman who moved the amendment [Mr. Daly] these words were not included in the provision, whereby the clause generally was changed. He did not desire to strike that out, and I am sure the Convention did not, and we ask to reconsider simply to be enabled to restore those words which have been thus struck out by mistake. I trust the Convention will allow us to reconsider, and if it shall so decide, to restore this clause.

Mr. ALVORD—It was with very great deliberation, and after due consideration and argument; and notwithstanding the work was so well done as supposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], this Convention, by a very much more decisive vote, agreed they had been mistaken, and they put in the proposition named by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. I agree with the gentleman from Westchester in endeavoring to make this matter of registration as perfect as it possibly can be, but it seems to me he departs from the result he aims at the moment he permits any amendment of this kind to be entertained by this Convention or to be inserted in the Constitution, and we might as well throw all registration to the winds as to entertain any such motion as this; it is opening up the whole matter from beginning to end, and will lead to a great deal more corruption than by any possibility could be practiced if we leave this as it is. I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. BARKER—I desire to say one word before the Convention votes on this question, and I will call attention to the effect of the section as it now stands. It provides that no elector shall vote unless his name is registered. That is one positive provision. Another provision is, it shall take place six days before an election—another positive provision. That the Legislature shall provide by law the details of this registration—another positive provision. That is all there is in the section in regard to it, and in my judgment, it had better be stricken out and be left to the wisdom of succeeding Legislatures. If the provision of the gentleman is introduced, it has this effect, that it puts it beyond the power of the Legislature to require a personal registration. I do not believe there is much wisdom in requiring it, but if experience shall show that it is necessary, let that be a legislative enactment. The gentleman is not very wise as I apprehend, in the use of his language when he says, "persons may be excused from making personal registration if they are unavoidably absent." There is no tribunal that can decide that question. It is one of dis-

...may be settled by considering the propriety of circumstances. But I am mainly opposed to the proposed reconsideration of the section as it now stands. It is in my judgment and it is dangerous to bring upon the trial of adding new provisions, and I hope that the motion to reconsider will be rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN—I made this motion, sir, and I want to know to reconsider this vote for the purpose of correcting what in my judgment was an error, in striking out this provision, providing for registration of voters necessarily absent from their election district at the time the registration is going on. This amendment as proposed, does not provide for the voting of a party who is not registered. There is no such proposition; but it is then when a party is unavoidably or necessarily absent from his election district at the time the registration is going on, that the Legislature shall, by law, provide a means by which that absent elector's name may be placed upon the registry list. That is the only object of the amendment. In the city of Brooklyn, many cases have come under my own personal observation where electors have been necessarily absent from their residence at the time of registration, but returned in time to vote, but by virtue of the law of 1866, which required a personal attendance before the registration board, they were precluded from voting. I myself came very near being precluded from voting because of that law, although I have voted in that election district for the past ten years and was known to be a voter. I was out of town and detained, but by good fortune I was successful in getting back, just absolutely in time to get my name upon the register. Is this fair? It is unfair when the parties are positively known to all the board of registry, who are absent from the registration. It is unfair that they should not have the means of placing their names upon the register, where they are known beyond all question to be voters, and to be necessarily absent at the time of registration. With us we have several gentlemen who are engaged as pilots—Hell Gate and Sandy Hook pilots—who reside in the city of Brooklyn, and are often out on a cruise to bring in vessels, through the Hell Gate channel or the Sandy Hook channel, and they may be detained there upon the day of registration, and consequently they are precluded from voting, yet everybody knows they are voters. Hundreds of these instances are occurring from time to time; parties are unavoidably called out of town, their families may be away and an accident may happen, and they may be telegraphed for to come immediately, and before they can return the time for registration has expired, and, by virtue of this law, they are excluded from voting. I call for the ayes and noes on this motion.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion to reconsider, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barnard, Barto, Bergen, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clinton, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Garvin, Gerry, Greeley, Hale, Har-denburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Law, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Masten, Mattice, More, Morris, Paige, A. J. Parker, Potter, Rogers, Rolfe, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Strong, M. I. Townsend, M. S. Townsend, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—50.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beala, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cherrie, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Evarts, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Gould, Graves, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, T. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Spencer, Stratton, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—75.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the article under consideration, with all pending questions relating thereto, be referred to the Committee of Revision, with instructions to report the article revised as to language, and corrected as to inconsistencies, if any exist therein, but without change of substantial provisions.

Mr. RUMSEY moved to amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof the following:

Resolved, That the committee of five to whom the article on the right of suffrage is referred, be instructed to insert at the end of the first section the following:

"Provided, That in time of war, no elector in the actual military service of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from the State."

Mr. RUMSEY—The object of that amendment is simply to correct an incongruity in the article as it now stands. There is a provision in the third section, that the Legislature shall provide for the manner in which electors who are absent from home may vote. There is a proviso in the first section which says that no elector shall vote except in the district where he resides, and the resolution I have offered is simply to correct that incongruity, and make a provision that will allow soldiers to vote in time of war.

Mr. SHERMAN—The resolution I offered I think provides for that, for it provides that any inconsistencies existing in the article, the committee may correct. I do not say myself there is any inconsistency such as the gentleman speaks of, but if so, the committee can correct it.

Mr. WAKEMAN—If the Legislature provides for the absent voter, it provides that he votes in the district where he resides, and under the present Constitution as amended, the absent electors vote in the district where they reside and where they are registered; the Legislature provides that the vote may be deposited in a certain way, and conveyed by some person to be deposited in the district where he resides, so he in that way votes in the district where he belongs.

Mr. RUMSEY—If it is understood that is an inconsistency, the committee may or may not amend, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I offer the following as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman]:

That the report now under consideration, with all the provisions lying upon the table relating to the same, be committed to the select committee appointed on the 27th day of July, with instructions to report to the Convention in principle and substance, article second, section first of the Constitution of 1846, with the following amendments:

No property qualification for the right of suffrage or for eligibility to office, shall ever be required.

No person authorized to vote under the existing Constitution, shall be disfranchised, nor shall the right of suffrage be abridged or extended; Provided, however, That laws shall be passed by the first Legislature assembled after the adoption of this Constitution, excluding from the right to vote all persons who may pay or receive money or any other thing of value, or promise any consideration, place or office, with the view of securing or preventing the election of any candidate for any Federal, State or local office, or who may be engaged in buying or selling votes, or in any way preventing the purity of the ballot or the freedom of elections.

Mr. CONGER—I move to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] by adding at the end of it, "And with further instructions to amend the last clause of section four, so as to prevent the defeasance of a vote—"

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. FERRY—I am opposed to the adoption of this resolution, unless some good reason can be shown for it, and unless the other motions to reconsider can be heard. I made one myself and I would like an opportunity to be heard, unless some good reason can be shown why we should stop with this imperfect review of this report.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment proposed by Mr. Conger, as follows:

"And with further instructions to amend the last clause of section four, so as to prevent the defeasance of votes on the failure to make a proper register, or in the event of its destruction before it is finished. And to add to section six the last clause of article twelve of the Constitution of 1846."

Mr. FERRY—Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman has already spoken once.

Mr. FERRY—This is only part of my speech—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Then the gentleman has occupied his full time.

Mr. CONGER—In regard to the first of these propositions I wish very briefly to show its meaning—

Mr. CORBETT—I rise to a point of order. That the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has already made a speech on offering the amendment and cannot make another one—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it hardly amounted to a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I would like to inquire how many times the gentleman from Rockland

[Mr. Conger] is at liberty to speak under the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Only once.

Mr. CONGER—After these grave questions are settled, sir—

Mr. RATHBUN—I believe the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has occupied the floor from the time he first rose, and has occupied his full time.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Rockland was putting his resolution in writing under the direction of the Chair. The gentleman from Rockland will now proceed and occupy his full time.

Mr. CONGER—When I drew the attention of the Convention this morning to what I believe to be a very great defect and a cardinal vice in this last clause of section four, the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] almost expressed his derision, by a palpable sneer at the view I had presented—

Mr. MERRILL—I rise to a point of order, that the last part of the amendment of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has been voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The whole proposition of the gentleman from Rockland is now taken together.

Mr. CONGER—I wish to be advised if I did not correctly understand the Chair yesterday to say when this question was presented, when the question was asked, not formally but indirectly, of the Chair by a gentleman on my right, whether the effect of the last clause would not, in the event of the destruction of the registry list before it was perfected, exclude all persons from voting whose names were not on the list.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair does not remember having given any such legal decision.

Mr. CONGER—In regard to the latter part of the resolution—that we shall instruct the committee—I deem it a matter of the gravest importance that the last section of article twelve of the Constitution of 1846 should be added, otherwise it will be in the power of the Legislature, in addition to the oath which has now been added to the ordinary official oath, to impose any form of oath, declaration or test that it may see fit to do, and it is in violation of a constitutional provision which has existed in the State since 1821, and in violation of the uniform practice of the people of the State since the adoption of its first Constitution in 1777. I look upon these as very great mischiefs; I may be in very great error, but I submit in all sincerity it is due by this Convention to the great body of the people to have these questions clearly and definitely stated.

Mr. HADLEY—I move that the Convention do now take a recess until four o'clock.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hadley, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

Mr. KETCHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Revision, to which is referred the subject of the elective franchise, be instructed to strike out the word "to," in line five of section four, and to insert in lieu thereof the words, "which in cities and incorpo-

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. HUTCHINS also presented the petition of S. Kaufman and several hundred others, citizens of New York, in relation to the free school system.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. HATCH presented the petition of C. C. Staubro, of Concord, R. F. Yates and others asking for a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from donating money to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GRAVES presented the petition of the Sons of Temperance against the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. presented a communication from the Superintendent of Public Instructions in answer to the resolution of inquiry introduced by Mr. Barto.

Which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN gave the following notice, that he would on some future day, move to suspend the third and twenty-first rules, so that it shall be in order for him, at the proper time, to move the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That in order to facilitate action on the article reported by the "Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc.," the Committee of the Whole be directed to consider, before acting on the article by sections, the following general propositions, viz.:

1. Of what number shall the Senate consist.
2. Of what number shall the Assembly consist.
3. How many senate districts shall there be.
4. What shall be the term of Senators.
5. What the term of members of Assembly.
6. Shall members of Assembly be elected by counties or by single districts, or in what other manner.

7. Shall the apportionment of senate districts be made by the Convention or left to the Legislature.

8. Shall the apportionment of members of Assembly be made by the Convention or left to the Legislature.

Mr. HARRIS—I am instructed by the Committee on Cities to report back the resolution offered by Mr. Stratton, of New York, calling upon the Comptroller of the city of New York for information in relation to moneys received from various sources, and recommend its passage.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the city of

New York be and he is hereby instructed to make full report to this Convention of the net sums annually received from the several sources herein enumerated and applied through the sinking fund for the redemption of the city debt, or to the payment of interest on the city debt during years from 1847 to 1866 inclusive, and a statement showing the expenses incurred in each of said years, in granting such licenses, collecting such fees, and in legal efforts to enforce payment or collect penalties for non-compliance to law or ordinance in each of such cases; whether such expenses were allowed by the mayor and common council of the city, or by the board of supervisors of the county, namely:

1. For licenses to pawnbrokers and to dealers in second-hand furniture, metals or clothes.
2. For licenses for hackney coaches and drivers.
3. For fees of market privileges and market rents.
4. For mayoralty fees.
5. For fines and penalties.
6. For fees and fines collected by clerks and courts.
7. For tavern and excise licenses.

The question was put on the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Contingent Expenses, submitted the following report:

Your committee to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Conger, directing "the clerk to furnish to the reporters who have been admitted to the courtesies of the floor, the stationery necessary for them in the discharge of their functions as reporters, and that he report the amount and value, of such stationery, as severally distributed by him before the close of the sitting of this Convention," respectfully report: That they are opposed to the adoption of the resolution for reasons stated in a former report made to this body upon a similar resolution introduced by Mr. Tucker, and for the further reason that they regard the questions involved as settled by the deliberate action of this Convention, in adopting said report. This ought to be and must be the effect of such action provided both resolutions are substantially alike and your committee believe that the more orderly, if not the more respectful course would be, to move a reconsideration of the former vote if a change was desired by any member dissatisfied with it.

The first resolution—that of Mr. Tucker—authorized the granting of like stationery to the reporters, as had already been received by the members, to wit, $30 each.

The last resolution directs the clerk to furnish them all necessary stationery, without limiting the amount thereof, and in this respect only does the last resolution essentially differ from the first. We regard this difference, however, as a highly objectionable feature in the last resolution. The lessons of the past have taught us that it is much safer and better to limit all appropriations of this character where there is nothing to interpose between the avarice of individuals and the public treasury but the discretion of an official, however worthy that official may be, and we regard this as so manifestly true that we occupy no time in attempting to prove others, referred to in the Constitution of this State as "men of color" praying that no discrimination be made in the exercise of the elective franchise, based on any property qualification.

Which was laid on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented the petition of J. M. Mott and about sixty others of Fort Edward, Washington county, praying that an article be inserted in the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. COCHRAN presented the petition of Rev. Benjamin C. Lippincott and 105 others, citizens of Rockland county, asking that a provision be inserted in the Constitution prohibiting the donations of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL presented the petition of of Rev. L. C. Brown and others, citizens of Canton, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL also presented the petition of W. C. McDonald, and other citizens of Winfield, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. TAPPEN presented the petition of George J. Means and twenty-seven others on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. LOWREY presented the petition of John Vanderbilt, asking that section 6 of article 1 of the Constitution be amended, making it the duty of the court to see that just compensation is made for private property taken for public uses.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. YOUNG presented the petition of J. Thompson, of New York city, and asked that the same be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the petition, as follows:

Without stopping to elaborate a petition in due form, to your honorable body, I beg to recommend that the question of interest and the penalties for usury be taken into consideration by the Convention. In the National Currency Act, Congress has empowered the banks in this State (as our laws now stand) to take seven per cent interest, and has limited the penalty for usury to a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill or other evidence of debt carries with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. (See section 30, act of June 3d, 1864, commonly called the National Currency Act.) This forfeiture is so mild that the banks can take usury with impunity, they being amenable under the acts of Congress, and not under any State act.

The laws of our State are so unmercifully severe as regards usury that the borrower of money is often forced into bargains more disastrous than any rate of interest, even of one hundred per cent per annum. Our law forfeits the entire debt and cancels the obligation; no matter how ignorant and innocent the bona fide holder of a tainted obligation may be. (See sections 5 and 14, pages 182-3, second volume Revised Statutes.) And if the law is fully administered, the taking of usury is a misdemeanor, to be punished by fine and imprisonment. (See section 15, page 183, volume 2.) This State law governs in all cases both private and corporate, except at the banks whose powers, privileges and forfeitures are fixed and defined by act of Congress. I ask, first, is it wise to retain in the statutes, acts that no court has ever enforced, to wit, the fine and imprisonment for usury. Second, is it just to place the people and corporations of the State, at such disadvantage with the corporations whose powers are derived from Congress.

Very Respectfully,
J. THOMPSON.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Banking and Insurance.

Mr. RUMSEY presented the petition of 109 citizens of Orange, Schuyler county, asking for a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from donating public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of D. B. Winton and others on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND presented the petition of thirty-seven electors, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. presented the petition of Isaac S. Hand and others, citizens of Brooklyn, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. also presented the sort, I hold that what is proposed is a proper courtesy and the discharge of a proper duty on the part of the Convention. I therefore hope the resolution submitted by the gentleman representing the minority will be adopted.

Mr. VEEDER — I desire to make this explanation. I had no desire at all to defeat the adoption of the report of the minority, but I submit that there are some things mentioned in the report of the majority that ought to be answered, and for the purpose of enabling us to examine the report carefully I desire it should be printed before we act upon it. If the Convention are ready now to act upon it I am perfectly willing myself to vote.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Mr. Van Campen and it was declared adopted.

Mr. E. BROOKS — If a motion were now made to reconsider the vote just taken could it be had at once?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — It could not. It must lie on the table.

Mr. McDONALD — In regard to this vote, it seems to me, if we propose to pass upon the recommendation of the majority or receive and adopt the recommendations of the minority of the committee, we should do it by a reconsideration. We have already a similar resolution reported by this committee which refused to grant this amount, and as I understand the Convention they have refused to grant it simply on the ground that we have no power to give away any amount for such purpose. I admit, as any one else does, that the reporters deserve this amount if we had it to give, but I contend that we have no more right to give away the money of the State than we have to give away the money belonging to an individual. If the Convention is willing, I should be very glad to join with them in order to give this amount to the reporters. I do not think the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] will claim that there is any authority in this Convention to give away this money as conferred by the law under which we are acting. I know the gentleman has cited the fact that we have given the papers a certain amount for publishing the debates of this Convention; that resolution or rather that decision may be authority for him, but as I was opposed to that decision it is no authority for me at all. If I remember aright, that resolution was passed by this Convention because a large majority of members thought that the Legislature had overlooked such a provision and regarded it as a matter of necessity — a matter of absolute necessity, and under that view they passed that resolution. But because we have taken one wrong step in that direction, it is no reason why we should take another. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], in accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], shows that he is desirous the appropriation should be limited. The resolution of that gentleman simply makes this the identical resolution which this Convention has already voted down, and which, as I have said before, was voted down simply for want of authority in this Convention. Relying upon this precedent, and believing that we have no more right to give away the money of the people of the State than we have to give away the money of any individual, I am not willing to support this resolution, and hope that the report of the majority will be accepted instead of that of the minority.

Mr. CORBETT — Those who are in favor of the report of the minority are simply in favor of what is the usual practice in the State Legislature, and what they believe is fairly contemplated by the law convening this body. We have invited gentlemen here to report our proceedings, and I think it is not asking too much that we should give them the requisite ink and paper with which to perform the service. It is exceedingly fortunate that cheap economy has such a valiant champion as the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald]; but I look upon it as a very shabby piece of business to deny to the reporters of this Convention the necessary facilities to perform the duties we have imposed upon them. The people of this State are not misers, and they will sanction any expenditure that may be necessary to enable this Convention to successfully complete its labors. I trust, therefore, the Convention will adopt the minority report and thus be generous as well as just.

Mr. REYNOLDS — I am a member of the Contingent Expense Committee, and one of the majority of that committee that reported against making the appropriation contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tucker] which was referred to that committee. The Convention sustained that report. The resolution of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is identical in character with the one against which the committee had already reported. And as their action had been sustained by the Convention, they were justified in believing that their position in regard to this and all similar appropriations of the public money was in accordance with the sentiment of the Convention. Under these circumstances the Committee felt bound to report against the appropriation contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] — fully believing that there was no authority of law for it. Personally, I have no feeling in the matter, and if the Convention shall reverse its former decision, and now sustain the minority report, as an individual member of that committee I shall make no objection, though such action will not change my opinion as to the propriety of the course taken by the committee — and can but regard such action by the Convention as unfortunate as influencing its action in regard to similar appropriations in the future.

Mr. TAPPEN — I apprehend that the action of this body was an error upon the former occasion, which it is not proposed to repeat now. I believe to refuse this allowance would not be justice, but would be parsimonious, and would be great injustice to the number of gentlemen who are acting in official relations between this body and the people. We have the example of legislative bodies in awarding this mere pittance to gentlemen representing the public press, and these gentlemen who are here, are the telegraph between this body and the people of the State. I hold it to be an act of justice which this Convention will now perform in adopting the resolution as amended by the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen].

awarding the thirty dollars worth of stationery for these gentlemen who are faithfully attending this body, and go back upon what is called the former action of the Convention on this subject.

Mr. ALVORD—I happen to be one of the unfortunate class who voted against this proposition when it was up before, and it is almost in the same terms now as it was then, but fortunately at that time I was in the majority of the Convention, and I hope will still continue to be thus fortunate in the future. I hold there is no sort of question about the fact that we have no authority or right which would justify us in taking money from the public treasury for this purpose. It does not obtain, nor has it, as far as I understand, obtained in any legislative body other than the State of New York, within the limits of the United States of America, nor does it obtain in the Congress of the United States. These reporters, who are they? They are the reporters of the public press, who come here, not by our invitation, but who ask us the privilege, in the furtherance of the interests of their employers, to have a place upon this floor in order to report our proceedings and make their papers the more valuable in consequence of it. They are under the necessity of having public information and they are sent here for that purpose by their employers in the first instance, and not invited by us here to seats upon the floor for our convenience. Another thing, sir, I hold that it is neither miserly upon my part, and it is neither inconsistent upon my part to take this position. If it were a necessity, sir, that we should have these reporters here and could not get them here otherwise than by paying them thirty dollars worth of stationery, I would be willing to take the money out of my own pocket and give to these men to the amount of thirty dollars, in my proportion, in order to give them this stationery, but when I have it put directly before me in my face, that under the law which has convened us together, we have no right thus to dispose of the public money, and that the Comptroller of the State, in the performance of his duty, will refuse to pay any such amount out of the funds of the State appropriated for this Convention, and that it must of necessity be that if these men are furnished stationery upon the order of the Clerk, the men who furnish it will have to go to the next Legislature for an enabling act to get the money out of the Treasury to pay them, therefore, I am opposed to the whole matter. I therefore, with due deference to the Convention ask that the Chair shall decide that this question having been once determined in substance, if not in form, by the Convention, that it cannot be gotten up in the present shape of the amendment of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen] by way of consideration. I make that point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not sufficiently familiar with the resolution to decide that the point of order is well taken. This question comes upon the report of the committee, and it has got to be disposed of.

Mr. ALVORD—If the Chair does not desire to decide that, I move that the whole matter be laid upon the table, and upon that motion I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Ballard, Beadle, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Cese, Cheritree, Cooke, Farnum, Flagler, Folger, Gould, Graves, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Kernan, Ketcham, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merritt, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, Williams—52.

Noes—Messrs. Archer, Barker, Barnard, Barto, E. Brooks, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corbett, Corning, Daly, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Evarts, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Greeley, Hale, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Huntington, Kinney, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Magee, Matice, Merrill, Merwin, More, Morris, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Potter, Robertson, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seymour, Sherman, Smith, Stratton, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Young—69.

Mr. CONGER—I suppose in the first place, Mr. President, that I should return my obligations to the majority of the committee, who have so generously accorded to me their verdict of honesty of conviction in regard to the resolution which I offered. I wish I could as honestly reciprocate the compliment as to their careful discrimination between the proposition which I submitted and the one which had been previously voted down by the Convention. I concede, in the first place, that we have no right under the law to grant the reporters of the Convention, for private use, an amount of stationery equal to that which many of us have received under the law, for use other than in the Convention chamber; which is limited to the amount of thirty dollars. But the purport of my resolution was to give the reporters of this Convention permission to receive from the clerk of this body a sufficient amount of stationery for the actual work in which they were engaged, while sitting here and enjoying the courtesy of this body. I suppose there can be no question whatever that every body constituted as this is, has sufficient control over its contingent expenses to regulate the manner in which the stationery which is in the hands of the clerk, may be distributed and used. Now I take it that there is an essential distinction between that view, and the position taken by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. If my resolution had been in substance the same as the original resolution, I should think it might be obnoxious to some censure as an attempt to reconsider a previous negative vote of the Convention, but if I can make the gentleman from Onondaga appreciate the distinction—sort, I hold that what is proposed is a proper courtesy and the discharge of a proper duty on the part of the Convention. I therefore hope the resolution submitted by the gentleman representing the minority will be adopted.

Mr. ALVORD observed that the amendment of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen] made it the original proposition.

Mr. VEEDER — I desire to make this explanation. I had no desire at all to defeat the adoption of the report of the minority, but I submit that there are some things mentioned in the report of the majority that ought to be answered, and for the purpose of enabling us to examine the report carefully I desire it should be printed before we act upon it. If the Convention are ready now to act upon it I am perfectly willing myself to vote.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Mr. Van Campen and it was declared adopted.

Mr. E. BROOKS — If a motion were now made to reconsider the vote just taken could it be had at once?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — It could not. It must lie on the table.

Mr. McDONALD — In regard to this vote, it seems to me, if we propose to pass upon the recommendation of the majority or receive and adopt the recommendations of the minority of the committee, we should do it by a reconsideration. We have already a similar resolution reported by this committee which refused to grant this amount, and as I understand the Convention they have refused to grant it simply on the ground that we have no power to give away any amount for such purpose. I admit, as any one else does, that the reporters deserve this amount if we had it to give, but I contend that we have no more right to give away the money of the State than we have to give away the money belonging to an individual. If the Convention is willing, I should be very glad to join with them in order to give this amount to the reporters. I do not think the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] will claim that there is any authority in this Convention to give away this money as conferred by the law under which we are acting. I know the gentleman has cited the fact that we have given the papers a certain amount for publishing the debates of this Convention; that resolution or rather that decision may be authority for him, but as I was opposed to that decision it is no authority for me at all. If I remember aright, that resolution was passed by this Convention because a large majority of members thought that the Legislature had overlooked such a provision and regarded it as a matter of necessity — a matter of absolute necessity, and under that view they passed that resolution. But because we have taken one wrong step in that direction, it is no reason why we should take another. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], in accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], shows that he is desirous the appropriation should be limited. The resolution of that gentleman simply makes this the identical resolution which this Convention has already voted down, and which, as I have said before, was voted down simply for want of authority in this Convention. Relying upon this precedent, and believing that we have no more right to give away the money of the people of the State than we have to give away the money of any individual, I am not willing to support this resolution, and hope that the report of the majority will be accepted instead of that of the minority.

Mr. CORBETT — Those who are in favor of the report of the minority are simply in favor of what is the usual practice in the State Legislature, and what they believe is fairly contemplated by the law convening this body. We have invited gentlemen here to report our proceedings, and I think it is not asking too much that we should give them the requisite ink and paper with which to perform the service. It is exceedingly fortunate that cheap economy has such a valiant champion as the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald]; but I look upon it as a very shabby piece of business to deny to the reporters of this Convention the necessary facilities to perform the duties we have imposed upon them. The people of this State are not misers, and they will sanction any expenditure that may be necessary to enable this Convention to successfully complete its labors. I trust, therefore, the Convention will adopt the minority report and thus be generous as well as just.

Mr. REYNOLDS — I am a member of the Contingent Expense Committee, and one of the majority of that committee that reported against making the appropriation contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tucker] which was referred to that committee. The Convention sustained that report. The resolution of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is identical in character with the one against which the committee had already reported. And as their action had been sustained by the Convention, they were justified in believing that their position in regard to this and all similar appropriations of the public money was in accordance with the sentiment of the Convention. Under these circumstances the Committee felt bound to report against the appropriation contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] — fully believing that there was no authority of law for it. Personally, I have no feeling in the matter, and if the Convention shall reverse its former decision, and now sustain the minority report, as an individual member of that committee I shall make no objection, though such action will not change my opinion as to the propriety of the course taken by the committee — and can but regard such action by the Convention as unfortunate as influencing its action in regard to similar appropriations in the future.

Mr. TAPPEN — I apprehend that the action of this body was an error upon the former occasion, which it is not proposed to repeat now. I believe to refuse this allowance would not be justice, but would be parsimonious, and would be great injustice to the number of gentlemen who are acting in official relations between this body and the people. We have the example of legislative bodies in awarding this mere pittance to gentlemen representing the public press, and these gentlemen who are here, are the telegraph between this body and the people of the State. I hold it to be an act of justice which this Convention will now perform in adopting the resolution as amended by the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen].

except that we can control and shove them out of the door. It is a simple, plain question, and the authority is here demonstrated in the minority report for expending four hundred and fifty dollars for this purpose. We have spent twice that amount of money in discussing it.

Mr. FERRY—The committee to whom this matter was intrusted attempted to treat it fairly. They felt the duty imposed upon them of doing what was right. They felt, also, it was more agreeable to grant favors to applicants whom they regarded favorably than to withhold them. They discussed this question, as they thought, fairly. In their former report they considered the question of power and they came to the conclusion, for reasons they have spread before this Convention, and which they thought demonstrated that this Convention had no power to grant it. The act to which the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] refers, in my judgment excludes all except members and officers by its terms. It says members and officers shall be furnished with stationery, and then "the Convention" is to be furnished with stationery. Unless he claims these reporters or officers I cannot understand why he can say by the act that they should be furnished with stationery. This committee considered the question whether they owed a debt to these men, and in what attitude they were placed in this Convention, and they, I believe, treated the reporters with a good deal of respect; they had no reason to do otherwise. They came to the conclusion that they owed no debt to these men, that they were on the floor by the courtesy of the Convention, that they were in the service of their employers, the proprietors of the various papers throughout the State, performing a very laudable business but which was not necessary for the purposes of this Convention. They next considered the question whether they had any power to make a donation, and they came to the conclusion they had not. These facts were spread before the Convention. It is true some remarks that were considered rather sharp were introduced in the report, but there was no intention to give offense to any one; and with a most respectful consideration for every one, they introduced what they did in their report. I took occasion to go to some of the gentlemen who thought there was an affront in the report and I asked them to carefully read it and see whether it could bear any such construction as it was said they put upon it. I do not yield to any man in obedience to the claims of friendship. It would have been much more gratifying to me, if I had been at liberty, to grant this favor to these reporters, some of whom I have known and esteemed for years. But I have felt constrained by the promptings of duty to take part in such a report as this committee have given. The reasons for that report were given to this Convention. They deliberately acted upon it and sustained it by a large majority. Immediately upon that vote being announced the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] arose and offered this resolution now pending. I first supposed it was offered under a misapprehension of the vote; but in a comparison of the two there is just this difference, that the resolution of the gentleman from Rockland does not undertake to limit the amount which the Secretary shall furnish. The committee came to the conclusion that was an objectionable feature, so far as the two differed, and they differed in no essential respect except in that one particular. The committee say they are of the opinion that they formerly held, and for that reason they are unwilling to change their action. They do not feel willing to authorize the granting of a donation for the reasons they have already stated. In addition, they considered the question decided in the Convention by its action on the former report. Now, that is what they say, and for that reason I ask that this resolution of the minority be not adopted. The committee will bear me out in saying that the position in which the committee or its members have been placed has been a rather unpleasant one. They have provoked hostile articles from one of the newspapers of this city, censuring the members of this committee, and particularly its chairman, and censuring also members of the Convention. I hope that this Convention, under the circumstances, will stand by the report of this committee. If it should not; if there is to be a retraction entirely, even without a reconsideration, if the Convention retraces its steps and adopt the minority report, I confess I shall have but little heart in attempting to discharge my duties as a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I do not wish to receive abuse from outsiders for my conduct simply for doing what I feel to be my duty. As I said before, I know the claims of men who ask favors of me, and I am sorry to receive abuse from anybody for my conduct in the honest discharge of my duty.

Mr. MORRIS—I desire to say in this connection that several of the reporters here have made a request to me that I would state to the members of the Convention that they have no desire to receive this stationery. It is a source of embarrassment to them that this subject has occupied so much of the time of the Convention. To use the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] who said that the committee did not favor the extension of the franchise to women because they did not want it, I think the best way to settle the matter is to decline to give the stationery to these gentlemen because they have not asked it.

Mr. BAKER—If it is in order I will offer an amendment which I suppose will accommodate all parties in this Convention. It is a sort of compromise. After the word "Resolved" insert as follows: "That each reporter be paid the amount necessary for stationery out of the per diem allowance of the members of this Convention." [Laughter.]

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Baker and it was declared carried. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEED—I wish to offer an amendment to make it pro rata.

Mr. BELL—I protest against this. I do not think the subject should be treated with this trifling. I think the reporters have some rights in this matter. If the amount is to be denied, as I presume it will be, let it be denied at once; but let no subterfuge be resorted to.

Mr. CONGER—I did not so understand the effect of the amendment, because it does not set aside any portion of the resolution which I offered, but only limits the amount in value up to which a supply may be granted. Now, if this resolution was designed to give the reporters authority for a draft on the Comptroller for thirty dollars, by which they could purchase their own stationery. I should say then that the whole proposition came within the law and should be voted down—

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I desire to call the attention of the gentleman [Mr. Conger], to the fact that the amendment merely limits the amount of the allowance for stationery.

Mr. CONGER—I understand that fully, therefore I think the proposition as amended by the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen] does not come fairly within the censure of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. The Secretary is to distribute a certain amount of stationery, and he is to report that amount at the close of the Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—Then I understand the gentleman makes a distinction whether the Secretary puts his hand into the treasury and gets it, or whether the reporter does.

Mr. CONGER—Not at all. If we have any rights as a parliamentary body, we have a right to a certain amount of stationery for the use of this Convention and for the clerical force which we employ, either directly or indirectly. I consider it no evasion of law to authorize the Secretary to give reporters the amount of stationery which they need. How is it in the case of him who is here the special reporter of this Convention? Do we not furnish him his stationery? Is he limited to the amount of thirty dollars? Does it not come out of the contingent expenses of this Convention, which are amply sufficient to cover the stationery that is needed? But I will not undertake to argue the question any further. It seems to me it is clear and distinct, and hardly needs elucidation.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I hope the Convention on this occasion will preserve some consistency. We voted a few days ago that we had no power to make an appropriation of this character, and we sustained the report of this committee, on this very point we are now discussing. That committee, I have no doubt, felt themselves instructed by the previous vote which we had given, to make the report they did. They would have felt as if they were reporting against the express decision of the Convention on the point submitted to them previously to this time if they had reported differently. Now, what do we do? Instead of reconsidering the vote on the former day, which, if it was incorrect would be proper for us to do, we vote now to sustain the report of the minority against the report of the majority of this committee, giving the majority a rebuke for obeying us in a previous vote on the same question. I hope we will preserve some consistency, and refuse to adopt the report of the minority.

Mr. WEED—A word with reference to the power of this Convention to make this order for stationery, but before I read from the statute I will simply say in answer to the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that if we rebuke the committee once it would be only an offset to one of the two rebukes they have given us in this Convention. They certainly went out of the way in their first report to rebuke the Convention for the vote taken in Convention some days before, and they now not only rebuke the Convention, but most severely rebuke the gentleman who introduced the resolution. I do not look upon our action here as a rebuke to the committee at all. I look upon it in the light in which the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Reynolds] puts it. He says they felt as though the action of this Convention should induce them to make the report they did, and they made it because of that action. The Convention here have thought upon it. The other vote was taken without much thought or discussion. If the Convention see fit to change their action it will be no rebuke to this committee. They have done their duty by having adhered to the action of the Convention. Now it seems to me that the facts set forth in the minority report have been entirely overlooked. That report refers to the third section of the act under which this Convention is organized, and in that section the following words are used:

"And it shall be the duty of the Comptroller to furnish the members thereof" (of the Convention) "with stationery to the amount provided by law for the Legislature while in session, and to the Convention such stationery and file-boards, and other like things as are furnished to the two Houses of the Legislature."

Now, there is an express provision to furnish the members of this Convention with such stationery as is provided by law to the Legislature. What can it mean except the employees and attaches of this Convention? As the minority report justly says, these reporters are a part of the Convention; they have a place on the floor; they are appointed by the President. We have the express power with these last words to furnish the stationery if we see fit. Now, let us walk right up, either one way or the other; do not put it on the want of power, for it is in the law. If we think these reporters ought not to have thirty dollars apiece for stationery, let us vote down this appropriation of four hundred and fifty dollars and get rid of this matter.

Mr. McDONALD—Does the gentleman claim that every person allowed the liberty of this floor is a part of this Convention?

Mr. WEED—As usual, the interrogatory of the gentleman has no bearing on the question at issue. I claim the reporters stand, in this respect, in the same position that the clerks stand. They are persons amenable to the laws of this Convention; they can be punished for breaches of faith, on the floor; they can be controlled in the Convention.

Mr. McDONALD—Are all persons admitted to the privileges of this floor under the control of the Convention?

Mr. WEED—In one sense they are, in another they are not.

Mr. McDONALD—In what sense are they controlled?

Mr. WEED—They are controlled in no sense, much as it is in the power of the majority to do next week precisely what was done to-day, that is, either limit the discussion to five minutes upon any question or to ten minutes, or a smaller number of minutes, if there is any disposition to abuse the time, they will resort to rules like this rather than the previous question, which is now proposed.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the gentleman who has last addressed us in Convention what is the practical operation, as we have seen it for the past few days, of this five-minute rule? Under this rule two persons have spoken upon each side five minutes upon each amendment piled upon amendment, with hardly a variation in language and none in the sense of the various amendments. We have been now three days on the one single subject, the question of suffrage, under that five-minute rule. Another thing, sir; the gentleman [Mr. E. Brooks] says it is in the power of the Convention to control this matter as we have controlled it to-day. Thanks to the resolution originally introduced by him, although somewhat altered by the consent of the Convention by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], we finally have been relieved from this five-minute rule of endless debate on never ending amendments. We want this previous question for what? To avoid the necessity of entering into an interminable debate when the subject in the report of the Committee on Revision shall come again before us, which would be caused by opening the whole question, and permitting amendments upon amendments to be piled up mountain high until the time of the Convention expires. The practical operation of these subterfuges is to take out of the power of this Convention the right to say how far the debate shall go in this matter. Now, where the debate shall open legitimately, where it is proper to the subject under consideration, I doubt whether any man would take the responsibility, either as one of the majority or alone, to press upon the members of this Convention the previous question. It is only for the purpose, when the time shall come, in the estimation of all the members of the Convention, that enough has been said on the subject, that the previous question will, in my opinion, be used for the purpose of bringing the Convention to its bearings and its duty. Another thing, sir; it has got to have the support of the majority of the Convention at each time when the call is made for the previous question. Another thing sir; in the way in which we have been proceeding for the last six weeks or two months in this Convention, we shall have a previous question from the people ringing in our ears on the first day of next November, if we get there. We cannot get by it, and we shall find the previous question cutting us off in the very middle of the debate; when we shall have left remaining at the close of our labors, some nine or ten of the twenty articles to be considered by the Convention. It is for this reason (I here state for myself positively, as far as I am individually concerned as one of the majority) that there is no desire or design to use wrongfully this power which should reside in every legislative body. I hope and trust that the good sense of the entire of this Convention, without distinction of party, will be in favor of passing the rule that we all confess should have been passed when the rules were originally brought before us for our consideration.

Mr. WEED—I do not care to go into discussion about the alteration of the five-minute rule or any other rule; but if the members of this Convention who desire to arrive at a proper conclusion upon the several matters which we have to discuss, will but for a moment think and not allow themselves to be led off by their passion, one way or the other, or by the abuses that may have been practiced during the discussion of the last three weeks, they will see the previous question, in the manner moved by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], is not what they want or what any man upon this floor wants, the majority as well as the minority; and that they can afford to have it. If the Convention will bear with me for a moment, I will attempt to show them why. It is admitted on all sides that the previous question is to cut off improper and unreasonable debate and that is all it should be used for. Now we get a report from the Canal Committee or any other committee of twenty sections of vital importance to the State, and the first section comes up and is discussed for four days or four weeks, and the chairman of that committee without an opportunity to discuss the residue of that report in any way, or without an opportunity to suggest an amendment; without an opportunity for the majority or minority to bring it before the Convention—I say that the chairman of that committee, and perhaps the Convention itself, getting disgusted with the manner in which the debate has progressed on that question, moves the previous question. What does it do? It goes to the whole report, and no amendment, no suggestion, no change, no correction can be made in the report after you have ordered the previous question upon the first section. I ask if there is a man on this floor who wants the previous question under such circumstances; and yet the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], knowing as well as any man in this Convention the working of such a rule, sees in a moment where it will lead them, as all who will think must see it. Mr. President, I am willing that a rule for the previous question, limited in its application, should be passed; I am willing a previous question should be passed that will cut off debate on all these little resolutions, to do away with all the annoyances we have here and upon which the great bulk of our time has been taken. I am willing the previous question should be passed to reach such cases; but when you come to the discussion of articles to be embodied in the Constitution, you do not want a previous question, and no gentleman on this floor can say it is necessary after the rules we have adopted and under the rulings of the Chair on the several motions made on the discussion of the suffrage question.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEED—Certainly.

Mr. ALVORD—I ask him whether he supposes this previous question applies to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WEED—No, sir.

constituency, and allow them to return here a new member. I am satisfied, for one, that the people desire a full and elaborate discussion upon all subjects of importance that may be presented to this Convention. The people do not desire when an important subject is presented here that its ventilation and discussion should be cut off by the previous question. My experience has been that the most obnoxious measures, and the most obnoxious provisions that ever have been enacted by the Legislature of this State, were enacted under the operation of the previous question. Propositions were presented to the Legislature to which there was strong opposition, but the excuse was given that time was valuable, the end of the session was approaching, and that it was necessary to move the previous question, and the bill would be run through with scarce a single member knowing anything about its provisions.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether any bad result would grow out of such legislation, in case the legislation were to be submitted to the people for their review and decision?

Mr. VEEDER—That is very well, so far as the final verdict on a proposition is concerned. But, in order to enable the people to vote intelligently on a proposition, we should present it to them with the discussions which have been had on that subject. For this purpose, I am opposed to the introduction of a rule incorporating the previous question stifling debate.

Mr. GREELEY—The question must always be considered whether there is time to do what is demanded on one side or the other. We have been two months, nearly, in session, and we have almost passed one article. We have twenty articles, at least, yet to act upon; and some of them present very grave and profound questions. Now, then, I am willing to stay here so long as is consistent with the higher right of the people to have these questions discussed before them in their town halls, their meeting-houses and their school-houses, as they will desire them discussed before they pass upon this Constitution. There are now, from this time to the election, three months—August, September, October. I am willing to divide the time, and let the Convention take half of it and the people have the other half. I think they will need that much, and are entitled to it. If we can get through in six weeks—which is certainly all we ought to take, after spending two months of this time—if we can get through within that time, and let the people have the rest, very well: I shall be willing to let debate run on interminably. But, believing that it is urgently, predominantly necessary that there shall be ample time to discuss the merits and demerits of this Constitution before that high court of appeals, the people, I insist that we shall so shape our rules, and so gauge our time and our labors, as to finish our work here, at the very farthest, by the middle of September. I believe this can only be done under very stringent rules. After what has been seen and heard here of the disposition to debate, I will support and vote for the demand for the previous question.

Mr. E. BROOKS—We have seen this morning in our deliberations what a Convention can do when it is disposed to suppress debate. We met here this morning with, I think, some twenty-two propositions on the table, upon every one of which the gentlemen who introduced them could have called the ayes and noes. Upon every one of them speeches of five minutes' length could be made; but by a simple resolution suggested by myself, and modified on the motion of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] the whole business was swept from the table in the space of some two hours, and could have been swept away in a much less space of time—and all this in the absence of the previous question. Now, the main objection to the previous question is this; not that it cuts off debate, but that it prevents any gentlemen upon either side of this body introducing any amendment upon any subject, however important it may be. I think if we are to have a previous question it ought to be modified in that respect so as to allow gentlemen to submit propositions, and let them be voted upon that we may present in the proper way our views, and be enabled to make any argument upon them. There is a great deal of exaggeration in what has been said in regard to the deliberations of this body. We have not been here two months. Of all the time we have been here between to-day and the 4th of June, we have been absent a great many days, either for our own comfort and convenience or for the necessary recreation incident to a summer session. The great amount of time we have occupied has been in the committee-rooms. More hours have been occupied there than in this room; and the result of the deliberations in the committee-rooms will be very soon introduced in the reports to this body. Sir, instead of being six weeks in discussing the question of suffrage, let me say to my friend on the other side that we commenced the consideration of this subject only three weeks ago last Tuesday, and that some five or six days of that time have been occupied in the consideration of other questions.

Mr. LAPHAM—Does the gentleman approve or disapprove of the article in a daily paper of this morning in which the majority of this Convention was charged with wasting the time of the Convention thus far in useless discussions?

Mr. E. BROOKS—My answer to that is I have not seen any such article, have not read it, and am not, therefore, prepared to give any opinion upon it. But I am prepared to say in reply to the gentleman who puts the question to me, that if he will take the reports of this Convention day by day, and man by man, it will be found upon an examination that the majority of this body have occupied very much more time than the minority—and time altogether out of proportion even to their relative majority over the minority. That is quite apparent I think. But I regret the gentleman has introduced any such question as that—a question which I have no desire to enter upon. What I said the other day was in sincerity and truth. It is the very best possible thing for the constituents who sent me here, and for the great body of the people of the State. I desire that everything shall be done decently, and in order—not to abuse discussion on the one side, nor to abridge it on the other. I hope, therefore, inasmuch as it is in the power of the majority to do next week precisely what was done to-day, that is, either limit the discussion to five minutes upon any question or to ten minutes, or a smaller number of minutes, if there is any disposition to abuse the time, they will resort to rules like this rather than the previous question, which is now proposed.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the gentleman who has last addressed us in Convention what is the practical operation, as we have seen it for the past few days, of this five-minute rule? Mr. WEED—Certainly.

Mr. ALVORD—I ask him whether he supposes this previous question applies to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WEED—No, sir.

Mr. ALVORD—Then there is certainly every opportunity for a full discussion.

Mr. WEED—I do not think it applies to the Committee of the Whole. Still it may, for there is now no provision that it shall not, and there is a rule that all rules of the Convention shall apply to the Committee of the Whole. But I understand exactly the trouble in the Committee of the Whole. It is but another step in that direction the gentleman must see. He knows we did not discuss a single section of the report of the Suffrage Committee in the Committee of the Whole, except the first. He knows the whole delay was upon the first section in the Committee of the Whole, and we had to come into Convention on the five minute rule to discuss the rest of it. You may be tired with all the discussion in the Committee of the Whole on the first section, and then report to the Convention, and the discussion upon it comes up, and before the discussion is exhausted you have to apply the rule of the previous question to the first section, and thus you have no opportunity to perfect the other sections. Now I suggest this is an amendment (and it seems to me to be the simplest way to expedite business), that this rule be passed applying it to everything except articles or sections of the Constitution. Then, when an article or section of the Constitution is under discussion, any gentleman upon the floor of this Convention can move to take the vote upon this question in one hour, in two hours or in twenty-four hours from that time without discussion, and he can sweep the five minute rule off entirely, and can move we take the vote without discussion, and fix the time so that all the members of this body will know when a vote is to be taken on the sections of the proposed Constitution which are important, and obviate the whole difficulty. I offer, therefore, this as an amendment: add the following:

“But such previous question shall not apply to the discussion of articles or sections of the proposed Constitution.”

This will leave the previous question to apply to everything except articles and sections proposed for the Constitution, and then, under the rule we now have, whenever the debate has sufficiently progressed on a particular section, some gentleman can move that a vote be taken at a certain hour, and upon all the propositions without debate, and you have a perfect previous question, or what is better, you have something under which you can consider the different propositions under consideration, and, if need be, consider them without debate.

Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. The motion made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] was to reconsider the vote on the rejection of a certain rule. By examining the Journal, it will be seen that the rule he sets forth is not the rule which was rejected by the Convention. I call the attention of the President to page 244 of the document, where Mr. Lapham gave notice of a motion to reconsider the vote, by which the following rule was rejected, and the Journal goes on to state what that rule was. Then I call the attention of the President to page 39 of the Journal and to rule 29, and I submit that no such rule as is referred to by the motion of the honorable gentleman [Mr. Lapham] was ever voted upon by the Convention. The rule there discussed and voted upon was this:

“The previous question shall be, ‘shall the main question be now put?’ and if determined in the affirmative, no further debate or amendment shall be in order, and the main question shall be on the passage of the resolution or other matter under consideration; but when amendments shall be pending, the question shall be first taken on the amendments in their order, and when amendments shall have been recommended by the Committee of the Whole, and not acted on by the Convention, the question shall be taken upon such amendments in like order.”

The gentleman refers to a rule of this kind:

“The previous question shall be, ‘shall the main question be now put?’ and it shall be discussed without debate.”

No such rule was ever proposed by the committee. Nowhere did the Committee on Rules report such a rule, that when the previous question was moved the motion should be decided without debate; but it is a rule simple and plain upon its face.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair decides the point of order is not well taken, for it holds that no member of the Convention could be deceived by that mere difference in verbiage.

Mr. VEEDER—I respectfully submit that it is a very important proposition, the question whether a motion for a previous question shall be discussed without debate or not. That never was in the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is susceptible of amendment. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] was that the motion to reconsider made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] was a rule differing in phraseology from the one proposed.

Mr. VEEDER—It is a different rule from that reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules there was no deception in that matter, for it was a mere difference in the verbiage.

Mr. VEEDER—Will the Chair allow me a moment? Under rule 29, as reported by the Committee on Rules, they made no provision prohibiting debate on a motion for the previous question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules that rule 29, as reported by the committee is before the Convention now under the motion to reconsider, which motion has been carried.

Mr. LAPHAM—Allow me to suggest that a complete answer to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] is to be found in the fact that the Convention have reconsidered the vote by which rule 29 was adopted, and that the subject is now before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order has been ruled on.

Mr. GERRY—I desire, sir, simply to call the attention of the Convention to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], and to say in reference to that, that if he will modify it in such a way as to cause it to read

"such resolutions shall not apply to the Committee of the Whole," I will accept it. It was an amendment to my amendment as I understand it.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Weed as follows:

"But such previous question shall not apply to articles or sections of the proposed Constitution."

Mr. RUMSEY—I propose to add to the amendment of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], "in Committee of the Whole," so—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman, [Mr. Rumsey] that two amendments are already pending.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Weed, and it was declared lost.

Mr. WEED—As the Convention has voted down the amendment which I offered, I now propose to offer an amendment which I believe to be the next best thing, and I may say in offering this amendment, that I have no desire to protract the debate upon any question in this body, and have just as much desire as the gentleman from Onondaga, [Mr. Alvord], or any other gentleman to get at the particular matters before us and discuss them as quick as they can be decided understandingly. I propose to add at the end of the proposed rule the following, so that when the previous question is ordered it may not take with it the whole article under consideration and not give an opportunity to amend the residue of the article or section under consideration at all:

"But such previous question shall only carry the vote to the resolution, paragraph or section, then pending, or to the amendments then pending to such paragraph or section."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Weed, and, on a division, it was declared lost, by a vote of 51 to 59.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. then announced the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Gerry.

Mr. GERRY—My reason for offering this amendment as a substitute for the original rule as reported by the select Committee on Rules, was because I supposed, from the almost unanimous decision of the Convention just made to reconsider the vote by which the rule when first reported was discarded, that it was the intention of the Convention, or at least of a majority of its members, in reconsidering such rule, to adopt it hereafter for all practical purposes. Allow me to say a few words in support of the amendment which I have offered. This is a substitute for the previous question. Referring to the standard work on parliamentary law, Jefferson's Manual, section 34, I find the reasons there given for the adoption of the previous question to be as follows:

"The proper occasion for the previous question is, when a subject is brought forward of a delicate nature as to high personages, etc., or the discussion of which may call forth observations, which might be of injurious consequences. Then, the previous question is proposed, and, in the modern usage, the discussion of the main question is suspended, and the debate confined to the previous question. The use of it has been extended abusively to other cases: but in these, it is an embarrassing procedure; its uses would be as well answered by other more simple parliamentary forms, and, therefore, it should not be favored, but restricted within as narrow limits as possible."

Now, sir, if it were possible to "answer the use of it" in the present Convention by more simple parliamentary forms; if a substitute for it would be as effective, but less obnoxious than the rule as already reported here, I see no reason why this should not be done; and I desire to call the attention of the Convention to one or two facts connected with the effect of the substitute I have just offered. In the first place it is practically in effect now. It has been already acted upon once during the past two weeks in the limitation of time, in the discussion of the suffrage question and the reason it did not then prevail effectually to stop unnecessary speeches, was because the form of the resolution then adopted was not sufficiently stringent to enable it to be effectual. In the next place, by the terms of this amendment there is no deprivation of the power of the Convention at any time to limit specifically the debate on any particular question which may come up before it for discussion, but it may, in its judgment, as it shall see fit, so regulate and so gauge this question that each particular proposition shall have its due time for discussion before this body. Again, by the proviso, that the resolution limiting the time it shall be deemed a privileged question, and shall be decided without debate, all unnecessary discussion of the amount of time to be appropriated to any particular question is entirely done away with, and then it remains wholly with the Convention to determine what time shall be devoted to each particular question limited by its importance, and by its practical utility. I submit, therefore, to the gentleman of the Convention, that by the amendment which I have suggested, the benefits of the previous question will undoubtedly be gained without the disadvantages which must result, in a certain degree, by the adoption of that rule at the present time, and without prejudicing the rights of any one.

Mr. HALE—I move to amend by substituting the rule to be found at the bottom of page 54 of the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Hale, as follows:

RULE 29. The Convention may at any time, by a vote of a majority of all its members present and voting, fix the time at which any vote shall be taken, and limit the time which its members shall respectively occupy in the discussion of any motion or resolution; and the resolution to fix the time for taking such vote, or to limit the time of debate, shall be deemed a privileged motion, and shall be decided without amendment or debate.

Mr. HALE—Mr. President, it has become very evident to members of this Convention that we have got to adopt some provision like the previous question, or substantially equivalent to it, in order to get through with our business and finish our debates. But as the Convention has once voted by a large majority against the adoption of the previous question and inasmuch as the previous question has some features which are objectionable, and which do not belong

Mr. ALVORD—Then there is certainly every opportunity for a full discussion.

Mr. WEED—I do not think it applies to the Committee of the Whole. Still it may, for there is now no provision that it shall not, and there is a rule that all rules of the Convention shall apply to the Committee of the Whole. But I understand exactly the trouble in the Committee of the Whole. It is but another step in that direction the gentleman must see. He knows we did not discuss a single section of the report of the Suffrage Committee in the Committee of the Whole, except the first. He knows the whole delay was upon the first section in the Committee of the Whole, and we had to come into Convention on the five minute rule to discuss the rest of it. You may be tired with all the discussion in the Committee of the Whole on the first section, and then report to the Convention, and the discussion upon it comes up, and before the discussion is exhausted you have to apply the rule of the previous question to the first section, and thus you have no opportunity to perfect the other sections. Now I suggest this is an amendment (and it seems to me to be the simplest way to expedite business), that this rule be passed applying it to everything except articles or sections of the Constitution. Then, when an article or section of the Constitution is under discussion, any gentleman upon the floor of this Convention can move to take the vote upon this question in one hour, in two hours or in twenty-four hours from that time without discussion, and he can sweep the five minute rule off entirely, and can move we take the vote without discussion, and fix the time so that all the members of this body will know when a vote is to be taken on the sections of the proposed Constitution which are important, and obviate the whole difficulty. I offer, therefore, this as an amendment: add the following:

This will leave the previous question to apply to everything except articles and sections proposed for the Constitution, and then, under the rule we now have, whenever the debate has sufficiently progressed on a particular section, some gentleman can move that a vote be taken at a certain hour, and upon all the propositions without debate, and you have a perfect previous question, or what is better, you have something under which you can consider the different propositions under consideration, and, if need be, consider them without debate.

Mr. VEEDER—I rise to a point of order. The motion made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] was to reconsider the vote on the rejection of a certain rule. By examining the Journal, it will be seen that the rule he sets forth is not the rule which was rejected by the Convention. I call the attention of the President to page 244 of the document, where Mr. Lapham gave notice of a motion to reconsider the vote, by which the following rule was rejected, and the Journal goes on to state what that rule was. Then I call the attention of the President to page 39 of the Journal and to rule 29, and I submit that no such rule as is referred to by the motion of the honorable gentleman [Mr. Lapham] was ever voted upon by the Convention. The rule there discussed and voted upon was this:

"The previous question shall be, 'shall the main question be now put?' and if determined in the affirmative, no further debate or amendment shall be in order, and the main question shall be on the passage of the resolution or other matter under consideration; but when amendments shall be pending, the question shall be first taken on the amendments in their order, and when amendments shall have been recommended by the Committee of the Whole, and not acted on by the Convention, the question shall be taken upon such amendments in like order."

The gentleman refers to a rule of this kind:

"The previous question shall be, 'shall the main question be now put?' and it shall be discussed without debate."

No such rule was ever proposed by the committee. Nowhere did the Committee on Rules report such a rule, that when the previous question was moved the motion should be decided without debate; but it is a rule simple and plain upon its face.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair decides the point of order is not well taken, for it holds that no member of the Convention could be deceived by that mere difference in verbiage.

Mr. VEEDER—I respectfully submit that it is a very important proposition, the question whether a motion for a previous question shall be discussed without debate or not. That never was in the rule.

Mr. VEEDER—It is a different rule from that reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules there was no deception in that matter, for it was a mere difference in the verbiage.

Mr. VEEDER—Will the Chair allow me a moment? Under rule 29, as reported by the Committee on Rules, they made no provision prohibiting debate on a motion for the previous question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules that rule 29, as reported by the committee is before the Convention now under the motion to reconsider, which motion has been carried.

Mr. LAPHAM—Allow me to suggest that a complete answer to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] is to be found in the fact that the Convention have reconsidered the vote by which rule 29 was adopted, and that the subject is now before the Convention.

D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young—43.

Mr. SHERMAN—The change which has just been made in the rules renders some other changes necessary, in order to make the rules consistent with each other. In accordance with previous notice, therefore, I move to reconsider the vote of June 9th, by which rules 19, 23 and 24 were adopted. One of these changes is to except the Committee of the Whole from the operation of the previous question. Another is to put the previous question in its proper place in the class of privileged motions, and rule 24 is to provide that the motion for the previous question, like the motion to lie on the table, shall be decided without amendment or debate.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order, that the rule voted down did not receive a majority of two-thirds of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair does not regard it as an amendment of the rule. It is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the rule was rejected, and, moreover, the motion was carried by a vote of eighty-one, which is a majority of all elected to the Convention, and so is in strict compliance with the rules of this body.

The question was put on motion to reconsider the vote by which rules 19, 23 and 24 were adopted and it was declared carried.

Mr. SHERMAN—I now move that rules 19, 23 and 24, as reported by the select Committee on Rules, be adopted.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Sherman to adopt rules 19, 23 and 24 as reported by the select Committee on Rules and it was declared carried.

The rules as adopted are in words as follows:

RULE 19. The same rule shall be observed in committee as in the Convention, as far as applicable, except that the previous question shall not apply, nor shall the yeas and nays be taken on a division.

RULE 23. When a question shall be under consideration, no motion shall be received except as herein specified, and motions shall have precedence in the order stated, viz:

1. For an adjournment.
2. For a recess.
3. A call of the Convention.
4. For the previous question.
5. To lay on the table.
6. To postpone indefinitely.
7. To postpone to a day certain.
8. To commit to a Committee of the Whole.
9. To commit to a standing committee.
10. To commit to a select committee.
11. To amend.

RULE 24. The motion to adjourn for the day, for a recess, for the previous question, and to lay on the table shall be decided without amendment or debate. The respective motions to postpone or commit shall preclude debate on the main question.

Mr. WEED—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HAND—I desire to ask leave of absence for myself for five days.

There being no objection, leave of absence was granted.

Mr. PRINDLE—I desire to ask leave of absence for Mr. Goodrich, of Tompkins, for one week.

Mr. BICKFORD—I insist that reasons shall be given for gentlemen who desire leave of absence.

Mr. PRINDLE—It is to enable him to attend to imperative business matters at home that Mr. Goodrich desires leave of absence, though I am not informed of their nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Goodrich] desires to be present at a reference that has been postponed from time to time to suit his convenience, but which the opposing counsel will consent no longer to postpone. If there are no objections, leave of absence for Mr. Goodrich will be granted.

Mr. DEVELIN—I move that the rules as they now stand be printed and laid upon the tables of members.

to the rule proposed by the gentleman from New York, amended as I propose, it seems to me it will be more consistent for us to adopt that rule than to reverse our former action by adopting the previous question in terms. The adoption of this rule will make privileged motions both the motion to fix the hour for taking the vote on any question and that to limit the length of time that gentlemen shall speak, so that we will have it in our power to end discussion at almost any time.

Mr. GERRY—I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale].

Mr. LAPHAM—I am opposed to this amendment or to any amendment which proposes a departure from the adoption of the usual rule in regard to the previous question. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gerry] adds nothing whatever to the powers belonging to this body under the rules as they now exist. I would call the attention of the members of this Convention to the repeated efforts of the chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage [Mr. Greeley] to have a rule adopted fixing the time for taking the vote upon his report, and to have a rule adopted limiting the time of debate upon that report. Day after day, at every session of the Convention, that gentleman has persistently tried to get such a rule adopted, but has been defeated by lengthy and protracted debates.

Mr. HALE—I would ask the gentleman [Mr. Lapham] whether the defeat of such propositions has not always been owing either to debate or amendment, and whether the provision that such a vote shall be taken without amendment or debate will not insure the success of such an effort hereafter.

Mr. LAPHAM—Not at all. It in no way modifies the difficulty in my judgment, and will not shorten our action when it becomes necessary to do so. Where is the danger or hardship of adopting the previous question? Until the majority of this Convention are satisfied that sufficient debate has been had upon any proposition, or upon any section which may be reported by a committee, the previous question cannot be ordered. It requires a vote of the majority to order it in all cases, and all apprehension which gentlemen express here is directly an imputation upon the good faith of the majority, who, it is supposed, will call for the previous question. They will not resort to it capriciously and injuriously and cut off debate and discussion. There is no desire to do anything of that kind. I call the attention of this Convention to the liberality which has been exercised up to this hour in indulging the debate upon every proposition that has been submitted for the consideration of this Convention. But, sir, we have now spent nearly two months of the time allowed to us for the revision of the Constitution of this State, and we have not yet finished the report of a single committee, we have simply adopted the report of one of the committees and have handed it over to another committee for further revision, and when it comes back here, unless we have the previous question, we may again spend three weeks more in discussing questions which will arise upon the report of that committee, and thus the report of the Suffrage Committee, after having occupied three weeks of our time, would, if the whole subject had to be gone over again, occupy half of the time of the session of this Convention. There is no other mode in which the well-disposed members of this Convention—and I assume that we are all well disposed—can bring to a proper determination the result of our labors except by having the previous question to be used when it is necessary to cut off useless and protracted debate and cut off frivolous and unnecessary amendments, and to cut off a repetition of amendments which are precisely the same thing, although changed slightly from the form in which they have been passed upon. There is no other mode in which we can bring our labors to a termination and it is for this reason, and with no desire or design, let me assure members of this Convention, so far as I am concerned, to use this rule harshly, unjustly, or improperly at untimely points of debates, that I have called up for the consideration of this Convention the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was stricken out of the report of the select Committee on Rules. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gerry] will not prevail, and that we shall adopt the previous question as it is used customarily in parliamentary bodies, without any design whatever to use it in any other way, except that which the parliamentary law teaches.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Gerry and it was declared lost.

Mr. GERRY—I offer the following further amendment:

Insert in the second line of such rule, after the word "affirmative," the words "by a two-thirds vote of those present and voting."

My object in offering this further amendment is, for the purpose of testing the sincerity of the declarations of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], that there is no desire on his part, by moving to restore this rule of the previous question, to cut off debate, and that the "well-disposed members" of the majority party of this Convention will not resort to the previous question, except to cut off frivolous amendments; and also that there is no desire on the part of such gentlemen to enforce the rule in reference to the previous question "harshly." By this amendment which I now offer the power is given to two thirds of the members of the Convention present, to regulate and govern the exercise of the previous question, and its enforcement whenever it may become necessary. As the rule now stands, and as offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], it is to be enforced at the will of a mere majority vote of members present. The amendment which I offer requires the acquiescence of two-thirds of those present and voting, and thus protects the rights of the minority against undue or partisan oppression.

Mr. HUTCHINS—Mr. President—[cries of "No," "No"] I was merely going to observe that the gentleman who last spoke [Mr. Gerry] voted, when the motion was before the Convention originally, to strike out the rule for the previous question, against striking out. It seems that he has changed his mind since that time in that respect. I have also changed my mind. I voted against the previous question, and I propose now to change my vote and vote the other way, and as he voted then.

Mr. GERRY — And the reason of my changing my vote now is best explained by the remarks that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] on Tuesday last relative to the course about to be pursued by the party in majority in this Convention.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Gerry and it was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the adoption of rule 29 as originally reported by the select Committee on Rules.

Mr. WEED — Believing as I do that this rule will work injuriously, I feel impelled to call for the ayes and noes upon the question of its adoption.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the adoption of rule 29 as reported by the select Committee on Rules, and it was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes — Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Clark, Clinton, Cooke, Corbett, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Evarts, Farnham, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Fuller, Fullerton, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams — 81.

Noes — Messrs. Barnard, Barto, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Corning, Daly, Develin, Garvin, Gerry, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hitchman, Kernan, Livingston, Loew, Lowery, Magee, Masten, Mattice, More, Morris, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Wickham, Young — 43.

Mr. SHERMAN — The change which has just been made in the rules renders some other changes necessary, in order to make the rules consistent with each other. In accordance with previous notice, therefore, I move to reconsider the vote of June 9th, by which rules 19, 23 and 24 were adopted. One of these changes is to except the Committee of the Whole from the operation of the previous question. Another is to put the previous question in its proper place in the class of privileged motions, and rule 24 is to provide that the motion for the previous question, like the motion to lie on the table, shall be decided without amendment or debate.

Mr. WEED — I rise to a point of order, that the rule voted down did not receive a majority of two-thirds of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair does not regard it as an amendment of the rule. It is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the rule was rejected, and, moreover, the motion was carried by a vote of eighty-one, which is a majority of all elected to the Convention, and so is in strict compliance with the rules of this body.

The question was put on motion to reconsider the vote by which rules 19, 23 and 24 were adopted and it was declared carried.

Mr. SHERMAN — I now move that rules 19, 23 and 24, as reported by the select Committee on Rules, be adopted.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Sherman to adopt rules 19, 23 and 24 as reported by the select Committee on Rules and it was declared carried.

The rules as adopted are in words as follows:

RULE 19. The same rule shall be observed in committee as in the Convention, as far as applicable, except that the previous question shall not apply, nor shall the yeas and nays be taken on a division.

RULE 23. When a question shall be under consideration, no motion shall be received except as herein specified, and motions shall have precedence in the order stated, viz:

7. To postpone to a day certain.
8. To commit to a Committee of the Whole.
9. To commit to a standing committee.
10. To commit to a select committee.
11. To amend.

RULE 24. The motion to adjourn for the day, for a recess, for the previous question, and to lay on the table shall be decided without amendment or debate. The respective motions to postpone or commit shall preclude debate on the main question.

Mr. WEED — I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HAND — I desire to ask leave of absence for myself for five days.

There being no objection, leave of absence was granted.

Mr. PRINDLE — I desire to ask leave of absence for Mr. Goodrich, of Tompkins, for one week.

Mr. BICKFORD — I insist that reasons shall be given for gentlemen who desire leave of absence.

Mr. PRINDLE — It is to enable him to attend to imperative business matters at home that Mr. Goodrich desires leave of absence, though I am not informed of their nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Goodrich] desires to be present at a reference that has been postponed from time to time to suit his convenience, but which the opposing counsel will consent no longer to postpone. If there are no objections, leave of absence for Mr. Goodrich will be granted.

Mr. DEVELIN — I move that the rules as they now stand be printed and laid upon the tables of members.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Devlin and it was declared carried.

Mr. TAPPEN—I desire to move to reconsider the motion by which the previous question was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. We have reconsidered that question and under the rules we cannot again entertain a motion to reconsider the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken, but nevertheless, the gentleman can give notice if it is any satisfaction. [Laughter].

Mr. McDONALD—I call for the resolution offered by me in regard to this Convention going into Committee of the Whole each day after the Convention has been in session one hour.

Mr. SHERMAN—I think that the resolution was laid on the table by a vote of the Convention.

The question was put on taking the resolution of Mr. McDonald from the table, and it was declared lost.

Mr. DALY—I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That six copies of the Manual, Debates, Documents, Journal, annotated Constitution, and of all other documents or papers printed for the use of the Convention, be deposited in the State Library.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MERRITT—I offer the following resolution, and ask that it may be considered at this time.

Resolved, That the rule now in operation applicable to the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage in regard to debates, shall be continued, and apply to the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc.

Mr. DEVELIN—I propose to debate that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution giving rise to debate will lie over under the rule.

Mr. MERRITT—I suggest that under the rule the resolution can be considered now as it pertains to business before the Convention. The next business in order is general orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair the construction put upon the rule by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], is not correct, as the present order of business is resolutions.

Mr. HATCH—I offer the following resolution: Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be, and he is hereby requested to furnish to this Convention the following information:

1. The cost of the original construction of the Champlain canal, and all improvements thereof, with legal interest thereon.

2. The cost of collection, superintendence, and repairs thereof, with interest.

3. The tolls received, with interest thereon.

4. What difference will be made in the result of the operations of the Erie and Champlain canals, as reported to this Convention, by separating them from the operations of the Champlain canal, when determined as above.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie over under the rule. The Chair is inclined to think that it was in error in its previous ruling on the resolution offered by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt]. Under rule 29, resolutions pertaining to the business of the day are excepted from the provision requiring that resolutions giving rise to debate shall lie over. General orders being the next matter before the Convention the report of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature may be reached.

Mr. KERNAN—Does the resolution offered by the gentleman contemplate speeches of twenty minutes or five minutes?

Mr. MERRITT—Twenty minutes in Committee of the Whole and five minutes in Convention.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BARTO—I offer the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, The act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1856, creating the office of school commissioner in the several counties, and school commissioner districts in this State, as amended by acts passed in 1864 and 1867, provide that the annual salaries of such school commissioners be paid by the State from the income of the United States deposit fund, thereby diverting from the school fund the sum of about ninety thousand dollars ($90,000) annually; therefore,

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Education and the Funds relating thereto, to inquire into the propriety of such diversion, and whether the salaries of these officers whose duties are almost exclusively local, should not be paid by county tax, instead of from the State treasury.

Resolved further, That it be referred to the same committee to inquire into the propriety of abolishing the office of school commissioner, and that the former system of town supervision be restored in its place.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Barto, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the consideration of so much of the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., as relates to the Senate, the number and apportionment of senators, and the organization of senatorial districts, and that that part of the report be referred back to the standing Committee on the Legislature, etc., with instructions to revise the apportionment of Senators and organization of senatorial districts, and to equalize as nearly as may be the ratio of senatorial representation, and also equalize, as near as may be the senatorial districts in regard to population. I ask that the resolution lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There being no objection the resolution will lie over as requested.

Mr. OPDYKE—I offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the special Committee on Official Corruption be authorized to send for persons and papers and to take testimony.

Mr. OPDYKE—I offer that resolution, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution giving rise to debate it lies over.

Mr. OPDYKE—I merely wish to explain the object of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—For that reason it manifestly gives rise to debate, and consequently will lie over.

Mr. KETCHAM—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Revision, to whom is referred the subject of the right of suffrage, be instructed to report section four with the following amendment, viz:

"In line five strike out the word 'to,' and insert as follows, 'which in cities and incorporated villages shall,' so that it will read, 'The Legislature shall provide for a registry of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, which, in cities and incorporated villages, shall be completed at least six days before every election except town elections.'"

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order. The same resolution was offered this morning and voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair was of that opinion, but it was claimed by others that it was not.

Mr. WEED—Then I rise to debate the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution giving rise to debate will lie over under the rule.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be laid on the table:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and is hereby respectfully directed to furnish for the use of this Convention five hundred copies of the diagrams of this room.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie over at the request of the mover.

Mr. KINNEY—I offer the following resolution and ask that it be considered at this time:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the use of this hall be granted to Hon. C. P. Johnson, of Brooklyn, on Tuesday evening, August 6, for the purpose of delivering a free lecture on the subject of the "Philosophy of Politics."

Mr. MORRIS—I offer as an amendment by adding "provided the chamber is not required by the Convention."

Mr. KINNEY—I accept the amendment.

Mr. MERRILL—I move to further amend by referring the resolution to the proprietor of Twiddle Hall. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Merrill] is not in order.

Mr. ALVORD—I think the Chair is competent to decide as a point of order that we have no power over this room, except to sit in it as members of this Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair hardly thinks it competent to reverse the decision which the Convention has twice made in that respect. The chamber has been twice allowed to other persons than members of the Convention.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Kinney, and it was declared lost.

Mr. GRAVES—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Adulteration and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors, be authorized to send for persons and papers to enable them to fully discharge the duty devolving upon them as such committee.

Mr. VEEDER—I move to amend by inserting after the word "persons" the word "samples." [Laughter.]

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Veeder and it was declared carried. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEAVER—I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. BARTO—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barto, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 52 to 50.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

THURSDAY, August 1, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment in the absence of the President, Mr. ALVORD of Oneonta acted as President pro tem.

Prayer was offered by Rev. HENRY DARLING, D.D.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—By consent of the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Young], who yesterday presented a memorial which was read to the Convention, on the subject of the usance of money, I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights. Concerning, as it does, the right and privilege of every citizen to give or receive at his own option any agreed price for what he desires to buy or sell, this would appear to be its proper disposition, rather than the original reference to the Committee on Banking and Insurance.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of Joseph A. Bownan and twenty others, citizens of New York, for a separate submission of a clause of the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. E. BROOKS presented a memorial of the Sons of Temperance of Eastern New York on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. GOULD presented the petition of one hundred and twenty citizens of Tompkins County, in favor of prohibiting the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. C. E. PARKER presented the petition of seventy-seven citizens of Tompkins county on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN presented three petitions of citizens of Cattaraugus county, in favor of the regulation and against the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. STRATTON presented nineteen petitions from citizens of New York on the same subject. Which took a like reference.

Mr. STRATTON also presented the petition of ninety citizens of the city of New York in favor of enacting a clause in the Constitution prohibiting the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. STRATTON also presented the petition of sundry citizens of the city of New York on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. STRATTON also presented two communications from members of the bar of the city of New York suggesting a plan for the judiciary in the first judicial district.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GROSS presented twelve petitions from citizens of New York, Brooklyn, Lyons, Rochester, Suspension Bridge, Niagara Falls and Roundout against a prohibitory liquor law, and asking that a uniform regulation of the traffic in fermented liquors and wines be prescribed by the Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. BECKWITH presented the petition of George Sherman and thirty-nine others against the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. DUGANNE presented the petition of S. S. Hickcock and one hundred and twenty others on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented two petitions on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. LUDINGTON presented the petition of M. V. Schoonmaker and ninety others on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. ANDREWS presented the petition of Luther Little and others on the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. E. P. BROOKS presented the petition of thirty citizens of Stuyvesant Falls in favor of a prohibitory liquor law.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I wish to ask for leave of absence for Mr. Corning for three days, who is obliged to leave town.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. FERRY—I call from the table the report of the standing Committee on Contingent Expenses in reference to allowing stationery to reporters.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the motion of Mr. Corbett to substitute the resolution reported by the minority of the committee as amended on motion of Mr. Baker for the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—I rise to a question of order.

The report was laid on the table by order of the Convention, and it requires a vote to take it up.

The question was put on the motion to take from the table the majority and minority reports of the committee, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I call for the ayes and noes on the pending motion.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. GREELEY—I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The pending question is on the motion to substitute the resolution reported by the minority of the committee as amended, upon the motion of the gentleman from Montgomery [Mr. Baker], and upon that Mr. Greeley moves the previous question.

Mr. CONGER—I submit that the moving of the previous question is merely compelling the Convention—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is out of order, the previous question having been moved.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Greeley for the previous question and it was declared carried.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution reported by the minority of the committee as amended on motion of Mr. Baker in words the following:

Resolved, That each reporter be paid the amount necessary for stationery out of the per diem allowance of the members of the Convention."

Mr. KRUM—Is an amendment now in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that an amendment is not now in order.

The roll was then called on the resolution reported by the minority of the committee as amended on the motion of Mr. Baker, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Baker, Barto, Bergen, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Farnum, Ferry, Fowler, Frank, Fullerton, Gerry, Gould, Hardenburgh, Houston, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, Livingston, Loew, Ludington, Magee, McDonald, Merritt, Potter, Rathbun, Reynolds, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, A. D. Russell, L. W. Russell, Seymour, Sheldon, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Cott, Veeder, Verplanck, Wales, Weed—47.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Artell, Ballard, Bernard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Case, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, Daly, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Evans, Flagler, Fuller, Garvin, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Harris, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Huntington, Ketcham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Masten, Matton, Merrill, Merwin, Miller, More, Morris, Nelson, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Root, Schoonmaker, Seavor, Sherman, Smith, Stratton, Strong, Van Campen, Wakeman, Wickham, Williams, Young—70.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The question will now recur on agreeing with the report of the majority of the Convention.

Mr. CONGER—Does the previous question apply to the report of the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It applies, in the opinion of the Chair, to the whole subject.

Mr. FERRY—I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. GERRY—I move to lay the question on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the subject cannot be laid on the table, because the Convention has determined by a vote that the previous question shall operate.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on agreeing with the report of the majority of the committee adverse to the furnishing of stationery to the reporters, and it was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Ballard, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, K. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cooke, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Everts, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merritt, Miller, Pond, Potter, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rolfe, Root, L. W. Russell, Schoonmaker, Sheldon, M. I. Townsend, Van Cott, Wickham, Williams—62.

Noes—Messrs. Artell, Barnard, E. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Chertree, Chesebro, Church, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Co'ahan, Couger, Corbett, Daly, Duganne, Fowler, Frank, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Gross, Hale, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hitchman, Huntington, Livingston, Loew, Magee, Masten, Mattice, Merrill, Merwin, More, Nelson, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Robertson, Rogers, A. D. Russell, Seymour, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, Strong, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Veeder, Verplanck, Wake-man, Wales, Weed, Young—53.

The order of resolutions was announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—At the time the Convention adjourned there was a resolution under consideration which will be first in order. It was a resolution offered by the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], authorizing the Committee on Adulterated Liquors, to send for persons and papers. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder], moved an amendment to the resolution, which was adopted by the Convention, after which there was a call for the ayes and noes, which was pending when the Convention adjourned. The question before the Convention is, shall the ayes and noes be had upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder]?

Mr. VEEDER—After consultation with some of the members, I understand that the word "papers" covers the whole ground [laughter], and therefore, with the permission of the Convention I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GERRY—I ask that the resolution be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution of Mr. Graves, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Adulteration and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors, be authorized to send for persons and papers to enable them to fully discharge the duty devolving upon them as such committee.

Mr. GRAVES—Certain facts have been disclosed to the committee which makes it, in their judgment, important that this evidence should be obtained for the interest of the Convention, and the people of the State; with that view I hope that the resolution will pass.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Graves, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. DALY—I offer the following resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Resolved, That the fiscal year shall hereafter commence on the first day of January, and end on the thirty-first day of December of each year, and, all official annual reports (unless otherwise specially directed by the Legislature) shall be made for the calendar year.

Which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRINDLE—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State Engineer and Surveyor be requested to furnish information to the Convention of the state of the work on the extension of the Chenango canal, to the State line of Pennsylvania, the proportion of work already done, and the probable expense in addition to the amount already appropriated of completing said extension.

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. STRATTON—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of Metropolitan police of the city of New York be requested to report to this Convention as soon as practicable, the number of men detailed from the Metropolitan police force, as attendants upon each of the police courts, the courts of general and special sessions, and any other courts in the city of New York during the year 1866, designating the name of each of said courts, and the amounts paid for such attendance upon each of said courts respectively; and also whether the amounts so paid will be increased or diminished for the year 1867, and if so, how much for each of said courts.

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. OPDYKE—I desire to call up the resolution offered by me yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the special Committee on Official Corruption be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to take testimony.

Mr. OPDYKE—I have offered this resolution by direction of the committee for which the power is asked. It is due to the committee to say that, in asking this power, they have no intention to commence a general crusade against those who are suspected of official impurity. They do not wish, nor do they intend to assail the character of any citizen, or to scandalize the State. They merely desire to get some specific, and reliable facts on which to base the recommendations that they will feel it to be their duty to make to this Convention. Such facts have been voluntarily tendered to the Convention, and also to the public press. They simply desire to send for the parties making the tender, in order to get this testimony in proper form and shape for the use of the committee, and, if necessary, for presentation to the Convention.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—It is quite well known that there has been appointed by the Legislature a committee, the members of which are now pursuing their labors in this city and elsewhere, and who are from time to time reporting the result of their labors to this body, as respects the official corruption existing in the State. The resolution authorizing various committees to send for persons and papers will lead, I think, to enormous expenditures; and I cannot at this moment understand the necessity of the authority which has just been given to another committee of this body. With this committee of the Legislature performing the labors they are, in developing official corruption, I do not see the necessity of it, and I, therefore, shall oppose the appointment of this or any other investigating committee upon this subject.

Mr. RATHBUN—The gentleman who last spoke [Mr. Hardenburgh] labors under a misapprehension, I think, in regard to the duty of the committee appointed by the Legislature. I understand that committee are investigating frauds connected with the canals, and not frauds connected with the Legislature. Corruption in the Legislature is not to be reached by the investigations of that committee. Therefore, it seems to me that this committee ought to be authorized to make some investigation, at all events, in reference to charges which are so common in reference to the corruptions of the Legislature.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Opyke, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. KETCHAM—I call up for consideration a resolution offered by me yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revision, to whom is referred the subject of the right of suffrage, be instructed to report section four with the following amendments, viz :

In line five strike out the word "to," and insert as follows, "which in cities and incorporated villages shall," so that it will read, "The Legislature shall provide for a registry of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district, which in cities and incorporated villages shall be completed at least six days before every election except town elections."

Mr. KETCHAM—The only object of instructing the Committee of Revision to make the amendment indicated by this resolution, as will be seen, is to do away with the necessity of a completion of the registry six days before election which is imperatively required by the section as it now stands. Now, Mr. President, we have persistently and day after day most emphatically rejected almost innumerable propositions for uniformity in the system of registration in the cities and in the country. I entered into the business of listening to the discussion of the report of the very able Committee on the Right of Suffrage (for I have taken no part in the talking) and my views were in favor of uniformity; but reasons assigned by other members of the Convention have convinced me of the impropriety of such uniformity; and yet the section as it has been sent to the committee, it seems to me, requires uniformity in just that particular in which there exists the greatest necessity of a difference between the cities and country. But for preventing frauds in the cities and large villages we need no registry; we do not want it in the country districts embracing but three hundred or four hundred voters scattered over a large area of territory and each known to the other. We are willing, however, to submit to the inconvenience of it because we deem it needful in other districts, and because we desire the fewest possible special and local provisions in the Constitution. But if the provision requiring a completion of the registry six days before election is adopted, it not only imposes burdens on these thinly settled districts which are wholly unnecessary, and which answer no good purpose whatever, but almost invariably excludes from voting very many of the best citizens of those districts. I trust, therefore, the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a question of order. This identical proposition of the gentleman from Wayne [Mr. Ketcham] has been voted down by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed that the then presiding officer did rule upon some point of order raised in reference to the resolution.

Mr. KETCHAM—The facts are these: I sought to procure the adoption of this amendment, when the section was originally introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] but it was excluded by the pendency of two amendments. Again I sought to procure its adoption as an amendment to the resolution by which the article was sent to the Committee of Revision. It will be recollected that it was then ruled out as having been once rejected by a vote of the Convention. But upon examination it was found not to have been so rejected, and I was yesterday so fortunate as to get it fairly before the Convention.

Mr. SHERMAN—I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GOULD—I am informed, Mr. President, that the Constitution with the accompanying notes, which is one of the documents on our files, is very usefully printed, and that it will not be bound unless there is a special order on the part of the Convention to that effect. I therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Constitution, with notes, be bound in the same style as the Manual, and that two copies thereof be given to each member.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Under the rule the resolution must be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of the Convention commence at ten o'clock A. M., and that each day, except Saturdays, a recess be taken at two o'clock P. M. till half-past seven P. M.

Mr. BARNARD—I move to strike out half-past seven and insert four o'clock.

Mr. BELL—I hope that the amendment may not be sustained. It is necessary that the quescommittees should have some time for consultation and meetings, and four o'clock is a very proper hour. Let the Convention meet at ten o'clock in the morning and sit until two, which will give a session of four hours. Then let the committees hold meetings in the afternoon and let the Convention sit again at seven o'clock in the evening until any hour they please. That, to my mind, will be better than to hold afternoon sessions. It is very important that we should have some time to prepare business in committees for this Convention, and there is no better time, in my estimation, than in the afternoon. I hope, therefore, that the original resolution will be adopted.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I move as an amendment, the resolution which will be found on page 264 of the Journal of the Convention, providing for adjournments at the close of the week, as follows:

"And that the adjournments of this Convention at the close of the week shall, hereafter, be regulated as follows: On Saturday next the Convention shall adjourn at one o'clock P. M., to the succeeding Monday at ten o'clock A. M.; on the succeeding Friday the Convention shall adjourn at two o'clock P. M., to the following Monday at half-past seven o'clock P. M.; and this order shall be pursued week by week in regular alternation."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] offer that as an additional amendment.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Yes, sir.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. T. W. Dwight and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BARNARD—The only reason that I had for offering the amendment was that it would be inconvenient for us to meet at half-past seven o'clock, as then all the gas lights in the chamber are burning, and during warm weather we would find it excessively hot. We would find ourselves among the 80's and 90's. I therefore suggest that four o'clock would be better because the chamber would be much cooler than in the evening.

Mr. KVARTS—I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] will not prevail. It is of the utmost importance that we should be able to devote four hours to the public sessions of the Convention. It is very important that we should have some period of the day suitable for committee meetings. By prolonging the morning session from three hours to four hours, I think we shall gain in the dispatch of business much more than the additional hour, and by adding an additional session at half-past seven, capable, according to the temper of the Convention, of indefinite extension through the evening, I think we shall accomplish a great deal more.

The question was put on the amendment proposed by Mr. Barnard, and it was declared lost.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—At the suggestion of some gentlemen interested in adjournment I would suggest an amendment that the adjournment of Friday should be at one o'clock instead of two o'clock P. M.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That amendment can only be made by unanimous consent, the amendment of the gentleman [Mr. T. W. Dwight] having already been adopted by the Convention.

Mr. LOEW—Is another amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair it is.

Mr. LOEW—I move that the adjournment be every Friday at two o'clock until the following Monday at half-past seven.

Mr. RATHBUN—I hope that amendment will not prevail. There are a great many members of this Convention who cannot go home between Saturday and Monday, and some who cannot go home even between Friday and Monday, and who have to remain here. I hope that those who are so far away from home that they cannot take advantage of the recesses that are given, will be indulged in having something to do instead of leaving them to rove about the city without any sort of occupation.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Loew and it was declared lost.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I move to amend the amendment adopted by the Convention by striking out two o'clock on Friday, and inserting one o'clock, in order that the Convention may adjourn in time for delegates to take the western train at a quarter past one.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. C. C. Dwight, and it was declared carried.

Mr. MATTICE—I move to strike out Monday at half-past seven o'clock P. M., and insert Tuesday at ten o'clock A. M.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Mattice, and it was declared lost.

Mr. LIVINGSTON—I move to amend by inserting Monday at seven o'clock P. M. instead of Monday at eleven o'clock A. M., where the word Monday first occurs.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston] that ten o'clock A. M. has been passed upon by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. then announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. Sherman as amended on the motion of Mr. T. W. Dwight.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I think it would be better to leave the question of the hour of holding the extra sessions to the discretion of the Convention each day, and I therefore offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words, "and that each day except on Saturdays, a recess be taken at two o'clock P. M. till half-past seven o'clock P. M."

Mr. BELL—The difficulty of that arrangement is that committees would never know what to depend upon, whether they will be able to have a committee meeting or not. For the last week or two the work of the committees has been entirely deranged from the uncertainty of being able to hold a committee meeting. The meetings of the committees are as important as the public sessions of this body, and I hope that we will have some definite understanding whether we will have a recess or not, and if we decide to have a recess at what time we will reassemble; whether in the evening or afternoon. I think it is best to now fix this whole matter, that we may go along un-understandingly, both as regards the sessions and committee meetings.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Wakeman and it was declared lost.

Mr. SHERMAN—The amendment suggested by my colleague [Mr. T. W. Dwight] and which has been adopted by the Convention makes it necessary that the resolution be further amended. I therefore move to amend by adding after the word "Saturdays," the words "and on alternate Fridays."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GRAVES—I move that the words "succeeding Friday" be stricken out, and the words "succeeding Saturday" be inserted, so that this Convention shall adjourn on each Saturday at one o'clock.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Graves, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the resolution of Mr. Sherman as amended, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the counsel to the corporation of the city of New York be requested to furnish to this Convention the following information, viz.:

1. The number of suits or actions at law now pending against said city.

2. The number of unpaid judgments now standing of record against said city, and the total amount thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. GERRY—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk of the common council of the city of New York be and he is hereby requested to furnish this Convention with copies of the report of a select committee of such common council, heretofore appointed to inquire and report what rights and franchises now belong to said city, and of what rights and franchises said city has been deprived of by legislative interference or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I desire to call from the table a resolution offered by myself a week or ten days ago, and which is to be found on page 250 of the Journal, calling for certain information from the tax commissioners of the city of New York as to the value of real estate.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the tax commissioners of the city of New York be instructed to report to this Convention the value, in their judgment, of the real estate in use in that city by the various religious denominations for the purposes of public worship, together with the assessed valuation of the same as returned to them, or the officers preceding them, charged with the duties they now perform, from the year 1847 up to the year when such property or real estate was exempted from taxation, by legislative enactment.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to have the resolution amended by adding after the words "purpose of public worship," the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. HITCHMAN—I accept the amendment. The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Hitchman, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HATCH—I desire to call up the resolution which I offered yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be and he is hereby requested to furnish this Convention the following information:

1. The cost of the original construction of the Champlain canal, and all improvements thereof, with legal interest thereon.

2. The cost of collection, superintendence and repairs thereof, with interest.

3. The tolls received, with interest thereon.

4. What difference will be made in the result of the operations of the Erie and Champlain canals as reported to this Convention, by separating therefrom the operations of the Champlain canal when determined as above.

Mr. HATCH—I only desire to say that the object of this inquiry is to procure a statement from the Auditor, showing the precise financial condition of the Erie and Champlain canals. This statement heretofore furnished by the Auditor to this Convention mixes the two. The object is very obvious to the members of the Convention.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Hatch, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Canal Commissioners report to this Convention the number of breaks in the Erie canal, within the last ten years, the amount paid to contractors, on account of the same, under their contracts, and the length of time that each break interfered with the navigation of the said canal.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. MASTEN—I offer a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Legislature shall provide for the appointment of a receiver-general, who shall have the care and custody of all moneys which now are or hereafter shall be under the control of the courts of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BEALS—I wish to call up the resolution offered by me on Wednesday last, and to be found on page 283 of the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be requested to report to this Convention the number of acres of land belonging to the common school fund in 1822, the report to specify the county in which the land was situated, the name of the tract, and the several lots with the number of acres in each.

Also, What lots have been sold, with the price of each, and what remain unsold.

Also, How much money has been received into the treasury from such sales, and how much is still due upon bonds for lands.

Also, Whether any sales of lands under water have been made, whether land under the waters of the Hudson river or under the waters of the East river, or under the waters of the shores of Long Island or Staten Island, or under the waters of the inland lakes; and, if so, what sums of money have been received for such lands, specifying the sum received for each part, and whether the money received for lands under water have been added to the capital of the common school fund, and if not, the reasons for crediting it to any other fund.

Also, What lands belonging to the State, whether acquired by escheat or otherwise (except bid in by the commissioners for loaning the moneys belonging to the United States deposit fund), have been given away by act of the Legislature, whether granted to individuals, or to railroads, or charitable institutions, or for public use in any way.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Beala, and it was declared carried.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Appreciating the action of the Convention yesterday, that we should deliberate rapidly, I offer the following resolution and ask that it be laid on the table:

Resolved, That this Convention will adjourn sine die at twelve o'clock, meridian, on Monday, September 9, 1867.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution will lie on the table at the request of the mover.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Bill of Rights be directed to inquire into and report to this Convention the propriety of providing that married women shall be endowed with a certain amount of the personal estate of their husbands.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights.

Mr. SHERMAN—In pursuance of notice I gave yesterday, I move to suspend the third and twenty-first rules for the purpose of enabling me to offer a resolution.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That in order to facilitate action on the article reported by the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., the Committee of the Whole be directed to consider, before acting upon the article by sections, the following general propositions, viz:

1. Of what number shall the Senate consist.
2. Of what number shall the Assembly consist.
3. How many Senate districts shall there be.
4. What shall be the term of Senators.
5. What shall be the term of members of Assembly.
6. Shall members of Assembly be elected by counties or by single districts, or in what other manner,
7. Shall the apportionment of Senators be made by the Convention, or be left to the Legislature.
8. Shall the apportionment of members of the Assembly be made by the Convention or by the Legislature.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to inquire of the gentleman who moves this resolution [Mr. Sherman] whether it is made in concert with the committee who have presented the article which we are to consider in Committee of the Whole, and whether it is deemed expedient by that committee, and as designed to facilitate the settlement of the propositions in their report; because unless the committee ask specially that every proposition should go through this sort of catechetical investigation, I am entirely opposed to the method.

Mr. SHERMAN—The motion I have made is in accordance with the desire of the chairman of the committee [Mr. Merritt] and I believe with the assent of the committee.

Mr. MERRITT—I propose to offer a substitute, if the motion to suspend the rules shall be carried, which covers the same ground. It will be this:

1. How many Senators and senatorial districts shall there be.

2. What shall be their term of office.

3. How many members of Assembly shall there be, and how elected, and term of office.

4. Shall the Convention make the apportionment or direct the Legislature to make it.

Mr. RATHBUN—I am opposed to the proposition altogether. We have a report made by the committee in which they have reported upon all the topics that are now presented in this special proposition, and are all to be taken up and discussed necessarily in the examination of that report. Now, as we proceed, the question of the number of Senators will come up in the report. They have suggested a certain number and we shall discuss the proposition which they bring here, and we approve or disapprove of propositions according to the judgment of the Convention, and so we go step by step over the report on the various topics which are presented in it, and upon each one discuss and examine and determine it. If we go through with the several propositions which are sent here as naked propositions, we would then after all have to take up this same report, and the same discussion and re-examination, and thus our business would be continued and repeated. I submit that this Convention is competent in the examination of this report to decide, as they proceed in the case, how many Senators, and how many Representatives there shall be, and what compensation, and how the districts shall be arranged, and the time for which they shall be elected, and how many, and for what term. We need no prior discussions. It seems to me it will be a total waste of time. The labor will be doubled. I apprehend that the Convention will see it in the same light. I hope this proposition will fail altogether. Let us go to work like practical men; we have something to do. It is here before us in the shape of a report for examination and discussion. We may agree or disagree with the report, but when we have agreed or disagreed with it, our work is done, so far as the report is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN—I offered the proposition because I supposed it would facilitate the business of the Convention and save time, but if the Convention think that they can dispose of the subject in a simpler manner, I certainly have no pride in the proposition.

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules and was declared lost.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole upon the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc. Mr. ARCHER, of Wayne, in the Chair.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the first section of the article as reported by the committee.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I suppose the usual parliamentary way is to read the bill through, and then take it up by sections. I ask that that be done.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the reading.

Mr. NELSON—I move to suspend the reading of the article and take it up by sections.

Mr. E. BROOKS—As a point of order, I contend it must be read through before it is taken up by sections, under the rules of this body.

Mr. NELSON—I withdraw my motion.

The SECRETARY then resumed the reading of the article as reported by the committee and proceeded with it to its conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN—The Secretary will now proceed to read the first section of the article.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the first section as follows:

SECTION 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly. Any elector of this State shall be eligible to the office of Senator or member of Assembly.

Mr. MERRITT—I hope I may be permitted to briefly state the reasons for the majority report. The committee decided that they would not submit a report in writing; but the article submitted embraces the unanimous opinion of that committee, with the exception noted by the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Merwin], and defended in the written report submitted by him. In the first section you will notice the addition of this sentence, "any elector of this State shall be eligible to the office of Senator or member of Assembly." In the existing Constitution no qualification was prescribed. The committee thought it very proper that the same requirements should be necessary for the holding of an office as an elector. They also thought that any district choosing a representative should be allowed to select such officer from any portion of the State. This gives them that authority. The condition is that they shall be electors, and that they may reside in any part of the State. Believing that change is not always progress, we thought that the change which took place in 1846 was not to the advantage or interest of the people, when they reduced the term of office of Senators to two years and reduced the districts to a single district; making thirty-two instead of eight; we believe that the anticipations of that body have not been realized in the result. We believe that by retaining large districts and increasing the length of term and the compensation, it will invite into the Legislature the ablest minds of the State. We believe it to be important to make them responsible to a large constituency. The Senate, acting as a conservative body, and allowing elections to take place every year for one-quarter of that body, would be sufficient to test the public judgment on any question which might arise during a year. With three-fourths constantly in the Senate, the Legislature would not need to be hasty, and having passed upon questions at one session, they would be relieved from importunity unless in the judgment of the Senate such action ought to be reconsidered, and they would not, therefore, be brought up for their attention. We think it will reduce the amount of legislation. The idea entertained by the Convention of 1846 was that these officers (Senators) should be brought nearer to the people, and that by electing in single districts for a single term of two years, would conduce to that end, but they forget that in thus making this change they reduce the standard of qualification required for a seat in that body. Thus much with regard to the Senate. But the idea has prevailed in this committee that the tendency of large districts is in the opposite direction, and it is for that purpose and no other, that we recommend the large districts. We have followed precedent in apportioning the State upon this theory, starting off in the first place with the proposition that the Senate should not be increased, and, as I say, following precedent, we decided to present an apportionment to the Convention, and in doing so, we took for a basis—what we suppose will be the basis in case this Constitution shall be adopted; and that is, the citizen population of the State, or all inhabitants, excluding aliens only. We admit, therefore, to representation under this apportionment, that class who are excluded on account of not possessing the required property qualification, and the committee will find on page 403 of the Manual, a table showing the number of inhabitants, including those who were heretofore excluded on account of not possessing the requisite qualifications. When we came to divide the counties into districts, the first points which presented themselves were the questions of convenience and representative population, and we thought it very well to take the existing judicial districts as a basis. We found also that it would be well to confine as nearly as possible the senatorial districts to coincide with those of the judicial districts, and taking up the city of New York, we found that there was a population which on this basis would entitle them to more than four, and it was thought best to have an additional Senator, and not divide that city. This met with the hearty concurrence of all the members of the committee. At the present time, and under the present Constitution, the city of New York is entitled to five Senators, and will thus be entitled until after the next apportionment which will take place in the year 1875. We could very well divide the remainder of the State into seven districts, and giving four Senators would make twenty-eight. We therefore decided to allow an increase of the Senate to that extent, provided also that New York should during the present ten years be entitled to the same number of Senators which she now possesses, and that after the next enumeration she should be entitled to such additional number as her representative citizen population would entitle her, whatever that number might be. It is desirable that districts should not be changed except there be some good reason for it.

We believe the interests of the city of New York are so identical that you cannot run a line through that city and divide or separate important interests without damage; and we thought it would be better, looking to the elevation of the character of the representatives, they should be elected on that basis and by general ticket; this had its influence in making the apportionments. I will give the committee the representative population on the basis I have stated. The first district contains 574,548 inhabitants; the second district, 464,469; the third district, 381,856; the fourth district, 425,683; the fifth district, 408,872; the sixth district, 388,805; the seventh district, 375,751; the eighth district, 398,315. This leaves four judicial districts as they exist to-day under that division and enumeration. The ratio for a Senator, counting it at twenty-eight, would be 107,135; the ratio for thirty-three would be 103,850. I give these figures that the members of the committee shall at once apply them to the senatorial districts. It never has been usual to divide counties, and we therefore provided that counties should not in making senatorial districts be divided, and gentlemen will find it will be very difficult to apply any rule in forming any senatorial district that will make the representative population exactly alike. It cannot be done. There are other considerations which should also be stated with reference to the formation of such districts, and they are the convenience of the different counties and the facilities for meeting in conventions, &c. The only alterations that we have made, as gentlemen will see, is the alteration in the second, third and sixth districts and the fourth and fifth. We have put into the fifth district Montgomery county, and we have put into the fourth district Albany county, the representative population requiring an addition to the present fourth judicial district. In putting Montgomery into the fifth district it really serves their convenience, as you will see by examining the map; it would be much more convenient for them than it would be to go into the fourth district. The fourth district is the largest of the eight, covering a large territory that is entirely uninhabited, and there is no way I can see, that we can change it, unless the Convention see fit to put into the fourth district Rensselaer county, instead of the county of Albany. Thus much in regard to senatorial districts. The committee also thought it better to return to the old system of electing members of Assembly by counties. The committee was somewhat divided on the question of increasing the Assembly as well as on the question of the manner of election. There seems to me no reason why we should continue the present single assembly district system. There is no local interest pertaining to an assembly district which will not pertain to a county. The Representative of any single district is therefore, in fact, the Representative of a county. Its interest affects the county. It is a corporation, and all parts of it are equally interested. It seemed to us very proper that all parts of the county, and all electors of the county should have a voice in selecting their Representative, and we believed further it would bring into the Assembly a better class of men—men known all over the county, and of a higher standard, making the office more honorable, and we thought it might perhaps encourage gentlemen who heretofore have declined (especially in these later days) to take seats in the Assembly or to become candidates for that office. The committee at last, as a compromise, agreed to increase the number by eleven, making one hundred and thirty-nine. One reason contended for in the committee in favor of an increase, was that there were several large unrepresented fractions under the present apportionment which might thus be more nearly represented under a new apportionment. I will read a list of the counties which will get an additional number under this proposition of ours. Allegany would get one, Chenango one, Clinton one, Kings one, Monroe one, New York two, Orange one, Steuben one, Suffolk one, Westchester one—making eleven. If the Convention should decide to retain the single district system, of course there would be no necessity for any apportionment, as the apportionment was made last year. On the same census returns as that on which future Legislatures would have to act, we have included in the representative population the class which have heretofore been excluded, and I may add, there being more of that class in the southern part of the State, especially New York city, by reason of the addition of the negro population, they will be entitled to an additional member of Assembly. We believe that in allowing the increase gradually, as the population might increase, especially in the district of New York, that the Senate would not become too large even in the judgment of those who are opposed to enlarging that body. While we do not provide for a permanent fixed number, we do provide for such an increase as will only be gradual, and which would be a very small increase. The gentleman who submitted the minority report contended that there had been no call for abolishing the single district system for members of Assembly. There has been a call for an improvement in the standing and character of our legislative body, and it is because we believe that it will tend to that result that we do away with that system, not that there has been any special call for it, or that it is among the things that the people have specially asked for. We know very well what they want. They want honest legislation, and men of ability in the legislative body. Whatever course will tend to that result we should encourage. With regard to the action of this body upon the apportionment of the Senate, if they desire, or this committee shall choose to recommend that the apportionment should be made by the Legislature, that is if they adopt the four years' time and the increased number of Senators, we would be very willing to allow it to pass over to the next session of that body; we however have the census, and we can ourselves make this apportionment. The question of salary was also a question debated considerably. We do not suppose that we can adopt or fix a salary here that would be an inducement for any very prominent, able men living in our large cities, to come to the Legislature. Local interests and position only, would influence such a result; but the great majority of those persons in the country who would like to be members, and who are capable and proper persons, would not come here for the small pittance of three dollars a day. If we make it a certain salary for Senators and Assemblymen, competition will grow up among a better class of men who could come here and spend one hundred days, or such time as might be necessary without detriment to their pecuniary interests—and we would have the advantage of their talents and ability if the proper inducements are offered to them to come here, not to pay them fully for their services, but to pay their proper and legitimate expenses—they will come. We therefore agreed to present the sum of one thousand dollars, and we do not propose to limit the sessions, but in order to equalize compensation of members from the different parts of the State, we recommend that ten cents a mile should be allowed for traveling fees in going to and returning from the place of meeting. In the sixth section the only change which we made in the existing Constitution is that we struck out that provision in regard to electing Senators of the United States.

THE CHAIRMAN—The gentleman's twenty minutes have expired—

MR. CONGER—I do not understand the gentleman [Mr. Merritt] who is chairman of this committee as making a speech; he is only making the oral report of the committee. I hope he will not be debarred from finishing it.

THE CHAIRMAN—If there is no objection the gentleman can proceed.

MR. MERRITT—I offered the resolution last evening to limit debate, and I ought not to be the first to trespass on the time of the Committee.

THE CHAIRMAN—There being no objection the gentleman will proceed.

MR. MERRITT—There has been heretofore a difference of opinion as to the authority of the Legislature to prohibit any member of the Legislature from being a candidate for the Senate of the United States, or with regard to the binding effect of our present Constitution, and I will say here that with regard to the action last winter, a minority of the Legislature, democrats, unitedly voted for a member of the Senate, showing they did not regard it as binding or trenching upon the Constitution or laws of the United States in that respect, and I think we should not be the judge in regard to it. I suppose it is a debatable question, but it is very proper to leave it out, and I see no reason why they should not be candidates if they choose to be. The other sections are substantially like those in the existing Constitution. I have given, at least as clearly as I understand them, the reasons that influenced the committee, and I will simply add that the article embodies, with the exception of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Merwin], the unanimous opinion of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN—Are there any amendments to the first section?

MR. BICKFORD—I offer the following amendment to the first section.

THE SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 1 by striking out "electors" in the second line, and inserting "citizen" in its place. Also, by inserting after the word "State" the words "who shall have resided in this State for one year next preceding his election."

MR. BICKFORD—The object of this amendment is to make a person eligible to the office of Senator or member of Assembly, who might not be an elector, according to the article on suffrage which we have in effect adopted. It would work an absurdity as it stands now in the case which I will suppose, and which may frequently happen. Under this article, as reported by the committee, a man is eligible to the Legislature although he does not reside in the county for which he is chosen, or from which he is chosen, which is a very proper provision in my judgment, but under this provision he would be ineligible if he did not happen to be a voter. For instance, take my own case. I reside in Jefferson county. I am an elector, and would be if this Constitution was now in force. The people of Lewis county, where I do not reside, might elect me member of Assembly if they chose although I reside in Jefferson county; but if I should remove into Lewis county two months before election, the people of Lewis county would not be at liberty to elect me if they chose. That is simply absurd. Why should my moving into Lewis county deprive them of the privilege of electing me if they chose? It is their privilege to elect the man they want, and the fact that I move from one county to another two months before election should not deprive them of that privilege. Such a case may frequently happen; that a man by reason of his not having resided in the county four months is not an elector, and yet he has been a citizen of the State, and it may be the desire of the people to elect him. It may be the desire to elect men who are not citizens of their county and do not reside there; and I think, therefore, this amendment should meet with the approval of the committee.

MR. KINNEY—I inquire of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] if the term "citizen," which he proposes to insert here, will not include women, and if women will not be eligible for the office of Senator.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared lost.

THE CHAIRMAN—Are there any other amendments to be proposed to the first section? If not, the Secretary will read the second section.

THE SECRETARY proceeded to read the second section, as follows:

§ 2. The State shall be divided into eight senatorial districts. There shall be four Senators in each district.

The first district shall consist of the city and county of New York, and shall be entitled to one additional Senator.

The second district shall consist of the counties of Suffolk, Queens, Kings, Richmond and Westchester.

The third district shall consist of the counties of Putnam, Rockland, Dutchess, Orange, Ulster, Greene, Columbia and Rensselaer.

The fourth district shall consist of the counties of Albany, Schenectady, Fulton, Hamilton, Saratoga, Washington, Warren, Essex, Clinton, Franklin and St. Lawrence.

The fifth district shall consist of the counties of Jefferson, Lewis, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, Herkimer and Montgomery.

The sixth district shall consist of the counties of Otsego, Schoharie, Delaware, Sullivan, Broome, Chenango, Madison, Cortland, Tioga, Tompkins, Chemung and Schuyler.

The seventh district shall consist of the counties of Yates, Seneca, Ontario, Cayuga, Wayne, Monroe, Livingston and Steuben.

The eighth district shall consist of the counties of Orleans, Niagara, Erie, Genesee, Wyoming, Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua. The whole Senate shall be chosen at the first election held under this Constitution; they shall classify themselves, so that one Senator in each district shall go out of office at the end of each year, and the additional Senator for the first district at the end of the fourth year. After the expiration of their terms under such classification, the terms of their office shall be four years."

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move to strike out the word "Westchester" from the sixth line of the second section. I am opposed to the whole spirit, letter and tenor of so much of this report as is now under consideration. I regard it as extremely unjust and unfair, as trenching upon the rights of the people, as in violation of the spirit of the government, and as altogether wrong. Sir, I wish very briefly to state how the report affects my constituents, and in order to show this properly, I have moved the amendment, which is to strike out the county of "Westchester." Sir, it was not at all necessary, in order to secure a fair apportionment, to make such a report as has been submitted by the Committee on Apportionment, and which is now under consideration. It is made to operate very unjustly upon the constituents which I represent with my three colleagues. It has added a county numbering one hundred and one thousand people, and this excess entirely a surplusage beyond what might be called a uniform number. Now, sir, let me show its operation, and, I am sorry to say, sir, its political or partisan operation, for it is made to bear very heavily upon the district which I partially represent, and very lightly upon other portions of the State. Sir, the second district of the State of New York, as proved by this apportionment, has a population of 541,362 inhabitants. That is the return which is in the census before me, while the third district has a population of 411,000, that is the adjoining district, and the difference between the second district and the third district is 130,000. Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot conceive, according to my ideas of justice, of a more unfair apportionment than this.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. E. BROOKS—Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRITT—Upon what basis do you make an apportionment under the existing Constitution?

Mr. E. BROOKS—I am making my remarks upon the basis of a just apportionment of the people of the State of New York, but whether I make them in that direction, or upon the representative portion of the people called citizens, the operation of this report is equally unjust upon the constituents represented by myself and others, and indeed upon the entire portion of the people of the State on the seaboard, and especially in the city of New York. You discriminate if you take the report, one hundred and thirty thousand against the second district and in favor of the third district. You also make a very much larger discrimination against the city of New York. In other words, you require a population of five hundred and forty-one thousand to make a Senator in the second district and five hundred and forty-five thousand in the first district, while you require a population of only four hundred and eleven thousand to make a Senator in the third district. Now, sir, if the gentleman desires that the voting population should be represented in the senatorial district, the conclusion is equally unfair and unjust. Let me show wherein. In the second district there is a voting population of one hundred and six thousand, and in the third district there is a voting population of only ninety-one thousand, and the discrimination, therefore, tells just as strongly against the second district in this respect as it does in regard to the entire population, or to give the result in figures there is a discrimination of fifteen thousand against the second district, and a discrimination of just so much in favor of the third district. Now, sir, it so happens that the third district, apportioned as it is by this report and by the gentlemen representing the majority in this Convention, was equal to some three thousand at the last election, whereas, if you make an equal division of the people, or of the voting people, as between the second and third districts, the second district would be assured a democratic district, as at present, and the third would be so equally divided that it would become a fair contest between the two parties as to who should be in the ascendancy. But this is not all. The difference, as I have said, between those two districts, is as 130,000, while the average differences in all the other districts of the State, (throwing out entirely the city of New York, and counting the seven districts), operates as a difference against the second senatorial district, equal to 100,000 people. Sir, I do not know by what rule gentlemen undertake, if they mean to represent the people fairly, to discriminate between what are called representative people and the people at large. Sir, the gentlemen who made this report, in advance of the action of the people of this State upon it, have counted in all the negro population of the State as prospective voters, and have counted out the entire alien population because they are not citizens.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman allow me a moment? This action was taken after the action of this Convention upon the question of including that class.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I do not know when it was taken, nor where it was taken; but I wish to say, as a matter of fact, the entire colored population of this State are to be counted as if they were voters, before the people have acted upon that proposition, and the alien population excluded and that this also is entirely unusual, unfair and unjust. Sir, we are a representative government and a representative people. The Constitution of our State, in its first words, speaks of THE PEOPLE of the State of New York. The Constitution of the United States, in its preamble, says: "We, THE PEOPLE of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, provide for the common defense, etc., do ordain and establish this Constitution." I hold, therefore, that the people in mass ought to be represented equally and fairly in any apportionment which may be made by this Convention.

Mr. GREELEY—I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is a new rule, or the rule that has always prevailed in this State, apportioning according to the representative population of the State?

Mr. E. BROOKS—Whether it be a new rule or an old rule, it is immaterial as to the remarks I have made, and I have shown that the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] and his committee in this report discriminate just as much in regard to the voting population as they do against the entire people, as in the second district which has fifteen thousand more voters than the third, and all this discrimination in favor of the republican district adjoining. I wish also to say that there was a political majority of some two per cent (taking the last election as an illustration of what I wish to say), in favor of the party in ascendancy in this State. In November last, the republicans had a majority of some 13,789 in a poll of 718,841, and yet upon the basis of their report, taking the voting population as I have stated it, they have secured or would secure twenty-four of thirty-three Senators, a majority of fifteen, or nearly fifty per cent. Now, sir, I have not time to analyze this report in other respects, but in my judgment, if you carry out this record, or if you analyze the votes in the respective districts of the State, they will prove to be nearly as unjust in reference to the representative or citizen population as they are in regard to the population at large. Sir, if the democrats of this State should by good fortune, at some future election, change the State vote to the extent of some 80,000, or if by a complete change in the public mind, in regard to Federal and State politics, there shall be 80,000 more democratic votes polled in November next, than were polled in November 1886, the effect upon the senatorial districts would be that the entire democratic party, with a majority of 80,000 would have but thirteen of the thirty-three Senators named, while the republicans would elect twenty Senators, and yet be in a minority of 80,000 in the State; the republicans, as I have said, could hardly carry the third district at all, if the second and third districts were properly divided. In other words, the democrats would always secure the former, and would have a fair chance of carrying the latter.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask the gentleman if he applies his theory to the existing state of facts? With a majority of only 13,000 for our party in the State, the republicans have twenty-seven senators to five democrats.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Yes, sir, that is very true, and you now propose so to act in this body, that with the large increasing population in the city of New York, amounting to-day upon any fair census, to at least one million people, to give to that city a single additional senator, and to allow it no representation in proportion to its population, and you have, most unjustly, in my judgment, added the strong democratic county of Westchester, to the democratic counties of Kings, Queens and Richmond and, these strong democratic counties are thus added with the knowledge that the political effect will be to increase your already large republican majority and to decrease the democratic power in the State. If with the vast power which you already hold in the western part of the State, and which enables you by your majorities to control the National and State politics, you are not satisfied, what will satisfy you? You have, also, so formed and constructed the several districts, that if the Convention should adopt the report before us, it would deny to the minorities any fair representation. I have a table before me which shows what might be an equitable distribution of all the districts, without trenching improperly upon the rights of the people, or upon the rights of the two great parties in the State. I will not occupy your time in reading it, but I wish to read just so much of it as relates to the district which I represent. I will take the following four counties: Kings, 311,090; Suffolk, 42,869; Queens, 67,997; Richmond, 28,209; total, 440,165; which excludes Westchester, which would, in an equitable division for the second district—

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. GREELEY—I propose an amendment to the 2d, 3d, and 4th sections of this report, which I will read. It is radically different from that of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], and therefore should, I think, be considered first—the question being properly whether we shall adhere to the large district system or adhere to smaller ones. I will read my amendment:

"Strike out sections two, three and four, and insert as follows:

"§ 2. The Legislature for 1888, shall divide the State into fifteen senate districts, whereof each shall contain, as nearly as may be, with due regard to the integrity of counties, an equal number of legal voters, and whereof each district shall be entitled to elect three Senators."

I think it best that there should be an increase proportionate to the large increased population of the State.

"Each voter may, at his discretion, repeat twice or thrice on his ballot for Senator the name of a candidate; provided, that all names borne thereon, including repetitions, shall not exceed three; and each ballot shall be counted two or three votes, as the case may be, for any candidate whose name may be thus repeated."

The object here is to gain the result—so greatly desired by political thinkers in our day—of the representation of minorities. That is, to allow all the people to participate in the representation of the State. You and I are perfectly aware that there may be a district containing 50,000 voters, who may vote 24,000 on one side and 26,000 on the other, and the 24,000 are entirely suppressed in the result. They are not heard in this hall. They have no voice proportioned to their population. They are simply null, so far as representation is concerned; and the consequence is, that, in one part of the State, only one section of the people is represented, and another part in another section. I propose to have all the people represented. That is to say: let us suppose one district, composed of Chautauque and Cattaraugus counties, in which is an overwhelming republican majority; in that locality, the minority may nominate one man and print his name three times on their ballots, and thus certainly elect him. In New York city, where the republicans are a decided minority, they could do the same, with a like result. The minority could, in almost any district, concentrate all its votes on one candidate and certainly elect him, unless the preponderance of the majority was overwhelming—say, five or six to one. Thus, all the people in all parts of the State would be represented. People would go to the polls knowing that their votes were not a mere form. In every part of the State, the local minority would go to the polls saying, "We are going to elect our man." They could in each district elect, at least, one man; so that all the people would have a representative of their own choice in the Legislature. I believe that the soundest and the calmest political thinkers of our time have generally come to the conclusion that, while it would make no material difference in the general result—that is, the majority of the people would choose and be represented by a majority in the Legislature—yet all classes of the people—all sections and both parties in all sections—would thus obtain a representative. I think this would be more satisfactory than our present system, and would secure, on the whole, a better representation. I proceed:

"The Senators thus chosen shall hold their office for — years; and any vacancy meantime occurring shall be filled by election as heretofore. On the expiration of the terms of Senators, their places shall be filled as above.

"§ 3. There shall be a decennial enumeration or census of the people of this State in the year 1875, and in every tenth year thereafter; and the Legislature in the year following shall re-apportion the State for the choice of Senators and Assemblymen, according to the provisions of this article. No county shall be divided in the formation of a Senate district, unless it shall contain more legal voters than are required to constitute a senate district.

"§ 4. The Legislature for 1868 shall, in like manner divide the State into forty-five assembly districts, whereof each shall be entitled to choose three members of Assembly; but any succeeding Legislature may, provided the people of this State shall, by a direct vote, consent thereto, increase the number to five members from each assembly district.

"The provisions of section two, with regard to a repetition of names of candidates on the same ballot, shall apply likewise to ballots for and the choice of members of Assembly, except where a single member only is to be chosen to fill a vacancy."

I propose that the same principle of allowing minorities as well as majorities to be represented from every part of the State, should be carried into the election of Assemblymen also; so that in each district a conceded and notorious minority would say, "There are three to be chosen, and we can surely elect one. We will nominate our best man, and print his name three times on each ballot, so that man will surely be elected." Thus, I hold, there would be a better class of representatives in both Houses; for very often the minority ticket in a county is the better ticket. There is no scrambling to get on this ticket, or at least not so much. I believe we would have better men to make our laws. Concentrating the vote of a large district on a single man, would be pretty certain to give us one good man from that district. Men who have been excluded from office for years in regions where the local minority has long had no voice in this hall, under this system would be represented. I propose forty-five assembly districts, because a very large number of our counties, under this system, would form—very properly—each an assembly district. Oneida, Monroe, Otsego, Oswego, St. Lawrence, Rensselaer and Westchester counties—a very considerable number—would form each a district, and you would, of course, divide Kings and New York into districts; and when the people shall, as I trust they soon may, become convinced that a larger number of Assemblymen than one hundred and thirty-five, and when we have a sufficiently capacious hall, the people may at any time vote to increase the number of Assemblymen from one hundred and thirty-five to two hundred and twenty-five; which I believe would be a much fairer representation of the people, and would give to the State a much more satisfactory and a less corruptible Legislature than the smaller number wherewith we have usually legislated. I ask that this amendment be printed; and ask that it be fairly considered by the Convention, before it is voted on—at least, before it is voted down.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Greeley, as follows:

Strike out sections two, three and four, and insert as follows:

"§ 2. The Legislature for 1868 shall divide the State into fifteen senate districts, whereof each shall contain, as nearly as may be, with due regard to the integrity of counties, an equal number of legal voters, and whereof each district shall be entitled to elect three Senators. Each voter may, at his discretion, repeat twice or thrice on his ballot for Senator the name of a candidate, provided, that all the names borne thereon, including repetitions, shall not exceed three; and each ballot shall be counted two or three votes, as the case may be, for any candidate whose name may be thus repeated.

"The Senators thus chosen shall hold their office for — years; and any vacancy meantime occurring shall be filled by election as heretofore. On the expiration of the terms of Senators, their places shall be filled as above.

"§ 3. There shall be a decennial enumeration or census of the people of this State in the year 1875, and in every tenth year thereafter; and the Legislature of the year following shall re-apportion the State for the choice of Senators and of Assemblymen, according to the provisions of this article. No county shall be divided in the formation of a senate district, but such as contain more legal voters than are required to constitute a senate district.

"§ 4. The Legislature for eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, shall, in like manner, divide the State into forty-five assembly districts, whereof each shall be entitled to choose three members of Assembly; but any succeeding Legislature may, provided the people of this State shall, by a direct vote consent thereto, increase the number to five members from each assembly district, . . . "The provision of section two, with regard to a repetition of names of candidates on the same ballot, shall apply likewise to ballots for and the choice of members of Assembly, except where a single member only is to be chosen to fill a vacancy."

Mr. HALE—I am very much gratified by the presentation of the proposition of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], in which is embodied a principle which I think will commend itself to all those who have given the subject consideration. I would suggest to him, however, whether it would not be well to waive so much of his amendment as applies to the other sections than the second, in order that we may consider separately the propriety of the division suggested by him into senatorial and assembly districts. I suppose, properly, one section should be considered at a time.

Mr. GREELEY—The Convention will of course consider one section at a time; but, in order that the proposition may be fairly before the Convention and be considered as a whole, I think it better to have it printed and laid on our tables.

Mr. WEED—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the President pro tem. [Mr. ALVORD] resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ARCHER from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress therein but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on the motion to grant leave and was declared carried.

Mr. VEEDER—This is a very important proposition, and I think we ought to have time to consider it. I therefore move that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] be laid on the table until printed.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Veeder and was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair wishes to say to gentlemen, in order to facilitate the business of the Convention, and for the purpose of avoiding any other course being pursued, that under the rule there is no necessity for dissolving the Committee of the Whole, because at two o'clock the presiding officer will take the Chair, and that puts the action of the committee in abeyance as any other matter during recess, and at the expiration of the recess the committee proceeds regularly. Under the present direction the Chair will be under the necessity of asking unanimous consent or else going over the entire order of business from beginning to end, in order to arrive at the special order of business.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN the Convention took a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at half-past seven o'clock, the President pro tem, Mr. ALVORD, in the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. presented a communication from the Auditor of the Canal Department, in answer to a resolution of the Convention, adopted July 12, in reference to the contracts, repairs, improvements, etc., on canals.

Which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., Mr. ARCHER, of Wayne, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN—The Convention is now in Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] to strike out the county of Westchester from the second district. The amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] not being germane to the proposition of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] is not at this time in order.

Mr. BALLARD—I move to amend by striking out the section as it now stands and inserting as follows:

Amend section two as follows:

The State shall be divided into thirty-two senatorial Districts, each of which shall choose one Senator.

The first district shall consist of the counties of Suffolk, Queens and Richmond.

The second district shall consist of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, seventh, eleventh, thirteenth, fifteenth, nineteenth and twentieth wards of the city of Brooklyn in the county of Kings.

The third district shall consist of the sixth, eighth, ninth, tenth, twelfth, fourteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth wards of the city of Brooklyn, and the towns of Flatbush, Flatlands, Gravesend, New Lots and New Utrecht, of the county of Kings.

The fourth district shall consist of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, thirteenth and fourteenth wards of the city and county of New York.

The fifth district shall consist of the eighth, ninth, fifteenth and sixteenth wards of the city and county of New York.

The sixth district shall consist of the tenth, eleventh and seventeenth wards of the city and county of New York.

The seventh district shall consist of the eighteenth, twentieth and twenty-first wards of the city and county of New York.

The eighth district shall consist of the twelfth, nineteenth and twenty-second wards of the city and county of New York.

The ninth district shall consist of the counties of Westchester, Putnam and Rockland.

The tenth district shall consist of the counties of Orange and Sullivan.

The eleventh district shall consist of the counties of Dutchess and Columbia.

The twelfth district shall consist of the counties of Rensselaer and Washington.

The thirteenth district shall consist of the county of Albany.

The fourteenth district shall consist of the counties of Greene and Ulster.

The fifteenth district shall consist of the counties of Saratoga, Montgomery, Fulton, Hamilton and Schoenectady.

The sixteenth district shall consist of the counties of Warren, Essex and Clinton.

The seventeenth district shall consist of the counties of St. Lawrence and Franklin.

The eighteenth district shall consist of the counties of Jefferson and Lewis.

The nineteenth district shall consist of the county of Oneida.

The twentieth district shall consist of the counties of Herkimer and Otsego.

The twenty-first district shall consist of the counties of Oswego and Madison.

The twenty-second district shall consist of the counties of Onondaga and Cortland.

The twenty-third district shall consist of the counties of Chenango, Delaware and Schoharie.

The twenty-fourth district shall consist of the counties of Broome, Tioga and Tompkins.

The twenty-fifth district shall consist of the counties of Cayuga and Wayne.

The twenty-sixth district shall consist of the counties of Ontario, Yates and Seneca.

The twenty-seventh district shall consist of the counties of Chemung, Schuyler and Steuben.

The twenty-eighth district shall consist of the county of Monroe.

The twenty-ninth district shall consist of the counties of Niagara, Orleans and Genesee.

The thirtieth district shall consist of the counties of Wyoming, Livingston and Allegany.

The thirty-first district shall consist of the county of Erie.

The thirty-second district shall consist of the counties of Chautauqua and Cattaraugus.

Mr. BALLARD — My main purpose in introducing that amendment was to retain the present senatorial divisions of this State. I am not so tenacious of the particular counties embraced in that amendment as they now stand. I would state that the districts as mentioned in that amendment are as they now exist. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the creation of these eight senatorial districts will tend to remove the power further from the people. By the advance of our population, each of these eight districts is equal to a State of itself, and the tendency of it would be to place the control of the nominating conventions in each of these districts in the hands of a few men. It is taking a step backward instead of keeping pace with the progress of the age. Senators should be intimately acquainted with the wants of their constituents; and their constituents should know each Senator intimately; they should feel continually their responsibility to their immediate constituency. This would not prevail to the extent that it now does in those large districts. Senators might be in office in a remote county and know nothing of the immediate wants of their constituency in another part of the district. That would be the tendency of it. We had better keep, as it seems to me, in the plan that has been sanctioned by the experience of the past years. Again, it implies or rather suggests the want of confidence in the people, as though the constituents in each of these thirty-two senatorial districts as they now stand, were not capable of selecting the proper candidates for senatorial nominations, as they would be if they were grouped together in a territory almost as large, as I said before, as a State. I do not accede to that proposition. I believe that the intelligence of the people of the present day in this State in each of these thirty-two districts are equal to all emergencies of a senatorial nomination or a senatorial election. We had better abide by the experience we have had for the past years, in regard to the selection of candidates and the election of Senators. As to the term of office, whether it shall be for two or four years, I am not now prepared to express an opinion. Perhaps it would be better to enlarge the term of office in conjunction with the enlargement of their compensation. I do insist it would be imprudent to make so radical a change in our senatorial districts as is implied in this report. My belief is it would never be sanctioned by the people of this State; it is not in accordance with their expectations or their desires.

Mr. CONGER — I am opposed to the representation in the Senate as devised by the committee. I differ with them to to celo as to the basis of representation and the mode of distribution into districts. To show that my objection is just, I premise a few statistics drawn from the last census of the State. By that census, Mr. Chairman, the population of the State was nearly four millions, its area nearly forty-four thousand square miles, and its wealth fifteen hundred and fifty millions of dollars. The population of the city of New York was nearly one-fifth of the population of the State, its area less than one two-hundredth, and its wealth was near two-fifths of the whole amount of the assessed aggregate equalized valuation of the property of the State. No man supposes that at the present time the population of the city of New York varies materially from the gross amount of one million of souls, and the complaints that were made in regard to the last census, as lowering the population of the State as well as the city in 1865, below the amount fixed by the United States census of 1860, was sufficient to have enabled this committee to attempt some equation of its errors throughout the State, in whole or by parts, and not to confound either the rules or the false methods of the census with the conclusions to be arrived at by a fair interpretation of it. But, sir, if this be so, as I have premised, if the relative population and wealth of the city of New York to the State be at the least as I have stated, you cannot make the number of districts proposed by the committee, unless you sunder that city in twain. If you propose to leave that untouched, then you can have no more than four Senate districts in the State—at best five.

Gentlemen who are conversant with the figures of the census will readily observe this conclusion to be confirmed on inspection of these maps [pointing to maps suspended on the wall] which have been prepared through the kindness of the chairman of the committee. The map on the left shows the distribution as proposed by the committee for the present senate districts, the map on the right, the old distribution made in 1847 of the judicial districts of the State. The present Senate plan of the committee is based upon a recognition of what were then justly made and established as eight judicial districts of the State. But the committee have overlooked the general and relative differences of increment in population during the last twenty years. The population of the State by the census of 1845 was only two million six hundred and four thousand, while that of the city of New York was three hundred and seventy-one thousand, so that it was perfectly just and fair as far as the basis of population was concerned, to make the city of New York, a judicial district by itself, being one-eighth of the population of the whole State. Now, if the present adaptation by the committee of the old plan, is not to be gloated over as a partisan device; to take this distribution in the year 1867, based on and very slightly varied from the distribution made by the Legislature in 1847, is to say the least of it, a bald anachronism. You might as well take that plan of judicial division of the State, that political mummy wrapped up in the ceremonies of the census of 1845, and try to galvanize it into life for the next ten years by the political wand of a bare majority of this Convention, as to undertake to reconcile the people of the State of New York with a fresh distribution of its population and wealth based on that ancient and effete scheme. Sir, I have been at some pains to examine the exact relation which the population, native, alien and colored, bears in the whole State to the several districts, as proposed by the committee. My time will not allow me to go over all these figures; I will put the latter of these charts, as a part of my remarks, in the possession of the Convention, or place both immediately at the service of any gentleman who desires to ascertain that the figures which I have given are arithmetically correct. It will be sufficient for me, sir, to give you some of the principal details to show the utter injustice, the gross injustice, of the plan of this committee. You take three million eight hundred and thirty-two thousand as the population of the State and divide it by eight, and you have four hundred and seventy-nine thousand of people to be represented by four Senators, or nearly one hundred and twenty thousand people to one Senator. Thus, with reference to the population of the city of New York, the least that could be done in accordance with the present census, unjust and unfair as it was, is to give the city of New York six Senators, and when you come to the second district the least you can do for that is to give it five Senators. So that to do justice in the scheme as presented by the committee, you must not only enlarge the entire count of the Senate by two more, making it thirty-five, but you must give the first and second districts eleven senators to represent them; and this without any correction of the inaccuracies of the census itself. But if gentlemen want to be satisfied that the injustice of this thing will be resented by the tax payers of the State let them look, I pray them, at how the tax-rate stands as compared with rates of representation. You take the sixth and seventh districts of this State as in the plan of this committee, and the sum total of this property is two hundred and twenty-five millions, a trifle more than that of the assessed valuation of the property of the second district. And so it is, sir, with the fourth and fifth. Yet according to this plan, the fourth up to the seventh districts are to have sixteen Senators while the county of Kings with its associates under the plan, paying one-half of the amount of taxes which these four senate districts do is to have but four Senators. You give these western districts a representation in the Senate of sixteen and you give the easternmost district a representation of four. That is to say you make the tax payers in the second district pay double the amount of taxes which those in all these other districts do, while the farmer get only one-half of the representation. The first and second districts are assessed for eight hundred and sixteen millions—more than half of all the property returned by the census of the State. Yet these two districts will have, according to the plan of the committee, nine representatives in the Senate, a trifle over one-fourth of the whole, while they pay more than half of the entire taxes that support the government of the State. Again, if you look at the map, you will find that the first district is composed of one county, the second of five, the third of eight, the fourth of eleven, the fifth of seven, the sixth of twelve, the seventh and eighth of eight each, so that there is no possibility of supporting the scheme as presented by the committee, either on any equal rate for the grouping of counties, or a just division of the payment of the taxes. Now, sir, how is it that the committee propose to justify their scheme before your body? Why, they tell you that they have given you the basis of citizen population, and they pretend to say that this ought to be justified as in accordance with the old practice of this State. I cannot but regard it, sir, as a fresh experiment, an experimentum in corpore vili, a party trick upon a despised part of our population, an attempt to trample out the right to representation of the alien born inhabitants of the State. And yet we have on this floor gentlemen who are accredited for their eloquence, for their judicial position and for the colossal fortunes which they have made, which indicate the earnestness and the integrity with which they have pursued their several callings among the citizens of the State, we have them here on this floor—the sons of a population so despised that the gentlemen of this committee will not allow them to have any basis in the representative inhabitation of the State. At the same time the gentlemen say they do not hide the fact that they have intended to and do include the colored population of the State.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CONGER—I have not the time; but I anticipate what the gentleman would say, for he made an explanation before the committee, when he attempted to hide this great injustice to the inhabitants of the State on the plea that it was in the Constitution of 1846, and the Constitution of 1821. I do not so read the design of either of these Constitutions. The Constitution reserves from the basis aliens, paupers and persons of color not taxed. That is the sheer distinction. It is not a matter of mere alienage of birth, but it is freedom from taxation which practically operates for their exception from the basis. If the gentlemen want any further justification of the ideas I seek to establish, let them turn to the Constitution of the United States. What is the basis of representation there? Under the old Constitution it was a basis of representation according to numbers, with the exception of three-fifths of a certain class of persons and Indians not taxed. But now that the three-fifths representation of slaves in the Constitution is abolished, the Committee come into this body and ask for a basis of representation on nine-tenths of the white population of this State. Turn to the fourteenth article of the proposed amendment to the Constitution and what have you there? You have there a basis of representation on numbers excluding Indians not taxed, and no man can pretend to say that it ever was in the intention of the founders of the Constitution of 1821 to exclude any portion of the population from the basis of representation, except on this justification, that they were not to be taxed. Now, the last census might have disclosed to the committee, had they taken the pains to examine it, that of the colored population (whose numbers I gave the other night as less than 45,000), four-fifths were put down as not taxed; and yet, under the new rule by which they are to be admitted on the basis of a common citizenship, they are brought in here to be included in the main class of inhabitants that form the basis of representation, while those who are of foreign birth are excluded. Now, the great injustice, and the great enormity of the application of this new and invidious rule is, that in taking the census there was no effort made to designate among the alien population of the State those who were taxed on property acquired and those who were not taxed because of no property accumulated. The gentlemen here maintain the position that they may exclude all who are accounted as aliens under that census. Four hundred thousand souls out of the population of the State of New York, when they know that of late many thousands have fulfilled their first declaration of intention to become citizens, and when they know that by the laws of the State a man who once declares his intentions to become a citizen is not only made subject to military duty but is then and for the first time permitted to hold real estate and is thus liable to be taxed for his property. Do the gentlemen of the committee mean to tell this body that four hundred thousand souls of foreign birth in the State of New York are not now practically taxed and ought not to be taxed? I would not so libel the authors of the Constitution of 1821 as to say that they meant to exclude the aliens on the ground of mere alienage, and not on the ground that they had not acquired any property to tax. Moreover I am free to say that I am opposed to any shifting series of representation. You have one set of districts this year, in ten years you have another set of districts. You take small counties and link them on to larger counties, they are mere make weights in the representation. Why should they not have a fixity, an abiding status with their fellow-counties? Why would it not be much better, if you will have large districts in the State, to declare that there shall be a certain number and that that number shall be fixed, and the boundaries fixed, and that the representation from time to time shall be in accordance with the population? It may be, sir, that in the course of this debate some gentleman may see fit to propose, and if he does he will easily at this day justify his argument, making property as a tax paying element in the constituency have some share in the basis of representation. I do not believe it is wise to have the Senate represent only population, by or on a new combination of the identical people who in more numerous groupings on a smaller scale constitute the lower house who represent nothing but the same people. It is a departure from the wisdom of our forefathers. But I have not time to elaborate that idea. Now as I have only two minutes, I perceive by this clock, I have to say that you are bound by the sense of duty you owe to yourselves to do justice at least to the democratic districts of the State. It never was known in the history of that party when in power that they ever attempted to lay the basis of institutions to last for years, on any principle other than that which was founded on equal justice to all. And to attempt now to take this advantage of the city of New York—a city that is destined in a few years to be the commercial metropolis of the world when the Pacific railroad is built, to be the center of the carrying trade of the world, and which will contain within ten years (the limit you have fixed by this proposition) a population of one million and a half of souls—I say it is a shame and a disgrace to attempt to cheat them of their fair representation in the higher council chamber of the State; and I do not think the constituency of New York will give credit to the proposition of my associate from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], who proposes forty-five Senators in all, and under this very beautiful and delicate clause—"with due regard to the integrity of the counties"—cuts off the city of New York with three Senators, leaving that population which represents one-fifth of the tax-paying contributions to the exchequer of the State to have but one-fifteenth part in the representation of the Senate of the State.

Mr. SHERMAN—It is hard, Mr. Chairman, to suit gentlemen, who are hard to be suited. This must be apparent to any one who has given attention to the proceedings of this body for the last six weeks. If every man could have his favorite idea worked into the body of the Constitution we are framing, we should have no difficulty in arriving at a harmonious conclusion. But what sort of a work would we have to submit to the people? Do you think sir, that the medley of Constitution, detail law hobby horse, stump speech and nonsense thus evoked would be acceptable? Probably not. And yet to such an end are we likely to drift unless we are prepared to yield more of pride of opinion, more of partisan feeling and more of individual prejudice than we have yet done. Committees have been appointed to whom have been referred subjects of constitutional adjustment. After weeks of patient, even anxious investigation, they have submitted their deliberated judgment to the Convention; but for that judgment it has been quite too common to substitute the crude and hasty ideas of individuals. Let us see that we do not fall into this error in the consideration of the subject before us. I know it is not in human nature for all men to yield to one man, nor for bodies of men to yield to other bodies, especially those numerically weaker. Nor is it human nature to submit even to what is fair when it runs counter to interest. Therefore, I am not surprised that the report of the Committee on Organization of the Legislature fails to be received with that universal acclaim to which its merits entitle it. Complaint is made particularly of the apportionment of Senate districts reported by the committee, and it is to this branch of the subject I will confine my remarks. The essence of these complaints is that the committee have failed to make a sufficient number of democratic districts. The committee must plead in justification that they did not, in the adjustment of this question, regard its province to consider partisan bearings. Having reached the conclusion that the public good would be promoted by the division of the State into eight large districts for the choice of Senators, they next sought how these should be best framed. They thought that the ruling considerations should be geographical connections, convenient lines of travel, and the general currents of business, and that these should be attained with as little disturbance as possible of existing relations. Tested by these requisites, the plan of the committee will bear close criticism. The general idea has been to make the senate districts conform as nearly as possible to the existing judicial districts. If it had been practical, they would have recommended the adoption of these districts without change. But this was impossible on account of the greater proportionate increase of population in the south-eastern portions of the State, and the consequent gain of Senators to that section. This rendered necessary, to a certain extent, a dislocation of the present second and third districts. The excess of representative population in New York was very fairly provided for by giving to that district an additional Senator. The remaining island counties not having sufficient population to entitle them to four Senators, it became necessary to add another county, and that was, inevitably, Westchester, as that was the only county remaining, of contiguous territory. It is true this gave the district some excess of population, but this excess was not as much as would have been the deficiency had Westchester been omitted. If there was an evil at all in the case, the committee have chosen the least. In regard to the proposed third district, it is safe to say that it is hardly possible to form anywhere in the State a district more convenient in respect to geographical lines and the facility of inter-communication. It is composed wholly of adjacent counties on the Hudson river. The inhabitants are mainly of the same origin, and are closely connected by ties of blood, business and local interest. Two parallel lines of railroad and the chief navigable river of the State traverse it from end to end, and from the most remote part of the district to a common center is but a few hours' journey at the most. Yet it is of this district that chief complaint is made. The fourth district, as proposed by the committee is the present fourth judicial district with the subtraction of Montgomery and the addition of Albany. This arrangement is also complained of. If gentlemen will carefully go over this whole subject by the lights of geography and arithmetic, they will see that it could not well have been different. The increase of population in the first and second districts necessarily forced the third into more northerly connections, and either Albany or Rensselaer must dissolve its relations with the third district, in order to avoid a heavy excess of population in that district or a corresponding deficiency in the fourth. The committee deeming that the district would be better shaped by embracing Albany than by passing by it to include Rensselaer, decided to attach the former county to this district. No material political relations were believed to be affected by this arrangement. It is true that at the last general election, the counties embraced in the third district gave a republican majority, but this was an exceptional result—an accident, which I am sorry to believe, will not be often repeated. The proposed fifth district is the present fifth judicial district, with the addition of Montgomery; an arrangement so fair and correct that no one, I believe has yet ventured to find fault with it. The assignment of the counties of Schenectady and Sullivan to the sixth district was necessary not only to secure the compactness of the third, but to give to the sixth its requisite quota of population. The communications of Sullivan with the other counties of the sixth district are more convenient than with the third, and the completion of the Albany and Susquehanna railroad, which will be secured long before this arrangement can go into effect, will make the connections of that county with the body of the district as convenient as could be desired. The New York and Erie railroad traverses the district the whole length, from east to west, and lateral lines of railroad extend from this into every county of the district except Madison, where similar connections are now in progress. The proposed seventh and eighth districts are identical with the present judicial districts of
